PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION.

Once more my heartiest for the kind patronage they which has seen the light of

In preparing this edition I have not merely contented myself with adding the new rulings but have made a searching scrutiny into the cases in the light of the amendments, and I can humbly assure the lawyers and Judges that if they carefully study this work they will not fall into the error, (which they frequently do, as is evident from numerous reported cases) of citing and following the old rulings which have been superseded by the Amendments of 1923 and later years

As time rolls on the effects of these amendments are being perceived and commented on by High Court Judges. But unfortunately those amendments have not been able to do away with the conflicts of rulings which still exist under almost every

of the law is judicial opinion so much divided. Some of those conflicts have been set at rest by the 1923 amendments, but still there is enough work left for the Legislature. To attempt to reconcile these conflicts is a hopeless task for the commentator, and I have merely pointed out the differences.

To make the book accessible to every lawyer, the price has been much reduced but I have not on that account reduced the volume of the book. On the other hand, 300 new rulings have been added. To reduce the bulk of the book and to make it handy, it has been printed on thinner paper and in slightly smaller types.

Lastly, the case law has been brought down to May 1926. Parallel references have been given, as far as possible, to the Criminal Law Journal and the All India Reporter.

PREFACE TO THE FOURTH EDITION.

In bringing out the fourth edition of this book, the author begs to convey his heartfelt thanks to the legal profession for their kind appreciation of this humble work, which is passing through three successive editions within the space of bare two years.

In this edition the Notes have been numbered throughout and the references in the Index and Table of Cases are given to the numbers of Notes and not to the numbers of pages

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

Since the publication of the first edition of this work in 1920 the Criminal Procedure Code has undergone a salutary change by the passing of not less than seven amending Acts. The earliest of these is the Election Offences and Inquiries Act XXXIX of 1920 which however does nothing more than add two words to sec 196 of this Code and certain sections of the I P Code (171 E to 171 I) to Schedule II. The next is the Press Law of 1922 which adds a few sections. The amendments of 1923 do not require passing reference they are Act XX of 1923 which introduces the Indian Penal Code into Schedule II. The Criminal Law Amendment Act XXXV of 1923 which amends the definition of Pleader in section 4 and the Cr P C Second Amendment Act XXXVII of 1923 which amends secs 364 388 and 562.

But the most far reaching amendments have been wrought by the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923 (popularly known as the Racial Distinctions Act) and the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The first Act is the result of a compromise between the members of a Committee appointed in 1921 to amend certain provisions of this Code which differentiated between European and Indian British subjects in criminal trials and proceedings. The disabilities of second and third class Magistrates to try Europeans and British subjects to claim a jury before a District Magistrate their exemption from security proceedings the lower scale of punishment, the more extensive rights of appeal—all these privileges have now been taken away though certain inequalities are still retained under the present Code. The amendments have been duly noticed in this book not only by reference to the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Bill, but also to the Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee.

The Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 has got a long history behind it. The kernel of the Act was a Bill prepared in 1914, in which three-fourths of the present amendments were contained. This Bill was referred to a small Committee (known as the Lowndes Committee) in 1916, which submitted its Report at the end of the same year, but owing to the interposition of the war, further consideration on the Bill was postponed. Meanwhile, sugges-and was referred to a Joint Committee which submitted its Report in 1922. This Bill, with various alterations, ultimately passed into law.

From this it is evident that neither the Bill of 1921 nor the Report of the Joint Committee of 1922 gives the whole history of the amendments, in order to understand the Objects and Reasons, one has also to consult the earlier Bill of 1914 and the Report of 1916. The editor has therefore spared no pains to trace each amendment to the original Bill and Report, in order to elucidate the lawyer as to the reasons of the particular amendment.

speeches have been cited where necessary. All the rulings modified or overruled by the amendments have been duly noticed. The amendments have been shown in italics, and where a section or subsection has been materially amended, it has been printed in parallel columns, the left hand column representing the old Act, and the right hand column giving the new.

The citations have been brought down to the present year, and, as in the previous edition, the notes have been supplemented by extracts from Police Codes and Manuals, and by Rules, Notifications, and Circulars.

THE CODE OF
CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, 1898
ACT NO. V OF 1898.

[As amended up to date]

RECEIVED THE G G'S ASSENT ON THE 2ND MARCH, 1898.

An Act to consolidate and amend the Law relating to Criminal Procedure

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to criminal procedure It is hereby enacted as follows —

1 Recent Amendments and their history —The Criminal Procedure Code 1898 has undergone drastic amendments at the hands of the Legislature in 1923 by two Acts viz the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923 (popularly known as the Racial Distinctions Act) and the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 Of these the latter Act is the more important and is the outcome of a general revision of the whole Code whereas the former Act is limited to the amendment of certain sections relating to the trial of European British Subjects These Amendment Acts have come into force from 1st September 1923

The genesis of Act XVIII of 1923 dates as far back as 1914 In that year a Bill (no 3 of 1914) was introduced in the Imperial Legislative Council on the 21st March and was thereafter referred to the Local Governments and Administrations Their opinions were received and partially examined but further progress with the Bill was suspended until the conclusion of the war Meanwhile the Government by a resolution dated the 18th September 1916 referred this Bill and the opinions received to a small Committee (known as the Lowndes Committee) This Committee sat for 21 days and its work was finished on the 23rd December 1916 The Bill as revised by this Committee was again introduced in the Imperial Legislative Council on the 26th September 1917 but further consideration of the Bill was postponed until after the war. Meanwhile some further suggestions for the amendment of the Code were considered by the Government and after the termination of the war a new Bill was prepared in 1921 which was substantially the Bill as revised by the above Committee supplemented by the amendments regarded as advisable as a result of the consideration above referred to.

This Bill (no 3 of 1921) was introduced in the Council of State on the 21st February 1921 by Sir William Vincent and in September 1921 it was referred to a Joint Committee composed of representative members of the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State. This Committee sat for 14 days and submitted its report after a year (in September 1922) and the Bill as revised by this Committee with certain alterations made during the discussions in the Council of State in September 1922 and in the Legislative Assembly in January and February 1923 ultimately passed into law and has been enacted as Act XVIII of 1923.

(For Bill 3 of 1914 see Gazette of India Part V 28th March 1914 for the Report of the Select Committee of 1916 see Gazette of India Part V September 1917 reprinted in the Gazette of India February 26 1921 at p 39 for Bill 3 of 1921 see Gazette of India Part V February 26 1921 for the Report of the Joint Committee see Gazette of India Part V September 9 1922)

The changes made from time to time by other minor Amendment Acts up to June 1926 have been noticed in this book in their proper places.

2 Pending cases are not affected by changes in the law.—The general rule as to new laws of procedure is that they take effect from their coming into operation so that the procedure from that date would be governed by such laws. It is also a general rule that such laws are not to affect vested rights. Therefore where a person was being tried under an old Act and before the conclusion of the trial the new Act came into force the trial ought to be continued in accordance with the procedure laid down in the earlier Act which was in force at the commencement of the trial.—Srinivasachari v Queen 6 Mad 336 Mudund v Ladu 3 Bom L R 584

2A Construction.—A penal statute must be construed strictly that is nothing is to be regarded as within the meaning of the statute which is not within the letter—which is not clearly and intelligibly described in the very words of the statute itself.—Emp v Kola 8 Cal 214 Lakshmi Chaud v Emp 1901 P R 24 Bhimbur v Q E 5 C W N 108 Penal provisions have to be strictly construed nor can the liability to punishment for the neglect of a statutory obligation be extended by inferential reasoning.—Kazi v Q E 28 Cal 304 In interpreting statutes of a penal character, it is important to see that the powers conferred upon the Magistrates are duly exercised with reference to the rendering unlawful acts which would otherwise be lawful—Q E v Shrodon, 10 All 115 A penal statute must be construed strictly, and Magistrates ought to be very careful before they proceed to inflict imprisonment in a summary manner. They must avoid all appearance of oppression—In re Ganesh Narayan, 13 Bom 600 Words importing a doubtful or ambiguous meaning must be construed strictly, and in favour of the subject that is to say, unless the meaning of the Legislature is perfectly clear no penalties are to be imposed upon the subjects of the Crown nor are their liberties to be restricted—Q E v Imam, 10 All 150 (F B) See also 17 Bom 573 2 A L J 26 1 Bom 308

The same rules of interpretation apply to notifications issued under penal statutes—1901 P R 24

The marginal notes to a section do not form part of an enactment, and cannot be referred to for the purpose of construing the section. They should not be allowed to vary the clear grammatical meaning of the rule embodied in the section—Punardeo v Ram Sarup 25 Cal 838, Bhoyendra v Emp. 7 C W N 883 2 Bom L R 918, 23 Cal 55, 1 M L J 37 6 C P L R 31 In construing a section, it is not competent to refer to the proceedings in the Legislative Council as legitimate aids to the construction of a law—Q E. v Srichurn 22 Cal 1017 F B , Q E v Tslak 21 Bom 112 nor is it proper to refer to the previous history of the law—Sarat v Emp. 7 C W N 301

It is not regular [for a Magistrate to allow his decision to be guided by anything that appears in some proposed Bill that has not become law—3 All 283

PART I

PRELIMINARY

CHAPTER I

1. (1) This Act may be called the Code of Criminal Procedure Short title Com 1898 and it shall come into force on the mencement first day of July, 1898

(2) It extends to the whole of British India but in the Extent absence of any specific provision to the contrary nothing herein contained shall affect any special or local law now in force or any special jurisdiction or power conferred or any special form of procedure prescribed by any other law for the time being in force or shall apply to—

(a) the Commissioners of Police in the towns of Calcutta Madras and Bombay or the Police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay

(b) heads of villages in the Presidency of Fort St George or

(c) village Police Officers in the Presidency of Bombay

Provided that the Local Government may if it think fit
* * * by notification in the official Gazette extend any of the provisions of this Code with any necessary modifications to such excepted persons

The words with the sanction of the Governor General in Council which occurred in the proviso have been omitted by the Devolution Act
XXVIII of 1920

XII—The Amendments made by Acts VII and XVIII of 1923 have come into force from 1st September 1923

3 Object of the Code —The object of the Criminal Procedure Code is to provide a machinery for the punishment of offences against the substantive law—In re Ganesh A. Saha 13 Bom 590 Q. J. v. Abdul Raha nan

16 Bom. 580; Dulir v. Nijabat, 12 Cal 536. Q E v. Rasna chandra, Ratanlal 776 (778) Q E v. Mona Puna 16 Bom 661 (669), Q E v. Abdul Ratanlal 577 (579)

4 Extent—British India—The term "British India" shall mean all territories and places within Her Majesty's dominions which are for the time being governed by Her (His) Majesty through the Governor General of India or through any Governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor General of India (Sec 3 General Clauses Act, X of 1897)

The following are within British India—Aden, Laccadive Islands, (Q E v. Cheria Koya, 13 Mad 353) Andaman and Nicobar Islands (Triccam v B B & C. I Ry Co, 9 Bom 244), Ajmer and Merwara (9 Bom 244), Island of Perim (Q E v. Mangal Tekchand, 10 Bom 258)

Native States:—The Native States and Tributary Mahals are not within British India, therefore this Code does not apply to Rajkot (Q E v. Abdul Latif, 10 Bom 186), Civil Station of Wadhwan (Emp v. Chiman Lal, 37 Bom 152, but see 9 Bom 244); Moyurbhanj (Emp v. Keshub, 8 Cal 935), Keonjhar (Bichitranand v. Bhugbut 16 Cal 667), the lands occupied by the Hyderabad State Railway (Muhammad Yusuf-uddin v. Q E, 25 Cal 20 P C), Railway Station in a Native State (Emp v. Raghunathrao, 5 Bom L R 873)

But although the Code as such does not apply to the Native States, many of those States have in fact adopted it, e.g. the Civil and Military Station of Bangalore (In re Hayes, 12 Mad 39), Mysore, Kashmir, the Native States in the Rajputana Agency, etc

Transfer of territory from British India to Native State—The British Court has jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of an offence committed in a territory which formed part of British India at the date of the offence and at the date of commitment to the Sessions, but was transferred to a Native State before the case came on for trial—King Emp v. Ravi Naresh, 34 All 118 Similarly, the British Appellate Court has jurisdiction to hear an appeal if the transfer took place after a conviction but before the appeal therefrom was heard—Mahabir v. King Emp, 33 All 578

Other places where the Code does not apply:—The Code does not apply to the North Cachar Hills (Soonderjee v. Maylow, 26 Cal 374) or to the Chittagong Hill Tracts (Q E v. Sonai Mugh, 27 Cal 654) It also does not apply to the Garo Hills, the Khasia and Jaintia Hills, the Naga Hills, the North Cachar Subdivision of the Cachar District, the Mihar Hill Tracts in the Nowgong District, the Dibrugarh Frontier Tracts in the Lakhimpur District, and the Lushai Hills, see Assam Gazette, 1898, Part II, page 788.

Places to which the Code has been extended.—The Code has been extended to the following places:—(1) The District of Angul (with from 1st August 1898) see Calcutta Gazette 1898 Part 1 p 779 (2) Upper Burma (excluding the Shan States) see Burma Laws Act (XIII of 1898) (3) the Shan States (by the Shan States Laws and Criminal Justice Order 1895 as amended by Notification no 29 dated 19 12 1898 Burma Code) (4) the Scheduled Districts in Ganjam and Vizagapatam see Fort St George Gazette 1898 Part 1 page 306 see also Public Prosecutor v Sadananda 23 M L J 670 (5) Sonthal Parganas see Calcutta Gazette 1898 Part 1 page 665 (6) Districts of Hazaribagh Lohardaga Manbhum Palamau Pargana Dhalbhum and the Kothen in the Singhbhum District see Calcutta Gazette 1898 Part 1 page 714 and Gazette of India 1899 Part 1 page 779 (7) Pargana of Manipur see Gazette of India 1899 Part 1 page 419 (8) British Baluchistan see Gazette of India 1898 Part 1 page 221 (9) Chittagong Hill Tracts see section 4 of the Chittagong Hill Tracts Regulation I of 1900 but see Q E v Sonai Mugh 27 Cal 654

The Code has also been extended to the British Protectorates on the East Coast of Africa (Order of Council 1897) Somaliland (Order 1899) the Persian Coast and Islands (Order 1897) and Zanzibar (Order 1884 under which Zanzibar is to be treated as a District in the Bombay Presidency)

As regards Muscat it has been held that the Bombay High Court is invested with original criminal jurisdiction over it but not appellate or revisional jurisdiction—In re Rattansee 24 Bom 471

High Seas —The trial of a British seaman for an offence committed on the high seas on a British ship must be conducted under the Code of Criminal Procedure though the offence charged was an offence under the English Law—Q E v Gunning 21 Cal 782 Q E v Barton 16 Cal 233 Q v Thompson 1 B L R O Cr 1 Reg v Lloistone 7 B H C R 89

5 Special law —The expression special law in this section has reference to statutory enactments and not to local family law (e g Maru makkattayan law)—Thilhu Amma v, Sankunni 37 M L J 361 20 Cr L J 733 The Coroner's Act is an instance of special law

6 Local law —This Code will not affect any local law as for instance Act XXXVII of 1885 which is still in force in Sonthal Perganas. So an order under that Act sentencing an accused to imprisonment is not open to revision under this Code—Dular v Niyabat 12 Cal 536 So also the Criminal Procedure Code will not apply to proceedings held under the Sind Frontier Regulations (V of 1872 and III of 1892)—Emp v Ghulam Kadir 5 S L R 105=12 Cr L J 568

7 Special jurisdiction —The following are instances of special jurisdiction —The jurisdiction conferred by Sec 3 of Madras Act XXIV of

1839 (Vizagapatam Agency Act) regarding the administration of criminal justice in the Vizagapatam Agency Tract—Q E v Budara Jani 14 Mad 121 the jurisdiction conferred by secs 20 23 Cattle Trespass Act—Shama v Lachu 23 Cal 300 Budhan v Issur 34 Cal 926 the jurisdiction conferred by Bombay Village Police Act VIII of 1867—Q E v Ragho Mahadu 19 Bom 612

8 Special powers —Instances —Powers conferred on second class Magistrates by Secs 3 (5) and 56 of the Bombay Abkari Act V of 1878—Q E v Gustadji 10 Bom 181 powers possessed by the High Courts to punish for contempts—Surendra Nath Banerjee v Chief Justice 10 Cal 109 (P C) powers possessed by the High Courts under Sec 29 of the Letters Patent to transfer criminal cases before itself—Sitapathi v Queen 6 Mad 32 power of superintendence under Sec 15 of the Charter Act—Lakhraj v Deb Pershad 12 C W N 678

9 Police of Calcutta Bombay —This Code does not apply to the Police in the city of Calcutta unless expressly made applicable to them—Emp v Madho Dhobi 31 Cal 557 Section 155 however applies to the Police of Calcutta and Bombay—Q E v Nilmadhub 15 Cal 595 Q v Issram Babaji 21 Bom 495 Also Secs 42 44 54 55 56 68 83 84 85 86 127 164 202 and Col 3 of Schedule II have been specially extended to the Police in the town of Calcutta Sections 386 and 387 have been by notification under the proviso extended to the Commissioner of Police for the town of Calcutta (see Calcutta Gazette 23rd March 1904) Secs 42 44 68 84 85 86 127 164 202 and Col 3 of Sch II apply to the Police of Bombay But Secs 54 55 56 and 83 are no longer applicable to the Police of Bombay under Sec 2 (1) of the City of Bombay Police Act IV of 1902

This Code applies to the Police but not to the Commissioner of Police Madras See Madras Act III of 1888

10 Madras Village Headmen —No part of this Code applies to Village Headmen who are empowered by Madras Regs XI of 1816 and IV of 1821 to try petty cases—In re Vinramutha Pillai 2 Weir 1 But sec 528 now applies to Madras Village Headmen Sections 480 and 482 do not apply to Village Munsiffs—Q E v Venkatasami 15 Mad 131

This section should not be read to mean that village Magistrates cannot complain or be tried under this Code but it only means that in his official capacity as a village Magistrate that is in the proceedings he takes as a village Magistrate he is not governed by the Cr P Code—Pub Pros v Mari Mudali 19 L W 30 25 Cr L J 221 A I R (1924) Mad 730

2. [Repealed by the Repealing and Amending Act X of 1914]

3. (1) In every enactment passed before this Code comes into force, in which reference is made to, or to any chapter or section of, the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act XXV of 1861, or Act X of 1872, or Act X of 1882, or to any other enactment hereby repealed, such reference shall, so far as may be practicable, be taken to be made to this Code, or to its corresponding chapter or section

(2) In every enactment passed before this Code comes into force, the expressions "Officer exercising Acts. (or 'having') the powers (or 'the full powers') of a Magistrate," "Subordinate Magistrate, first class," and "Subordinate Magistrate, second class," shall respectively be deemed to mean "Magistrate of the first class," "Magistrate of the second class" and "Magistrate of the third class"; the expression "Magistrate of a division of a district" shall be deemed to mean "Sub divisional Magistrate", the expression "Magistrate of the district" shall be deemed to mean "District Magistrate", the expression "Magistrate of Police" shall be deemed to mean "Presidency Magistrate", and the expression "Joint Sessions Judge" shall mean "Additional Sessions Judge"

4. (1) In this Code the following words and expressions have the following meanings unless a different intention appears from the subject or context :

Definitions.

(a) "Advocate-General" includes also a Government Advocate, or, where there is no Advocate General or Government Advocate, such officer as the Local Government may, from time to time, appoint in this behalf :

(b) "bailable offence" means an offence shown as bailable in the second schedule, or which is made bailable by any other law for the time being in force ; and "non bailable offence" means any other offence .

(c) "charge" includes any head of charge when the charge contains more heads than one.

(d) * * * * *

(e) "Clerk of the Crown" includes any officer specially appointed by the Chief Justice to discharge the functions given by this Code to the Clerk of the Crown :

(f) "cognizable offence" means an offence for, and "cognizable case" means a case in, which a police-officer, within or without the Presidency-towns, may, in accordance with the second schedule, or under any law for the time being in force, arrest without warrant :

12 Cognizable offence.—The words "a Police officer" in this clause do not mean "any and every Police officer." That is, an offence is regarded as a cognizable offence, if the offender can be arrested without warrant by certain Police-officers, though not by any and every Police officer. If the power of arrest without warrant is limited to any particular class of Police officers, that does not prevent the offence being regarded as a cognizable one—Q F v Deodhar 27 Cal 144. Thus, under the Gambling Act it is not every Police officer who can arrest without a warrant. It is only the District Superintendent of Police who can so arrest, but still the offence under that Act will be treated as a cognizable offence—Ibid.

But the power of arrest referred to in this clause must be an unqualified power, and not a conditional power like the one conferred upon the Police by sec 24, Opium Act I of 1878 which authorises a Police officer to arrest without warrant if the accused does not furnish the security required by that section. An offence under sec 9 Opium Act is not therefore a cognizable offence—Bahabai v Tarak Nath, 24 Cal 691.

(g) "Commissioner of Police" includes a Deputy Commissioner of Police :

(h) "complaint" means the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate, with a view to his taking action under this Code, that some person, whether known or unknown, has committed an offence, but it does not include the report of a police-officer :

13 Complaint.—Who can make a complaint.—A complaint need not necessarily be made by the person injured but may be made by any person aware of the offence. The rule is that if a general law is any person has a right to complain whether he himself has suffered any particular injury or not—In re Ganesh Narayan 13 Bom 600 Imp v Keshav Lal 21 Bom 536 Bharat Chunder v Javed Ali 20 Cal 481 Dedar Bux v Shyamapada 41 Cal 1013=18 C. W. N 921 Farsand Ali v Hanuman 18 All 465

It is not necessary under this clause or under section 190(a) that the person lodging the complaint must have personal knowledge of the facts constituting the offence—Sukumar v Mofisuddin 25 C. W. N 357 Suresh Chandra v Emp 1 P. L. T 531 21 Cr. L. J 346 Imp v Shewah Ram, 7 S. L. R 77 15 Cr. L. J 369

Essentials of a complaint—The complaint must allege that an offence has been committed the use of a house as brothel is not an offence and a statement to a Magistrate that a certain person has so used his house is not therefore a complaint—Imp v Khairi 6 S. L. R 254 14 Cr. L. J 320 An application under sec 107 (25 Cr. L. J 89 1 O. W. N 359 5 Cr. L. J 1149) is not a complaint So also a petition to institute proceedings under sec 110 (Q. F. v Imam Mandal 27 Cal 662 Imam Mandal v Emp 6 C. W. N 163 Queen v Ahmad Khan 1900 A. W. N 206 Muhammad Khan v K. E., 1905 P. R 42) or under sec 145 (Chathu v Niranjana 20 Cal 729) is not a complaint because the allegations in support of proceedings under those sections do not amount to an offence As to what are and what are not offences see notes under Clause (o) infra

The complaint must be made to a Magistrate A Police officer is not a Magistrate therefore a petition or information sent to such officer is not a complaint—Isiri v Bakshi 6 All 96 Queen v Palanvarapa 7 Mad 563 Kailash v Emp 30 Cal 85 Surendra v Rai Mohan 30 Cal 690 (F. B.) In re Harilal 22 Bom 949 Emp v Mathura Singh 1904 A. W. N 266 So also an Agent of the Court of Wards is not a Magistrate—Jagobundhu v Emp 30 Cal 415 a Mamlatdar in his executive capacity is not a Magistrate—Queen v Shivram Ratanlal 554 But a Deputy Commissioner is an ex officio District Magistrate and a petition to him would amount to a complaint—Shanker v Manni 13 N. L. R 13 18 Cr. L. J 459

The complaint must be made to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under this Code A petition alleging that an offence has been committed but that the petitioner does not desire to prosecute the wrong doer is not a complaint—Bhawan Singh v Haliman 6 C. W. N 926 a mere statement to a Magistrate by way of information without any intention of asking him to take action is not a complaint—Harder Raja v. King Emp 36 All 222 Ahmed Husain v Emp 17 C. W. N 980 Bansi Lal v Emp 12 C. W. N 438 Rayan Kuti v Emp 26 Mad 640 so also a petition sent by a husband to a Magistrate not with a view to his taking action thereon but to recover the jewels alleged to have been stolen by his wife is not a complaint—In re Rukmani 16 Cr L J 466 (Mad) a petition making charges against a person and asking for an order of the Police to warn that person in the first instance is not a complaint—Purno v Hurish 15 C W N 1051=12 Cr L J 535 a letter written by the Assistant Collector to the District Magistrate in which the former did not ask that any action should be taken by the Magistrate nor intended that the Magistrate should proceed according to law against the person complained against but merely solicited for orders (i.e. asked for directions as to how he should proceed) did not amount to a complaint—Sheo ampat v Emp 40 All 641=19 Cr L J 963 a statement made to a Magistrate with the object of inducing him to take action not under this Code but under Sec. 6 of the Bombay Gambling Act IV of 1887 is not a complaint within the meaning of this section—Hotu v Crown 8 S L R 66 15 Cr L J 657

A complaint need not set out the details of the offence—32 Mad 3 but it must contain a statement of the facts relied on as constituting the offence in ordinary and concise language with as much certainty as the nature of the case will admit a complaint in which no facts are set out but only the words of the section of the Statute are literally copied is a colourable compliance with the requirements of the law—Pulin Behari Das v Lmp 16 C W N 1103 Sukumar v Mofisuddin 5 C W N 357

14 Instances of complaint.—The following have been held to be complaints

(1) The petition of a complainant who has withdrawn his case and again asks to be allowed to proceed with the same—Sarat Chandra v Aghore Nath 4 C W N ccxxi

(2) the presentation of a petition by the complainant that his complaint should be inquired into—Lalji Gope v Giridhari 5 C W N 106

(3) a petition impugning the correctness of a police report and praying for a trial of the accused—Jogendra Nath v Lmp 33 Cal 1=10 C W N 158 Lalji Singh v Parsip Singh 18 Cr L J 754 (Pat)

(4) a letter to the Magistrate conveying the information of an offence and asking the Magistrate to take action—Khetra Molau v Emp 17 C W N 448=14 Cr L J 76 Chholey v Emp 10 C W N 108 25 Cr L J 1147

(5) the submission of a record by an Assistant Magistrate trying a rent suit to the Collector who was also the District Magistrate for starting a case under sec. 193 I P C against the plaintiff in the rent suit—Emp v Sundar Sarup 26 All 514

(6) a Yadast sent by a Revenue Officer to a Magistrate charging a certain person with having disobeyed a summons issued by him—Queen v Mori 11 Mad 443.

(7) an application by a complainant to have his witness summoned, coupled with his oral allegations though not on oath nor reduced to writing—Apurba Krishna v Lmp 35 Cal 141

(8) proceedings of a Court under sec 476 sending a person to the nearest first class Magistrate—Q E v Rachappa 13 Bom 109 Q E v Narakha 13 Mad 144 Ishri Prosad v Sham Lal 7 All 871 Emp v Arjan 31 Cal 664 Eranpote Athan v King Emp 26 Mad 98 In re Lakshmidas 32 Bom 184 (contra—Atiyakannu v Emp, 32 Mad 49 Mata Ratan v Mohabir 4 A I J 803 In re Bal Gangadhar Tilak 26 Bom 785 In re Alauddin Husain 23 All 249)

(9) a communication by a Revenue Court to the District Magistrate that certain documents tendered in evidence before it were forgeries and that such action might be taken as the Magistrate might deem fit—Inder Bhan v King Emp 1905 P R 30

(10) a committal sheet signed by a Superintendent of the Salt Department and sent to the Magistrate (in accordance with the procedure laid down by para 12 of the Instructions issued by the Commissioner of Salt Revenue for the guidance of the Salt Revenue Department) and containing inter alia a definite request to the Magistrate to summon certain witnesses and to try the accused for the offences set out in the sheet is a complaint—Phag on Sihru v King Emp 11 L J 592=18 Cr L J 366

(11) where A charged B with house breaking and B lodged an information against A for theft of his gun but the Police reported B's case to be false whereupon B filed a petition of objection asking the Magistrate to make an investigation and to summon the accused held that the petition of objection filed by B was a complaint—Sadhu Charan v Balat Swain 3 P L J 346=19 Cr L J 874

(12) where in the course of an insolvency proceeding the District Judge found that certain transfers made by the insolvent were fraudulent and the Judge made a report to the District Magistrate asking him to prosecute the transfers held that the report was a complaint—Mahadeo v Emp 18 A L J 50=21 Cr L J 56

(13) where a Magistrate sent a report to the District Magistrate that a certain person had made an alteration in a document filed in his Court and had committed an offence under sec 477 I P C held that the report amounted to a complaint—Suraj Prasad v Emp 21 A I J 825

15 What are not complaints —

(1) statements made in a deposition—Emp v Imankhau 14 Bom L R 141=13 Cr L J 287

(2) a letter merely conveying a sanction of the Local Government under sec 196 authorising the prosecution—Shamal Khan v Emp 1890 P R 16

(3) an application for issue of process—Emp v Lalit Mohan 3^d Cal 557=15 C W N 29

(4) a petition for maintenance under sec 488 of this Code—Sardaran v Amir Khan 1005 P R 20 Hildephonsus v Malone 1885 P R 13 Toker Bibi v Abdul Khan 5 Cal 536 Yus Mahomed v Bismulla 16 Cal 781 Penkata v Paramma 11 Mad 109 Rozario v Ingles 13 Bom 459

16 Report of a Police Officer.—In King Emp v Sada 26 Bom 150 (15th 11 has been held that although the word 'report' is not defined in the Code still the Legislature has studiously attached to the expression 'Police report' a peculiar meaning whenever that expression occurs that the words 'report of a Police officer' in section (4) (h) and the 'Police report' in sections 157, 173 and 190 (f) are confined to reports in cognizable cases only and that if the Police officer goes beyond his duties and makes of his own motion a report of an information of a non cognizable case (e.g. if he lays an information of a non cognizable offence under sec 51 of the Bombay District Police Act) it is not a report but an information or rather a 'complaint' within the meaning of section 4 (h). This view has also been taken in Chithambaram v Emp 32 Mad 3 Harshar v Emp 23 C W N 481 and Imp v Khushaldas 6 S L R 82. The Select Committee of 1916 after considering the above Bombay case changed the words 'Police report' in section 190 (b) into the words 'report in writing made by a Police Officer' remarking that the term 'police report' in section 190 was not intended to be a technical expression but was used to cover any report made by a police officer. In the light of this amendment and the reason given for the same the words 'report of a police officer' in clause 4 (h) should be interpreted to mean not only the report of the Police officer in a cognizable case but any information of a non cognizable offence which a Police officer may report to a Magistrate. But the Lahore High Court takes a contrary view in Emp v Ghulam A I R (1925) Lah 237.

If however a report is made by a Police officer investigating a non cognizable case under the orders of a Magistrate having power to try the case the report falls within the duty of the Police officer and it is a report not a complaint—Sarfaraz v King Emp 11 A L J 332. This question presents no difficulty.

(1) 'European British subject' means—

(i) any subject of His Majesty of European descent in the male line born, naturalized or domiciled in the British Islands or any colony, or

(ii) any subject of His Majesty who is the child or grand child of any such person by legitimate descent;

17 Change —This clause has been amended by sec 2 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act VII of 1923 (popularly known as the Racial Distinctions Act) Prior to the present amendment the definition stood as follows — European British subject means (i) any subject of Her Majesty born naturalised or domiciled in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or in any of the European American or Australian Colonies or possessions of Her Majesty or in the Colony of New Zealand or in the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope or Natal (ii) any child or grandchild of such person by legitimate descent

The present amendment has narrowed the definition so that the number of persons who will be entitled to the privileges conferred by this Code on European British subjects will now be reduced by reason of the fact that they will only be claimable by persons of European descent in the male line—Statement of Objects and Reasons para 9 of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill

In order to sustain the plea of a British born subject under clauses (i) and (ii) not only the legitimate descent of the accused but also the nationality of his father or grandfather as the case may be must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court—Thomas Nash Turnbull 6 M H C R 7

(j) High Court means in reference to proceedings against European British subjects or persons jointly charged with European British subjects the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William Madras Bombay Allahabad Patna Lahore and Rangoon and the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners of the Central Provinces Oudh and Sindh in other cases 'High Court' means the highest Court of criminal appeal or revision for any local area or where no such Court is established under any law for the time being in force such officer as the Governor General in Council may appoint in this behalf

18 The italicised words in this clause have been added by the Criminal Law Amendment Act (VII of 1923) Before this Amendment the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind could exercise its revisional powers over an European British subject only when the latter waived his privileges under Chapter XXXIII of the Code (Queen v Grant 12 Bom 561) otherwise he was under the revisional jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court Under the present law the Judicial Commissioner's Court will exercise its revisional jurisdiction over an European British subject under all circumstances in the same way as it will over an Indian accused

High Court, Original side—A single Judge sitting on the original side of the High Court is not a High Court within the meaning of this Code—Kalichinkar v Dinabandhu, 32 Cal 379

(k) inquiry includes every inquiry other than a trial conducted under this Code by a Magistrate or Court

19 Clause (k)—Inquiry—The word 'inquiry' is meant to include every thing done in a case by a Magistrate, whether the case has been challanned or not—Bhallun Singh v Queen Emp, 1897 P R 3 A proceeding under Chapter XII is an inquiry—Lalit Mohun v Suryakanta, 28 Cal 709=5 C W N 749, Satish v Rajendra 22 Cal 898, Ali Mohamed v Tarak Chandra 13 C W N 420 An inquiry under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act is an inquiry contemplated by the Code—Bansi v Lakshmi Dasi, 45 All 700=21 A L J 619 A "register case" or a preliminary inquiry into an accusation of an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session is an inquiry and not a trial—Palaniandy v Emp, 32 Mad 218

Trial—The word 'trial' is not defined in the Code It means according to Wharton's Law Lexicon, "the examination of a case, civil or criminal before a Judge who has jurisdiction over it, according to the laws of the land"—In re Ramaswami, 27 Mad 510 It means the proceeding which commences when the case is called on with the Magistrate on the Bench and the accused on the dock, and the representatives for the prosecution and the accused are present in Court for the hearing of the case—Gomer Sirda v Q E 25 Cal 863 It refers only to trials for offences, and not to miscellaneous matters such as those coming within sec 145 of this Code—Sufferuddin v Ibrahim, 3 Cal 754 The word 'trial' as used in sec 497 includes appeal—Madhub Chunder v Novodeep, 16 Cal 121 A proceeding under section 107 is a trial—In re Ramaswami, 27 Mad 510, Venkata chinnaya v King Emp, 43 Mad 511 (F B)=21 Cr L J 402

Trial, when begins.—In a case triable exclusively by a Court of Session, the trial begins only after the charge is framed—Palaniandy v Emp, 32 Mad 218 So also, in a warrant case, the trial commences when the accused is called upon to plead to a charge, and till a charge has been framed there is no trial but only an inquiry—Manna v Emp, 9 N L R 42, Sreeramulu v Veerasalingam 38 Mad 585=15 Cr L J 673, Narayana-swami v Emp, 32 Mad 220 F. B (at pp 224 and 234), Haridass v Sarit-ulla 15 Cal 608 (F B) In a summons case however, as it is not necessary to frame a formal charge, the trial may be said to commence when the accused is brought or appears before the Magistrate,

(4) An order of Government authorising or sanctioning a prosecution under Sec 196 or 197 of this Code—In re Kalagana Bapiiah, 27 Mad. 54-

(5) An inquiry by a Magistrate with a view to ascertain whether a sanction to prosecute (now abolished) should be given or not—Q. E. v. Venkataranianna, 23 Mad 223

(6) A departmental inquiry under Sec 197 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879)—In re Chotalal 22 Bom 936

(7) An inquiry by a Deputy Magistrate in pursuance of an order of the District Magistrate calling for inquiry on the report by the Police stating that a complaint lodged with them was false—Masbat Khan v. Emp., 33 Cal 30

(8) Examination by a Police officer under Sec 161 of the Code—Q E v Ismail, 11 Bom 659

(9) Proceedings of a District Magistrate under Sec 125 for cancelling a bond for keeping the peace or for good behaviour—Daya Nath v. Emp., 37 Cal 72

(10) An inquiry by a Magistrate on the strength of an information from the secretariat that a seditious pamphlet was published—Fateh Ali v. Emp., 1894 P R 15

(11) A Divisional Magistrate's inquiry under Sec 176 into the cause of death of a person under suspicious circumstances—In re Trailokha Nath, 3 Cal 742

(12) Calling for records under Sec 435 of this Code—In re Sudraya, 15 M. L. J 489

(13) An inquiry held by a Magistrate not in his magisterial, but in his executive, capacity—In re Ahadju, 1886 P R 21

(14) Proceedings conducted by a person not legally authorised or having no jurisdiction—Radhika Mohan v Lal Mohan, 20 Cal 719, Abdul Majid v. Krishna Lal, 20 Cal 724, eg., an inquiry into the unprofessional conduct of a second grade pleader, conducted not by the presiding officer of the Court in which the pleader practises but by the District Judge—Nallasivam v. Ramalingam, 32 M L J 402 * 28 Cr L J. 785.

(15) Where on the death of an employee in the Telegraph Department his heir sent a letter to the Telegraph Authorities demanding payment of money due to the deceased in the hands of the Telegraph Authorities, and they sent the letter to the District Judge for verification and orders, whereupon the District Judge inquired into the claim, held that the reference to the Judge for verification and the subsequent action in regard thereto did not constitute a judicial proceeding—Emp v. Chaitram, 6 All, 103.

(n) non cognizable offence means an offence for, and non cognizable case means a case in which a police officer, within or without a presidency town, may not arrest without a warrant

(o) 'offence' means any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force it also includes any act in respect of which a complaint may be made under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871

23 Clause (o)—Offence —This definition is the same as that given in Sec 3 (37) of the General Clauses Act The definition in Sec 40 I P Code is wider and includes acts committed outside British India In the Extradition Act the word has a still wider meaning and is not restricted to offences as defined in Sec 40 I P C or in this Code—Adams v Emp 26 Mad 607

Civil wrong —Where an act may be a criminal offence or a mere civil wrong according to the intention of the person doing the Act the aggrieved party should not be encouraged to go into a Criminal Court unless he is fully prepared to prove that the act is criminal and not a mere civil wrong—Gulzar v Emp, 1887 P R 50

24 Offences, what are —(1) Breach of a husband's duty (to maintain his wife) declared by the Magistrate's order or a disobedience of such order—In re Sheikh Fakruddin 9 Bom 40

(2) Failure to prepare and retain counterfoils of rent receipts as specified in Sec 58 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—Emp v Mohant Ramdas C W N 816

(3) Omission to stamp a share warrant under Sec 35 of the India Companies Act—Q E v Moore 20 Cal 676

(4) Illegal seizure of cattle mentioned in Sec 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act—Budhan Mahlo v Issur Singh 34 Cal 926

(5) Omission by a workman to comply with an order made under clause (1) of Sec 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act—King Emp v Takasi Nukayya 24 Mad 660 Emp v Dhondy 33 Bom 22 (24)

25 Offences, what are not —(1) Neglect to maintain wife or children—Q v Golam Hossain 7 W R 10 In re Ponnammal 16 Mad 234 Hildephonsus v Malone 1885 P R 13

(2) A mere breach of the contract under clause (1) of Sec 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act—King Emp v Takasi Nukayya 24 Mad 660 In re Ram Sarup 4 C W N 253 Averam Das v Abdu Rahim 27 Cal 131 Pollard v Mothulal 4 Mad 234 Emp v Dhondy 33 Bom 22 (24) The breach of the contract does not of itself constitute any offence but upon such breach the Magistrate passes an order for payment of the advance or for performance of the contract, and it is only when the order is disobeyed that there is an 'offence' within the meaning of the Cr P Code—33 Bom 22 (24)

(3) Inability to give a satisfactory account of oneself or want of ostensible means of livelihood (sec 109)—Emp v Buddhu 3 N L R 51

(4) The mere travelling in a train without pass or ticket is not an offence under the Railways Act unless there is a dishonest intention to defraud the Railway Company—Q E v Rampal 20 All 95 Kuloda v Emp 11 C W N 100

(5) The mere use of a house as a brothel—Emp v Khairi 6 S L R 254 14 Cr L J 320

(6) Keeping a disorderly house is not an offence under the Eastern Bengal Disorderly Houses Act—Rajani Akemlawah v Pramatha, 37 Cal 287

(7) An application to take proceedings under sec 107 is not an accusation for an offence—Hazarimal v Memanmal 1893 P R 16, Q E v Imam Mandal 27 Cal 662 Chathu v Niranyan 20 Cal 729 See notes under sec 107

(8) Gambling in a boat hired by the accused or in a compartment in a train is not an offence under Bombay Act IV of 1887—Emp v Waha 29 Bom 226, Emp v Budhoobai, 30 Bom 126

(p) "officer in charge of a police station" includes when the officer in charge of the police-station is absent from the station house or unable from illness or other cause to perform his duties the police officer present at the station-house who is next in rank to such officer and is above the rank of constable or, when the Local Government so directs, any other police officer so present

26 Clause (p) —This clause is not applicable to the Police of Calcutta—Emp v Madho Dhobi 31 Cal 557

The words present at the station house do not mean physically present at the station house therefore if a person is deputed to be in charge of a police station in the absence of the permanent incumbent the fact that he was doing duty within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Police Station but outside the station house does not deprive him of his capacity as Station House officer—Assan Alliar v Maslamani 42 Mad 446 36 M L J 252 20 Cr L J 42

If the Sub Inspector in charge of the thana is ill the writer Head Constable who is the officer next in seniority to him can act in his place

Thus where the Magistrate sent a cognizable case to the Police for investigation and report and the Sub Inspector was ill that day it was the duty of the writer Head Constable who was in charge of the Police station on that day to investigate the case although he was not generally empowered to make investigation into cognizable cases—K E v Bhole Bhagat 2 Pat 379 (354) 4 P 1 T 521 24 Cr L J 375

Constable —By a judicial notification no 3 dated 31 1 1883 the senior constable present at any police station shall be deemed to be the officer in charge for the time being during the absence of the officer in charge—Pub Pros v Kuppa Lalundan 9 M L T 414 12 Cr L J 190

(g) 'place' includes also a house building tent and vessel

(r) 'pleader' used with reference to any proceeding in any Court, means a pleader or a mukhtar authorized under any law for the time being in force to practise in such Court, and includes (1) an advocate, a vakil, and an attorney of a High Court so authorized and (2) any other person appointed with the permission of the Court to act in such proceeding

27 Clause (r) —Charge in the law —The definition of pleader has been amended by the Criminal Procedure Code Further Amendment Act (XXXV of 1923) The old definition ran as follows — pleader used with reference to any proceeding in any Court means a pleader authorized under any law for the time being in force to practise in such Court and includes (1) an advocate a vakil and an attorney of a High Court so authorised and (2) any mukhtar or other person appointed with the permission of the Court to act in such proceeding Thus under the old law a mukhtar fell under the second item of the definition of the word pleader, that is a mukhtar was not entitled as of right to practise in Criminal Courts but it was necessary for him to obtain permission of the Court in each case before he was authorised to practise before Magistrates and Sessions Judges (In re Arant Ram 30 All 66 Ishan Chandra v Erip 38 Cal 488) through such permission was usually and naturally granted The mukhtars were placed in the same category as other persons i.e. ordinary persons without any training or license For this reason the mukhtars had a sentimental grievance and it was desirable that it should be removed (see the Report of the Select Committee on Bill 6 of 192) In the Gazette of India 1923, Part V pages 129—131) Accordingly the definition has been amended by the Amendment Act (XXXV of 1923) This amendment has done away with the necessity of obtaining the permission of the Court and gives a legal status to mukhtars

'Practise' —The word practise does not connote the doing of acts habitually or often but signifies the performance of even a single act by a person as a professional man which as a private individual he could not do—Emp v Beni Bahadur 26 All 380

A petition writer who attends Court all day cannot be said to practise—Shib Churn v Ishan Chunder 18 W R 27 Only persons entitled to appear plead or act in Court can be said to practise—Tassaduq v Girhar 14 Cal 556 (565)

Mukhtar—The word refers to such Mukhtars as have obtained a certificate of qualification from the High Court—In re Anant Ram 30 All 66

License for one district—A pleader who holds a license to practise in a particular district is not entitled as a matter of right to practise in a Criminal Court of another district unless he is permitted to practise in the latter Court—Amratra v Crown 4 S L R 207 It is the duty of a pleader who appears in a Criminal Court of a district to which his saad does not apply to inform the Magistrate that he cannot appear as of right and to apply for a permission under this clause—Re Clement 7 S L R 98

Other person—The words other person embrace pure outsiders as well as duly qualified and enrolled mukhtars who have failed to take out their certificates—Tassaduq v Girhar 14 Cal 556

(s) police station means any post or place declared generally or specially by the Local Government to be a police-station and includes any local area specified by the Local Government in this behalf

(t) Public Prosecutor means any person appointed under section 492 and includes any person acting under the directions of a Public Prosecutor and any person conducting a prosecution on behalf of His Majesty in any High Court in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction

28 Clause (t)—Public Prosecutor—The appointment of a Magistrate who had in the first instance tried the accused as a Public Prosecutor to conduct an inquiry subsequently directed in the case is a most improper proceeding—Reg v Hashinath 8 B H C R 126

The complainant may appoint a pleader and the Public Prosecutor may avail himself of his services and the prosecutor does not thereby deprive himself of the management of the case—In re Narayan 11 B H C R 102

As to who may be appointed a Public Prosecutor see sections 492 and 495

- (u) sub-division means a sub division of a district () summons case means a case relating to an offence, and not being a warrant case and
 (r) warrant case means a case relating to an offence punishable with death transportation or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months

29 Clause (w) —The term Sessions Case has not been defined here This term does not necessarily mean cases triable exclusively by the Court of Session but includes all cases which a Magistrate has committed to a Court of Session although he might have tried them himself—Reg v Gulabdas 11 B H C R 98

Words referring to acts (2) Words which refer to acts done extend also to illegal omissions and all words and expressions used herein and defined in the Indian Penal Code and not hereinbefore defined shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively attributed to them by that Code

30 Thus the words force and criminal force used in sec 522 must be interpreted according to the definition given in sections 349 and 350 of the Indian Penal Code—Dalram v Chamru 2 P L T 120 Churaian v Ramlal 25 All 341 Hari Chand v Emp 1919 P R 16 Ishan Chandra v Dena Nath 27 Cal 174

But the principle of this clause does not always hold good for instance the term adultery in section 488 of this Code should not be construed with reference to the definition given in the Indian Penal Code Adultery on the part of the husband may not justify a conviction under section 497 I P C but it may be sufficient for the purpose of sec 488 of this Code to entitle the wife to claim separate maintenance—Gandapalli v Gandapalli 20 Mad 470 (F B)

5 (1) All offences under the Indian Penal Code shall be investigated inquired into tried and other wise dealt with according to the provisions hereinafter contained

(2) All offences under any other law shall be investigated inquired into tried and otherwise dealt with according to the same provisions but subject to any enactment for the time being in force regulating the manner or place of investigating inquiring into trying or otherwise dealing with such offences

31 Power of High Court to punish for contempt —The power to punish for contempt vested in the High Court by the Common Law of England is not affected by the provisions of this Code. A contempt of the High Court by a libel published out of Court when the Court is not sitting is not included in the words offences under the Indian Penal Code or offences under any other law in Sec 5 of the Cr P Code though the contempt may include defamation. It is something more than mere defamation and is of a different character which the High Court can deal with by virtue of its superior powers—Surendra Nath Banerjee v Chief Justice 10 Cal 109 (P C)

32 Clause (2) —Where a special law (e.g. the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act IV of 1887) has provided a special procedure for the manner or place of investigating or inquiring into any offence under it its provisions must prevail and no provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code can apply. Where however the special Act is silent the Cr P C would be applicable—Emp v Haitan 31 Bom 438

Thus the Gambling Act III of 1867 sec 5 prescribes a special procedure for searches under that Act and the provisions of Chapter VII of this Code shall not apply thereto—Khulinda Ram v Emp 3 Lah 359 23 Cr L J 621. So also under the Madras Abkari Act (I of 1886) an accused person has the right to a special procedure regulating the course of investigation and providing for a much more elaborate inquiry than is provided for in the Cr P Code and if a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence under the Madras Abkari Act under the provisions of this Code the proceedings are not properly instituted—In re Kuppusamy, 44 M L J 231 24 Cr L J 335

Where the special law prescribes no special procedure the procedure of the Cr P Code must be followed. So an offence under sec 20 of the Calcutta Rent Act must be summarily inquired into under the provisions of Ch XXII of this Code—Ishan Chandra v Mammatha 37 C L J 298 A I R (1923) Cal 339. The Cr P Code is applicable to trials before a Magistrate of offences under the Bengal Excise Act—Upendra v Emp 41 Cal 691 (702) 18 C W N 486

A simultaneous conviction under the Indian Penal Code as well as under a special law for the same offence is illegal—Queen v Hussain Ali 5 N. W P H C R 49

33 Enactment —A rule framed under any Act (e.g. Calcutta Rent Act) is not an enactment within the meaning of clause (2) of this section—Gobardhan Das v Doolie Chand 25 C W N 661 22 Cr L J 354.

PART II.

CONSTITUTION AND POWERS OF CRIMINAL COURTS AND OFFICES.

CHAPTER II.

OF THE CONSTITUTION OF CRIMINAL COURTS AND OFFICES

A --Classes of Criminal Courts.

6. Besides the High Courts and the Courts constituted under any law other than this Code for the time being in force, there shall be five classes of Criminal Courts in British India, namely—

I—Courts of Session :

II—Presidency Magistrates :

III.—Magistrates of the first class :

IV.—Magistrates of the second class .

V.—Magistrates of the third class.

34 Magistrate—Court —A Magistrate as such is not a Court unless he is acting in a judicial capacity—Clarke v Brojendra Kishore, 36 Cal 433

The Court of a Police Patel is not a Criminal Court within the enumeration contained in this section—Q E v Ramia Ratanlal 317

35 Presidency Magistrate —The term "Presidency Magistrate" could not be ordinarily included in the words "District Magistrate" or "Magistrate of the first class" because secs 10 and 12 of the Code show that the District Magistrates and Magistrates of the first class are appointed only in districts outside the Presidency towns—Emp v Chota Singh, 32 Mad 303 But the term "Magistrate of the first class" used in sec 111 of the Immigration Act (XX of 1883) means a Magistrate appointed to exercise the highest magisterial powers and includes a Presidency Magistrate—Emp v Jeevanji, 31 Bom 611 Emp v Haji Shaik Mahomed, 32 Bom 10

District Magistrate —The Code does not recognise any Court other than the 5 classes mentioned in this section. A District Magistrate's Court is for the purposes of an ordinary criminal trial the Court of a Magistrate of the first class—Esp v Syed Sajjad 3 A L J 85 4 Cr L J 140

The terms Deputy Magistrate General Deputy Magistrate are unknown to this Code and should not be used—P P v Sadananda 23 M L J 670 13 Cr L J 850

B—Territorial Division

7 (1) Every province (excluding the presidency town) shall be a sessions division or shall consist of sessions divisions and every sessions division shall for the purposes of this Code be a district or consist of districts

(2) The Local Government may alter the limits or * * * the number of such divisions and districts

(3) The sessions divisions and districts existing when this Code comes into force shall be sessions divisions and districts respectively unless and until they are so altered

(4) Every presidency town shall for the purposes of this Code be deemed to be a district

The words with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council which occurred in sub section (2) have been omitted by the Devolution Act XXXVIII of 1920

36 Local Government may alter etc —This section assumes the existence of Sessions Divisions in every part of British India but it does not contemplate the creation of such divisions by the Local Governments which can only alter the limits or number of such divisions under sub section (2) of this section—Q E v Mangal Tehchand 10 Bom 274

37 Sessions Division —Instances —Cachar is a Sessions Division of Assam (see Assam Gazette 1874, page 3) Darjeeling is included with in the Purnea Division. The District and Town of Rangoon are two Sessions Divisions for the purposes of this Code (see Gazette of India

Sub-section (3) has also been newly added by the same Amendment Act. Prior to this amendment the Code did not define the relation between a District Magistrate and an Additional District Magistrate. Section 12 also did not make an Additional District Magistrate subordinate to a District Magistrate and therefore the latter had no power under

The words 'with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council' which occurred at the beginning of sub-section (3) have been omitted by the Devolution Act XXXVIII of 1920

45. "Any local area" —The words 'any local area' can be extended to cover, if necessary, a whole province, therefore, where the Local Government, by a Notification, appointed a special Magistrate under this section with all the powers of a first class Magistrate in regard to cases generally 'throughout the Panjab,' it was held that the appointment was not ultra vires—Hiralal v. Crown, 1918 P. R. 7 19 Cr. L. J. 310, 1901 P. R. 24

It is essential that a Special Magistrate should be appointed for a local area. The connotation of a Special Magistrate under this Code is that he should have (1) specified powers conferrable on a Magistrate by the Local Government; (2) a local area within which to exercise those powers; and (3) jurisdiction to try particular cases or classes of cases generally. Each of the above ingredient enters into the conception of a Special Magistrate as defined in this section, but the last is a variable element and does not necessarily require specific mention. If nothing is said about the cases to be tried, it will be understood that all cases triable by law by a Magistrate invested with the powers of a Special Magistrate may be tried by him. But the powers and the local area must be defined—Lakshmi Chind v. Emp, 1901 P. R. 24

(1) The Local Government may direct any two or more Magistrates in any place outside the presidency-towns to sit together as a Bench and may by order invest such Bench with any of the powers conferred or conferrable by or under this Code on a Magistrate of the first, second, or third class, and direct it to exercise such powers in such cases or such classes of cases only, and within such local limits, as the Local Government thinks fit

(2) Except as otherwise provided by any order under this section, every such Bench shall have the powers conferred by this Code on a Magistrate of the highest class to which any one of its members, who is present taking part in the proceedings as a member of the Bench, belongs, and, as far as practicable, shall, for the purposes of this Code, be deemed to be a Magistrate of such class

See notes under sec. 350A

46 Powers of a Bench—Where a case triable by a first class Magistrate was at first tried by a Bench of Magistrates which could exercise first class powers when sitting together but neither of whom was individually invested with first class powers and at the adjourned hearing only one member of the Bench was present it was held that he was not competent to try the case alone—In re Baroda Prosunna, 2 C. L. R. 348. An Honorary Magistrate who is a member of a Bench which exercises powers of third class collectively cannot act independently (that is, when not sitting on the Bench), unless he is authorised to act independently—Emp v. Nuri Sheik, 29 Cal. 483

Where there was a rule framed under this section that only such cases as could be tried summarily should be transferred to the Bench and in spite of this rule a case not triable summarily but within the competency of the Bench was transferred to it, and the Bench tried the case in the regular way, it was held that this contravention of the rule in transferring a case which the Bench could not try summarily came within sec 526 (f) and the trial by the Bench was valid—(1910) U, B, R, (Cr, P, C) 70

16. The Local Government may, or subject to the control of the Local Government, the District Magistrate may, from time to time, make rules for guidance of Benches. rules consistent with this Code, for the guidance of Magistrates' Benches in any district respecting the following subjects —

- (a) the classes of cases to be tried ,
- (b) the times and places of sitting ,
- (c) the constitution of the Bench for conducting trials ,
- (d) the mode of settling differences of opinion which may arise between the Magistrates in session

47. "Consistent with this Code —The rules framed under this section must be consistent with this Code The Judges have recently had occasion to call for and examine the rules made in each district and they noticed that in several districts District Magistrates have exceeded the powers conferred upon them by sec 16 either by making rules inconsistent with the Code itself, or by adding rules on the subject not mentioned in the section in question and so not within the powers conferred by it Care should, therefore be taken to limit action under the section to the powers conferred by it"—Punj Cir, No. 13 2612 G, of 1890

48 Classes of cases to be tried —Magistrates should ordinarily not make over cases to Benches which are likely to be of a protracted character—Q. v Bholanath 2 Cal 23 So also cases involving difficult questions of fact or law should not be directed to be tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates—Public Prosecutor v Varadarajulu, 47 Mad 716 (722) 47 M L J 470 25 Cr I J 1070

49 Differences of opinion —According to the new rule (vide Cal Gaz 1906, Part I, p 980) framed in Bengal, in case of difference of opinion as to the finding between an even number of Magistrates the case shall be referred back to the District Magistrate or the Sub divisional Officer , and the provisions of section 350 shall then apply—Chand v Shamsher, 19 Cr L. J 312 (Cal). But in Eastern Bengal and Assam, the old Notification under which the difference of opinion between two Honorary Magistrates forming a Bench is to be settled by the casting vote of one of them, viz, the Chairman, is still in force See Uifal v K E, 18 C W. N. 394 14 Cr L J. 684

According to the U P. rules If there is an irreconcilable difference of opinion among the members of a Bench as to the guilt of the accused, he

55 Sub-section (4)—"Any person" —In the Bills of 1914 and 1921 the words were any Presidency Magistrate" but on the recommendation of the Joint Committee in 1922, the words Presidency Magistrate" have been changed into the word "person" The reason is thus stated—

 'We think there is force in the suggestion of the Calcutta Bar Library Club that it is not necessary to restrict the appointment of an Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate to persons who are already Presidency Magistrates and we have therefore substituted the words 'any person' for the words any Presidency Magistrate'—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

19 Any two or more of such persons may (subject to the rules made by the Chief Presidency Magistrate under the powers hereinafter conferred) sit together as a Bench

20. Every Presidency Magistrate shall exercise jurisdiction in all places within the presidency-town for which he is appointed, and within the limits of the port of such town and of any navigable river or channel leading thereto, as such limits are defined under the law for the time being in force for the regulation of ports and port-dues

56 Within the limits of Port—A Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta has jurisdiction to try an offence committed under sec 84 of the Calcutta Port Act (III of 1890) outside the limits of Calcutta but within the limits of the port of Calcutta—Ganpat Rai v. Good, 47 Cal 147 24 C W N 79

21. (1) Every Chief Presidency Magistrate shall exercise within the local limits of his jurisdiction all the powers conferred on him by this Code or which by any law or rule in force immediately before this Code comes into force are required to be exercised by any Senior or Chief Presidency Magistrate, and may from time to time, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, make rules consistent with this Code to regulate—

- (a) the conduct and distribution of business and the practice in the Courts of the Magistrates of the town;
- (b) the times and places at which Benches of Magistrates shall sit;
- (c) the constitution of such Benches.

(d) the mode of settling differences of opinion which may arise between Magistrates in session ; and

(e) any other matter which could be dealt with by a District Magistrate under his general powers of control over the Magistrates subordinate to him.

(2) The Local Government may, for the purposes of this Code, declare what Presidency Magistrates including Additional Chief Presidency Magistrates are subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and may define the extent of their subordination

The italicised words have been added by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) This is consequential to the amendment made in section 18 (4)

57. Subordination.—In Bombay (and Calcutta) all Presidency Magistrates and Benches are subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and the Chief Presidency Magistrate has power to transfer a case from one Presidency Magistrate to another under Sec 528 of this Code—In re Nageshwar, 1 Bom L R 347 But in Madras the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the Courts of the other Presidency Magistrates are of equal jurisdiction—Venkateswara v Emp, 10 M L T 518 · 12 Cr L J 451.

By a Notification No 6787 J dated 23 10 1923, the Bengal Government has declared the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta to be subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate The latter has therefore power under sec 528 to withdraw a case from the file of a Presidency Magistrate to whom that case was transferred by the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate for disposal—Mohini v Punam Chand, 51 Cal 820 (826) 28 C W N 903

58 Benches.—Section 18 has conferred on Benches of Magistrates all the powers of a Presidency Magistrate, and the Chief Presidency Magistrate has no power either to confer, restrict or enlarge those powers—J Hassan v Yashubar, 7 Bom L R 833 Therefore, where a Chief Presidency Magistrate revived a case that had been dismissed by him, and transferred it for trial to a Bench of Magistrates, it was held that the latter had jurisdiction to entertain a preliminary objection as to the jurisdiction of the Chief Presidency Magistrate so to revive and transfer—Walters v Ibrahim 7 C W. N 527

may by notification in the official Gazette appoint such persons resident within British India and not being the subject of any foreign State as he or it thinks fit, to be Justices of the Peace within and for the territories mentioned in such notification

Change—The words 'The Governor General in Council so far as regards the whole or any part of British India outside the Presidency Towns and which occurred at the beginning of this section have been omitted by the Devolution Act XXXVIII of 1920. Moreover in the same para the words (other than the towns aforesaid)' have also been omitted and in para 3 the italicised words have been substituted for the words 'European British subjects' by sec 3 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XII of 1923)

By omitting section 23 and by assimilating the provisions of section 22 and 23 this clause has removed the qualification of being an European British subject for being appointed as a Justice of the Peace.—Notes on Clauses (Criminal Law Amendment Bill)

59 Powers—The powers conferred on the Justices of the Peace are the ordinary powers conferred on 1st class Magistrates under sec 36. The power to entertain complaints is not one of such powers.—Loghan v Homer 34 Mad 343 12 Cr L J 535

F—Suspension and Removal

26. All Judges of criminal Courts other than the High Courts established by Royal Charter and all Magistrates may be suspended or removed from office by the Local Government ;

Suspension and removal of Judges and Magistrates
 Provided that such Judges and Magistrates as now are liable to be suspended or removed from office by the Governor-General in Council only shall not be suspended or removed from office by any other authority

27. The Governor-General in Council may suspend or remove from office any Justice of the Peace appointed by him and the Local Government may suspend or remove from office any Justice of the Peace appointed by it

CHAPTER III

POWERS OF COURTS

1—Description of Offences cognizable by each Court.

28. Subject to the other provisions of the Code, any offence under the Indian Penal Code may be tried—

(a) by the High Court, or

(b) by the Court of Session, or

(c) by any other Court by which such offence is shown in the eighth column of the second schedule to be triable

Illustration.

A is committed to the Sessions Court on a charge of culpable homicide. He may be convicted of voluntarily causing hurt, an offence triable by a Magistrate

61 Commitment to Sessions.—The illustration shows that in a case committed to the Sessions Court for a more heinous offence the accused

can be convicted of a minor offence triable by a Magistrate—Q E v Schade 19 All 465 The provisions as to the other Courts indicated in clause (c) do not cut down or restrict the jurisdiction of the High Court or the Sessions Court This section gives powers to the High Court and the Court of Session to try any offence under the Penal Code—Q E v Kharga 8 All 665 Therefore the fact that in a case committed to the Sessions the Sessions Judge adds a charge of an offence triable exclusively by a Magistrate does not affect the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge to try it—Q E v Kharga 8 All 665 There is nothing illegal in a Magistrate committing a person charged with an offence under section 147 I P C to the Sessions Court if in his opinion it cannot be adequately punished by him though the second Schedule of this Code says that the offence is triable by a Magistrate only—Q E v Kayemulla 24 Cal 429

But if the offence falls under some other law and that law specifies a particular Court the forum cannot be changed (see sec 29) Thus an offence under sec 9 of the Opium Act must be tried by a Magistrate a Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction over the offence and the Magistrate has no power to commit the case to the Sessions—Q E v Schade 19 All 465

62 Offences within and beyond jurisdiction —When an offence triable by an inferior tribunal contains an element which puts the offence beyond the jurisdiction of that tribunal the jurisdiction of that tribunal is not necessarily ousted thereby—2 Weir 20 In other words where the facts disclose an offence within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate it is a complete fallacy to say that he is not empowered to try the offence merely because the same facts disclose a more serious offence beyond his jurisdiction—A E v Ajjan 24 Mad 675 Where the facts disclose a major offence (e.g. offence under section 330 I P C) triable exclusively by a Court of Session the Magistrate can convict the accused for a minor offence (e.g. under section 323 342 or 348 I P C) triable by him which constitutes a component of the major offence—Dawson v K E 2 Rang 455 But no tribunal can properly elude jurisdiction by intentionally ignoring facts of aggravation which make the offence really cognisable only by a higher tribunal—2 Weir 21 In re Maduri 12 Mad 54 Enp v Japu Rao 4 N L R 18 Q E v Gundja 13 Bom 502 Lakhray v Crown 1910 P R 31 11 Cr J J 639

Where two or more persons are jointly indicted and the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is ousted in the case of one of them the proper course is to commit both or all for trial before the Court of Session—1 Weir 448

A Magistrate is not entitled to decline jurisdiction on the ground that the offence is a petty one ordinarily triable by heads of villages and to direct the complainant to seek redress from the head of the village—7 M H C R App 31 So also a Magistrate is not entitled to decline to exercise jurisdiction in a case on the ground that it falls under the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical authority when the act of that authority plainly amounts to an offence. Thus where the ecclesiastical authority threatened a Roman Catholic that unless he abstained from certain acts (which he was legally entitled to do) he would be excommunicated the action of the ecclesiastical authority was illegal and amounted to criminal intimidation and the Criminal Courts had therefore jurisdiction over the offence—In re Paul De Cruz 8 Mad 140

29. (1) Subject to the other provisions of this Code, any offence under other laws, any offence under any other law shall when any Court is mentioned in this behalf in such law be tried by such Court

(2) When no Court is so mentioned it may be tried by the High Court or subject as aforesaid by any Court constituted under this Code by which such offence is shown in the eighth column of the second schedule to be triable

Change —In sub section (1) the italicised words have been substituted for the words subject to the provisions of sec 447 by sec 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XII of 1923)

In sub-section (2) the italicised words have been added by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923)

63 Shall be tried by such Court —An offence under a special law triable only by a Magistrate invested with special powers cannot be transferred to an ordinary Magistrate or be tried by any other Magistrate—Emp v Deasmandan 1886 A W N 289 An offence under sec 9 of the Opium Act must be tried by a Magistrate and not by a Court of Session—Q E v Schade 19 All 465 An offence under Madras Act I of 1868 (e.g. supplying liquor without a license) is triable only by a Magistrate and not by the High Court—5 M H C R 277 An offence under sec 16 of the Bombay Village Police Act (VIII of 1867) is triable by Police Patels duly empowered and not by Taluk Magistrates—Q E v Hanmantia Ratanlal 196 An offence under sec 52 of the Prisons Act is not triable by a Presidency Magistrate since he is not a District Magistrate or a First Class Magistrate mentioned therein—Emp v Chola Singh 32 Mad 303 An order under sec 3 (1) of the Defence of India Act (IV of 1915) whereby the Local Government had directed that all persons accused of the offence of committing dacoity on 27th February 1915 at Basti Naurang should be tried by the Commissioners appointed under the provisions of the said Act ousted the jurisdiction of the regular Courts in respect of the persons accused of the offence specified—Samaila v Crown 1917 P R 38 Under section 83 of the Registration Act an offence under sec 82 of that Act is triable by a Magistrate not inferior to a Magistrate of the second class—Q E v Krishna 7 Mad 347 A third Class Magistrate has jurisdiction to try an offence under sec 68 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873)—Q E v Naran Narsing Ratanlal 763 An offence under sec 20 of the Calcutta Rent Act must be tried by the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal which is the Court mentioned in sec 20 of that Act—Ishan v Manmatha 37 C L J 298 A I R (1923) Cal 339

64 When no Court is mentioned—A Magistrate can try a landlord for an offence under sec 58 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act (failure to prepare and retain counterfoils of rent receipts) in the same way as he would try a summons case the Act not having specified any particular Magistrate to try such an offence—Emp v Mohunt Ramdas 9 C W N 816

29A. [New] No Magistrate of the second or third class shall Trial of European British Subject by second and third class Magistrates inquire into or try any offence which is punishable otherwise than with fine not exceeding fifty rupees, where the accused is an European British subject who claims to be tried as such

This section has been added by sec 6 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (VII of 1923) The Bill does away with all provisions under which a person who may try an European British subject must be a Justice of the Peace Except in cases punishable with sentences of fine only not exceeding rupees fifty the Bill provides that European British subjects shall not be triable by second or third class Magistrates but all first class Magistrates are given power to try European British subjects no matter what their nationality may be—Statement of Objects of Reasons Para 8 (i)

29B. [New] Any offence other than one punishable with Jurisdiction in the case of juveniles death or transportation for life, committed by any person who at the date when he appears or is brought before the Court is under the age of fifteen years may be tried by a District Magistrate or a Chief Presidency Magistrate or by any Magistrate specially empowered by the Local Government to exercise the powers conferred by section 8 sub-section (1) of the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, or, in any area in which the said Act has been wholly or in part repealed by any other law providing for the criminal trial or punishment of youthful offenders by any Magistrate empowered by or under such law to exercise all or any of the powers conferred thereby.

This section has been added by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). This amendment was for the first time introduced by Bill 3 of 1921 and did not exist in the Bill of 1914.

The reasons for the amendment have been thus stated. The existing procedure of committal to a Court of Session is lengthy and often involves the prolonged detention of juvenile offenders as undertrial prisoners although the offences generally committed by them seldom require to be so severely punished as to necessitate the intervention of a Sessions Court the sentence or order eventually passed being often incommensurate with the time and energy expended upon a committal and sessions trial. It is therefore proposed that offences of children unless so serious as to be punishable with death or transportation for life should be triable by a District Magistrate a Chief Presidency Magistrate or by any Magistrate specially empowered to exercise the powers conferred by sec 8 sub-section (i) of the Reformatory Schools Act 1897 — Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921).

30. In the territories respectively administered by the Lieutenant Governors of the Punjab and Burma and the Chief Commissioners of Oudh the Central Provinces Coorg and Assam in Sind and in those parts of the other provinces in which there are Deputy Commissioners or Assistant Commissioners the Local Government may, notwithstanding anything contained in section 29 invest the District Magistrate or any Magistrate of the first class with power to try as a Magistrate all offences not punishable with death.

65 Magistrate must purport to act under this section — A first class Magistrate who is simply described on the heading of his judgment as invested with the powers under this section but not purporting to act under such powers cannot exercise those powers in passing the sentence — Mah v Crown 1908 P W R 17.

66 Powers of District Magistrate — As a general rule the cases which a District Magistrate should refrain from trying under his higher powers are those in which a sentence more severe than a District Magistrate can inflict under sec 34 appears to be called for if the offence be established.

and secondly those cases in which the issues are so complex or the difficulty of ascertaining the true facts or of correctly applying the law to them so considerable as to make a trial before a Sessions Judge more appropriate than a trial before a District Magistrate—Saw Kudu v Q E L B R (1893 1900) 219

In the exercise of special powers under this section a District Magistrate has no power to try cases summarily—Fashu v Emp 1879 P R 25

A District Magistrate empowered under this section cannot try an offence punishable with death (e.g. murder) and find the accused guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder on the ground that the case falls within one of the exceptions mentioned in sec 300 I P C—Q E v Gurdit Singh 1891 P R 3 He cannot legally try the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder punishable under the first part of sec 304 I P C an offence not punishable with death. The reason is that where there is credible evidence both of murder and of qualified murder the accused should be committed for trial before a Court which is competent to try both offences once for all and to pronounce a judgment which shall be an effectual bar to a second trial on the same facts—Mangal Singh v Emp 1893 P R 1 So where there is sufficient evidence to constitute an offence of murder a Magistrate exercising special powers under this section should not try the case as on a minor charge—Emp v Paramananda 10 Cal 85 Similarly the offence of attempting to wage war against the Queen should not be tried as a dacoity case by a District Magistrate—1 Bur S R 158

67 Deputy Commissioner —A Magistrate holding an inquiry into a case triable by a Court of Session cannot make over the case to a Deputy Commissioner specially empowered under this section to try such cases because the Deputy Commissioner is a Magistrate and not a Sessions Judge. Such a commitment was held to be illegal and was quashed and the case was ordered to be committed to the Court of Session—Crown v Piran Lilla 1873 P R 17 Q v Poorun 5 N W P H C R 219 But in a Calcutta case the High Court maintained the conviction by the Deputy Commissioner where it was found that the accused had not been prejudiced by such trial—Amir Khan v King Emp 7 C W N 457

Where a Deputy Commissioner tries a case exclusively triable by a Sessions Court under the powers conferred by this section he does so as a Magistrate and if he tenders conditional pardon to one of the accused he is precluded from trying the case himself—Paban Singh v Emp 10 C W N 847

was acting within his ordinary powers as a Magistrate of the 1st class and not within the special powers conferred by this section an appeal would lie to the Court of Session and not to the High (Chief) Court—Tulsi Ram v Emp 1881 P R 23 Where however it appeared from the sentence awarded that the District Magistrate in trying the particular case had exercised enhanced powers under this section the appeal would lie to the High Court and not to the Court of Session—Bahadur v Crown 1877 P R 8 Mokamed Aewas v Emp 1879 P R 33 Jayhimal v Emp 1880 P R 36 Q E v Jai Singh 1900 P R 12 Q E v Batara, 1898 P R 3 If however the offence is not one exclusively triable by a Court of Session and the sentence of imprisonment awarded does not exceed two years an appeal lies to the Court of Session and not to the High Court even though the District Magistrate records that he is exercising his powers under this section—Nathu v Crown 1875 P R 10

69 Revision.—A Sessions Judge is competent under sec 437 (now 436) to revise the order of a District Magistrate and order further inquiry even though the latter was exercising enhanced powers under this section. The District Magistrate acting under this section is inferior to the Sessions Judge within the meaning of sec 435—Jaloo v King Emp 1904 P R 15

B—Sentences which may be passed by Courts of various Classes

Sentences which High Courts and Sessions
Judges may pass

31. A High Court may pass any sentence authorised by law

(2) A Sessions Judge or Additional Sessions Judge may pass any sentence authorised by law but any sentence of death passed by any such Judge shall be subject to confirmation by the High Court

(3) An Assistant Sessions Judge may pass any sentence authorized by law, except a sentence of death or transportation for a term exceeding seven years or of imprisonment for a term exceeding seven years

70 Transportation in default of fine.—Under sec 19 I P C it is competent to the Judge to award a sentence of transportation in lieu of a substantive term of imprisonment but this section does not authorise the award of a sentence of transportation in lieu of the imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine—Kunhussa v Queen 5 Mad 28, Emp v Nuran 1880 P R 17 substantive sentence awardable by the Magistrate is insufficient for the offence the case should be sent for trial to a Court which can award adequate sentence—Mohana v Emp 1895 P R 20

An order for payment of daily fine is illegal in as much as it is an adjudication prospectively in respect of an offence which has not been committed when the order is passed—Ram Krishna v Mahendra 27 Cal 565 There must be proof of a continuing offence before the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to make such an order arises—Emp v Hazir Ahmad 24 All 309 Thus under section 580 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899) the failure to comply with an order of the Municipality on each subsequent day is a continuing offence for which a daily fine can be imposed and no fresh order is necessary to authorise the imposition of the daily fine—Noni Lal v Corporation of Calcutta 7 C W N 853

Fine under other laws —Under this Code and the Penal Code a Magistrate has power only to inflict fine up to Rs 1000—In re Abdoor Rahman 7 W R 37 But if an offence under any other law e.g. under sec 33 of the Companies Act is proved the Magistrate is bound to impose a fine of Rs 500 in respect of each offence of issuing an unstamped share-certificate and the fact that section 32 of this Code gives the Magistrate power to inflict only a fine of Rs 1000 will not curtail the Magistrate's jurisdiction to impose a fine of more than Rs 1000 in a case where more than two unstamped share certificates have been issued—Q E v Moore 20 Cal 676 So also under section 12 of the Opium Act the Magistrate can impose any amount of fine in lieu of confiscation and his power is not limited by section 32 of this Code—Manghan v Rahim 23 Cr L J 747 (Pat)

76 Whipping —A second class Magistrate cannot pass a sentence of whipping under this Code although he was empowered to do so under the old Code of 1872—Emp v Dhavanta 7 Bom 303

A sentence of whipping is not appropriate in the case of a person holding a respectable position in life—Dhagel v Crown 1907 P W R 9

Whipping cannot be awarded in default of payment of fine—1866 P R 5 nor can fine be awarded in addition to whipping—Emp v Thushu 6 C. P. L. R 34

A sentence of whipping should be imposed when there is an aggravation in the commission of the offence Whipping should not be added to imprisonment where the hurt caused (in a case of robbery) was very slight and negligible and the accused was a young man and a first offender—Badri Prasad v Emp 44 All 538 20 A L J 388 23 Cr L J 274 Where dacoity is attended with acts of great cruelty a sentence of whipping may be properly inflicted in addition to a substantive sentence of transportation—Ram Sakal v Emp 19 A L J 610 22 Cr L J 397

that the extent to which the punishment of whipping is inflicted in the several provinces is a matter which should even during ordinary times when the circumstances of the country are normal be carefully watched by Local Governments and administrations in order that any tendency towards an indiscriminate or ill judged resort to this form of punishment may be promptly checked. This is especially necessary during times of scarcity when from causes more or less beyond their own control, the poorer classes of the population are driven to the commission of petty crimes. The policy of largely resorting during times of agricultural distress to whipping as a punishment for petty thefts and other offences of a similar nature, may, no doubt, be defended by the argument that it would be impossible at such times to provide accommodation for all offenders in the jails. But if due and timely provision is made for employment of the industrious poor, there need be no excessive resort to punitive measures of this kind; and the Governor General in Council trusts that if such times should unfortunately recur, the matter will be watched with especial care by the Local Governments and Administrations concerned, and that it may be found possible to distinguish between those members of the criminal classes who take advantage of seasons of public trouble to prey upon their neighbours, and the honest labouring poor who are driven by sheer necessity to grain-puffing or similar offences. For the former, the punishment should be sharp and effective and whipping may often be most appropriate. The latter should be considerably dealt with, and put in the way of relief after such punishment of fine or moderate imprisonment as may seem to be appropriate in each case."

—Proceedings of the Government of India, Home Department (Judicial), 11th January, 1882

'The Judges of the Punjab Chief Court have invited the attention of the Criminal Courts to the following points —(1) that persons in respectable position of life should not ordinarily be whipped (2) that the punishment should be inflicted only in case of false evidence extortion and forger under any exceptional circumstances. (3) that whipping, as an additional punishment, should only be ordered when a further deterrent appears to be really called for in the interests of justice, (4) that special care and judgment should be exercised in times of agricultural scarcity and distress"—Punjab Cir, LXII. p 280

'Whipping being a punishment which, to certain classes of the community, carries great disgrace with it, shall not be inflicted when there are special circumstances which render it undesirable or make it in reality a greater punishment than the law intends. More especially should this be borne in mind in cases where it is proposed to inflict whipping as the sole punishment, and where consequently either no appeal lies in law or there is often no practical appeal. Provided that—

Provido as to certain cases	(a) the term is not in excess of the Magistrate's powers under this Code
-----------------------------	--

(b) in any case decided by a Magistrate where imprisonment has been awarded as part of the substantive sentence the period of imprisonment awarded in default of payment of the fine shall not exceed one fourth of the period of imprisonment which such Magistrate is competent to inflict as punishment for the offence otherwise than as imprisonment in default of payment of the fine

(2) The imprisonment awarded under this section may be in addition to a substantive sentence of imprisonment for the maximum term awardable by the Magistrate under section 32

77 Imprisonment in default of fine —The imprisonment in default of payment of fine need not always be proportionate to the amount of the fine imposed—1 Bur S R 483 This section does not authorise a Magistrate to pass a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine in excess of the term prescribed by Sec 65 I P C—Q E v Venkatesagadu 10 Mad 165 10 Mad 166 (Note) overruling 1 Mad 277

34 The Court of a Magistrate, specially empowered under

Higher powers of certain District Magistrates	section 30 may pass any sentence authorised by law, except a sentence of death or of transportation for a term exceeding seven years or of imprisonment for a term exceeding seven years

78 Under sec 34 read with sec 33 a District Magistrate specially empowered under sec 30 in trying a case under sec 471 I P C can pass a sentence of imprisonment for one year and nine months (i.e. one fourth of 7 years) in default of payment of fine—Karam Chand v Emp 1885 P R 35 A Magistrate exercising powers under this section is competent under sec 59 I P C to pass a sentence of transportation for seven years instead of awarding a sentence of imprisonment—In re Boodhoo 9 W R 6

Sentences which Courts and Magistrates may pass upon European British Subjects

34A. Notwithstanding anything contained in sections 31, 32 and 34—

(a) no Court of Session shall pass on any European British subject any sentence other than a sentence of death penal servitude, or imprisonment with or without fine or of fine and

(b) no District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class shall pass on any European British subject any sentence other than imprisonment which may extend to two years or fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or both

This section has been added by section 7 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923 Under the old law the sentences that could be awarded by Magistrates of the first class District Magistrates and Courts of Session in the case of European British subjects were limited to three months imprisonment and a fine of Rs 2 000 six months imprisonment and a fine of Rs 2 000 and one year's imprisonment and unlimited fine, respectively These restrictions are now removed The Bill proposes that so far as sentences of death penal servitude or imprisonment with or without fine, or of fine only are concerned the powers of those officers shall be identical in the case of European British subjects and Indian British subjects except as regards Magistrates who have been specially empowered under section 30 of the Code Such Magistrates will only be able to pass those sentences on European British subjects which could be passed by ordinary first class Magistrates Such Magistrates will however have power to try European British subjects for the same additional offences as they are able to try Indian subjects under their special powers'—Statement of Objects and Reasons Para 8 (iii)

This section further shows that an European British subject shall not be punished with whipping

35 When a person is convicted at one trial of two or more * * * offences the Court may, subject to the provisions of section 71 of the Indian Penal Code sentence him for such offences to the several punishments prescribed therefor which such Court is

competent to inflict, such punishments, when consisting of imprisonment or transportation, to commence the one after the expiration of the other in such order as the Court may direct, unless the Court directs that such punishments shall run concurrently

(2) In the case of consecutive sentences, it shall not be necessary for the Court, by reason only of the aggregate punishment for the several offences being in excess of the punishment which it is competent to inflict on conviction of a single offence, to send the offender for trial before a higher Court

(a) in no case shall such person be sentenced to imprisonment for a longer period than fourteen years ,
 Maximum term of punishment.

(b) if the case is tried by a Magistrate (other than a Magistrate acting under section 34) the aggregate punishment shall not exceed twice the amount of punishment which he is in the exercise of his ordinary jurisdiction, competent to inflict

(3) For the purpose of appeal, the aggregate of consecutive sentences passed under this section in case of convictions for several offences at one trial shall be deemed to be a single sentence

Explanation—Separable offences which come within the provisions of section 71 of the Indian Penal Code are not distinct offences within the meaning of this section

(Omitted)

Illustration

A breaks into a house with intent to commit theft and steals property therein A has not committed distinct offences

(Omitted)

Change —This section has been amended by the Cr P Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 In sub-section (1) the word distinct has been omitted and the italicised words have been added in sub-section (3), the words aggregate of consecutive have been substituted for the word "aggregate" and the Explanation and Illustration have been omitted.

The existing Explanation and Illustration to section 35 have occasioned considerable misunderstanding. It is therefore proposed to omit them and state definitely that section 35 must be read subject to section 71 I P C. It is also declared that aggregate sentences passed under section 35 in case of conviction for several offences at one trial shall be deemed to be a single sentence for the purpose of appeal if they run consecutively. — Statement of Objects and Reasons (Bill 3 of 1914)

Section 71 I P C. —Section 71 of the Indian Penal Code provides as follows —

Where anything which is an offence is made up of parts any of which parts is itself an offence the offender shall not be punished with the punishment of more than one of such offences unless it be so expressly provided

Where anything is an offence falling within two or more separate definitions of any law in force for the time being by which offences are defined or punished or where several acts of which one or more than one would by itself or themselves constitute an offence constitute when combined a different offence the offender shall not be punished with a more severe punishment than the Court which tries him could award for any one of such offences "

In all other cases (e g where the offences are distinct) the Court can pass separate sentence for each of the offences under section 35 of the Cr P Code

78A Cases under sec 71, I P C. —In awarding punishment under sec 71 I P C in case of convictions for several separable offences falling within the purview of the section it is illegal to impose a sentence for each offence—Nilmony v Queen Emp 16 Cal 442 Keamuddi v Emp 51 Cal 79 Mithoo Sing v Gopal Lal 3 C W N 761 Bhagwan v Emp 1901 P R 4. Thus it is improper to pass separate sentences upon the accused both for rioting and theft when the former offence is but an element of the latter—3 C W N 761. Separate sentences under sections 148 and 324/149 I P C are illegal—16 Cal 442. The infliction of separate punishments under sections 147 and 325/149 of the Penal Code is illegal even though the sentences are made to run concurrently—Keamuddi v Emp 51 Cal 79 28 C W N 347 25 Cr L J 947. Where an accused is charged under sections 121 and 124A of the I P Code in respect of a single speech he will be liable to one punishment only even if he is convicted of both the offences charged—Emp v Hasrat Moham 24 Bom L R 885 A I R (1922) Bom 284. The Bombay High Court holds in other cases that though a Court in awarding punishment under the provisions of sec 71 I P C should pass one sentence for either of the offences and not a separate one for each offence still if two sentences are passed and the aggregate of them does not exceed the punishment provided by law for any one of the offences or the jurisdiction of the Court it would be an irregularity only and not an illegality—Q E v Malu 23 Bom 706 (F B) Emp v Piru Ram A I R (1926) Bom 64, Q E v Bana, 17 Bom 160 The Allahabad High Court likewise holds that it is not illegal to pass separate sentences for all the offences but the amount of punishment should not be heavier than that which the Court can inflict for any one of the offences—Q E v Wazir 10 All 58

Where the offences are independent of each other e g the offence of house breaking at night with intent to commit theft (sec 457 I P C) and the offence of theft of ornaments in a dwelling house (sec 380 I P C) the case does not fall under sec 71 I P Code and separate sentences can be passed for the two offences the one sentence to commence after the expiration of the other—Kanchan v A E 41 C L J 563 A I R 1925 (Cal) 1015

79 Scope of Section — Contracted — This section applies only to convictions of offences it does not apply to imprisonments under sec 123 of the Code—Emp v Kany 5 Bom L R 26 Emp v Tukaram 4 Bom L R 876

Therefore it is illegal for a Magistrate to direct under this section that a sentence of imprisonment for an offence should take effect after the expiry of the sentence which the accused may be undergoing for default of furnishing security for good behaviour—In re Pichari Anthu 16 Cr L J 622 (Mad) The order is also illegal under sec 120

This section is not restricted to cases where the several punishments are all of the same kind i e all are sentences of imprisonment or all are sentences of transportation It covers cases of the description where one of the punishments is imprisonment while the other is transportation—Akhua v King Lmp 21 C W N 608 17 Cr L J 238

80 One trial — This section has reference only to the conviction of an accused person of two or more offences at one trial It does not apply to sentences passed at different trials—Q v Puban 7 W R 1 Bahadur v Emp, 1806 1 R 14 In re Daulatal 3 All 305 Lmp v Thakur 1881 1 W N 23 Humat v King Lmp 20 C W N 1300 Thus it does not include the case of separate trials held on the same day for separate offences committed by the same accused—Q E v Venkatesagadu 2 Weir 30 This section has no application whatever when a person is convicted in two or more separate trials even though in all of them the complainant is the same and the offences are similar and they are concluded on the same date—Sher Varan v Crown 1350 P L R 105 11 Cr L J 672

81 Distinct offences —By reason of the omission of the word distinct the present section applies to all cases whether the offences are distinct or not. In all cases the Court will be competent to inflict an aggregate punishment in excess of the punishment which it is ordinarily competent to inflict in respect of a single offence.

Owing to this change in the law the rulings in Emp v Mondeyappa gozda 8 Bom L R 850 and Emp v Rameswarrdas 13 C P L R 124 are overruled. In these cases it was held that if the offences were not distinct the trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass enhanced sentence under the provisions of sub-section (2) and proviso (b).

82 May sentence —The words may sentence do not mean that the Court must necessarily pass distinct sentences—Q E v Mahomed Ratanlal 597 (per Jardine J). The use of the word may shows that this section only permits and does not make it obligatory on Courts to pass separate sentences in one trial—L B R (1900—1902) 33 L B R (1872 189) 271. Ngalyan v Emp 1 Bur S R 271.

But though it is not illegal to pass one sentence for all the offences still it is generally the proper course to pass a separate sentence for each offence—Ratanlal 597. 4 M H C R App 27 because such a course will enable the Appellate Court to know the punishment to be remitted in case the conviction for one of the offences is set aside—4 M H C R App 27. If one aggregate sentence is imposed for all the offences it is impossible to apportion it to the different offences of which the accused is convicted—Bahadur v Emp 1886 P R 14. 2 B H C R 391.

On the other hand if the offences are not separate (e g offences under secs 392 and 75 I P C) the awarding of two separate sentences is illegal—In re Mullirakha 18 M L T 111. 18 Cr I J 111.

83 Consecutive sentences —If separate sentences are passed for each offence of which an accused stands convicted the sentences must commence one after the expiry of the other—L B R (1872 1892) 526. Where a man is imprisoned under two warrants ordering consecutive sentences the first should be completely executed both in regard to the substantive term of imprisonment as well as the imprisonment in default of fine before any effect is given to the second warrant—Ratanlal 132.

84 Concurrent sentences —The Court must expressly direct whether the sentences are to run concurrently or consecutively. Omission to determine whether the sentences of imprisonment and transportation (in a case where both sentences have been passed) are to run concurrently or consecutively makes the sentence defective in form—Khohua v King Emp 21 C W N 608. 23 C L J 596. 17 Cr L J 138.

Before Sec 397 was amended by the Cr P C Amendment Act 3 it was held that the only cases in which a Court could pass sentences for two offences were when the accused was convicted at the same trial for both the offences (Sec 35) and if the trials were separate Sec 397 applied and the sentences were to take effect consecutively—Imp. v Khuda Bux 2 S L R 23 Kamal v King Emp 20 C W N 1300 18 Cr L J 410 Joyenulla v Emp 22 C W N 597 Dulla v Emp 45 All 59 26 Cr L J 570 Harak Narain v Emp 19 A L J 310 15 C P L R 57 Debi Dayal v A E 16 O C 370 Makbul v Aug Emp 11 A L J 263 14 Cr L J 240 Emp v Mahomed Isab 13 Bom L R 200 Nga Pya v Emp 6 Bur L T 67 14 Cr L J 388 Nga Sein v Emp 1 Rang 306 21 Cr L J 398 (All) But section 397 has now been amended and under the amendment made at the end of the first para of that section it is no longer illegal to make the sentences in the two trials concurrent See Note 1082 under Sec 397

It is not illegal to direct a sentence of imprisonment to run concurrently with a sentence of transportation—Bogi v Crown 1913 P R 21 15 Cr L J 68

The imprisonment referred to in this section is a substantive sentence of imprisonment an order directing that the terms of imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine shall run concurrently is illegal—S I R 263 Emp v Subrao, A I R (1926) Bom 62

85 Appeal—An accused who has been sentenced to concurrent sentences of imprisonment no one of which is individually appealable has no right to aggregate them and appeal against them collectively—Azis Shaikh v Emp 17 C W N 825 40 Cal 631 Abdul Jabbar v Emp 25 C W N 613 23 Cr L J 225 Suknaidan v Emp 17 C L J 392 13 Cr L J 787 Gur Sahay v Emp 3 P L J 138 19 Cr I J 90 Tulsi Ram v Emp 35 All 154 [Contra—Abdul Khahk v K E 17 C W N 72 and Bepin Behari v Emp 15 C W N 734 where it was held that concurrent sentences must be aggregated for purposes of appeal as otherwise there would be no distinction between a concurrent sentence and a single sentence in which no sentence was passed under the second charge But these two rulings can no longer stand as good law in view of the recent amendment made in sub section (3) under which only consecutive sentences can be aggregated for the purpose of appeal]

86 Proviso (a)—According to proviso (a) fourteen years is the maximum term of imprisonment which can be awarded as an aggregate sentence A sentence of transportation in lieu of imprisonment awarded under section 59 I P C is therefore subject to the limitation which has been provided by sec 35 Cr P Code in the case of sentences of imprisonment—Emp v Guman 7 C P I R 29 An aggregate sentence of 20 years rigorous imprisonment is contrary to proviso (a) of this section—Sheo Narain v Crown, 1910 P L R 105 11 Cr L J 679

Sentences of imprisonment may be accumulated beyond 14 years in more than one trial. The limit of 14 years has reference only to sentences passed simultaneously at one trial or passed on charges tried simultaneously—Queen v Luban 7 W R 1

The fact that the Magistrate passes the maximum term of imprisonment under this section is no bar to his awarding further punishment on the same accused for a distinct offence tried separately. Thus where a person was charged with two charges of dacoity and one charge of kidnapping and was tried separately for the dacoity and for the kidnapping and the Magistrate inflicted a sentence of 14 years for the charges of dacoity held that this would not disqualify him from passing further sentence for the offence of kidnapping although the trial for that offence was contemporaneous with the trial on the dacoity charges and terminated on the same day—Bahadur v Emp 1896 P R 14

87 Proviso (b) —Where there are separate trials the Magistrate's power of punishment is not limited to twice the amount which he is competent to pass—In re Daulatal, 3 All 305 Nga Kyin v Emp 1 Bur. S R 271

88 Sub section (3) —For the purpose of appeal —It is only for the purposes of appeal (and for no other purpose e.g. for the purpose of commutation into transportation) that the consecutive sentences can be treated as one sentence therefore two or more offences cannot be added up so that the aggregate period may be commuted into transportation—Queen v Ootum Mal 2 W R 1

For the purposes of appeal only consecutive sentences are allowed to be taken in the aggregate as one sentence. This sub section does not apply to concurrent sentences—Saw Hlaing v Emp, U B R (1897 1901) 13 Nga Shue v Emp L B R (1900-1902) 57 Sher Muhammad Emp 1901 P R 25 See notes under Appeal above

Only substantive sentences can be aggregated under this section a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine must not be included for the purposes of calculation—1892 P R page 22

89 Splitting up of offences —No Magistrate is entitled to split up an offence (over the whole of which he had no jurisdiction) into its component parts for the purpose of giving himself jurisdiction over a part thereby depriving the prisoner of the right of appeal—Emp v Abdool Karim 4 Cal 18

C—Ordinary and Additional Powers

36 All District Magistrates Sub divisional Magistrates Ordinary powers of and Magistrates of the first, second Magistrates third classes have the powers 1 r respectively conferred upon them and specified in the third schedule. Such powers are called their ordinary powers.

90 Secs 36 and 107 —Where a person is not sent before the District Magistrate by any other Magistrate under Sec 107 (3) the District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to commit him to custody under sec 107 (4). Nor can the District Magistrate commit the accused to custody under sec 36 because this section does not override the provisions of sec 107—Chithambaran v Emp 31 Mad 315

91 Ordinary powers —Power to entertain complaints is not one of the ordinary powers of a first class Magistrate—Loghan v Romer 34 Mad 343 12 Cr L J 535

37 In addition to his ordinary powers any Sub-divisional Magistrate or any Magistrate of the first second and third class may be invested by the Local Government or the District Magistrate as the case may be with any powers specified in the fourth schedule as powers with which he may be invested by the Local Government or the District Magistrate

Additional powers
conferable on Magistrates

38. The power conferred on the District Magistrate by section 37 shall be exercised subject to the control of the Local Government

D—Conferment Continuance and Cancellation of Powers

39 (1) In conferring powers under this Code the Local Government may by order, empower persons specially by name or in virtue of their office or classes of officials generally by their official titles

Mode of conferring powers

(2) Every such order shall take effect from the date on which it is communicated to the person so empowered

92 Where a Magistrate of the second class begins a trial in that capacity and previous to his passing the sentence is empowered as a first class Magistrate he can inflict a sentence in the latter capacity—Q E v Pershad 7 All 414 (F B)

Generally or specially —When by a notification of the Government a class of officials is invested with powers to try certain offences such officials are only generally empowered and not specially empowered—Mahomed Kasim v. A. E. 17 M. L. T. 191 16 Cr. L. J. 268. The term specially refers to the empowering of a particular official by name or by virtue of his office. Thus a notification of the Government which empowers second class Magistrates of certain places to try cases under the Opium Act is a special empowering of the persons holding those offices in virtue of their office—Alina v. Emp. 24 Cr. L. J. 846 (Mad.)

40. Whenever any person holding an office in the service of Government who has been invested with any powers under this Code throughout any local area is appointed to an equal or higher office of the same nature within a like local area under the same Local Government, he shall, unless the Local Government otherwise directs or has otherwise directed, exercise the same powers in the local area in which he is so appointed.

Change.—The word appointed has been substituted for transferred by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The object of this amendment is to cover cases of officers going on leave and returning to the same district and to obviate the necessity of investing them again with their old powers and re-gazetting the same—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). The amendment will save a great deal of routine work in the Secretariat and in the Government printing press—Leg. Ass. Debates 15 1 23 page 1047.

93. Continuance of powers.—When a Tahsildar is invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class while acting as a Deputy Collector his powers continue so long as he is a Magistrate until they are withdrawn by a fresh notification though he is posted in a less responsible post—In re Hanumanta 2 Weir 36. A Sub-Registrar invested with third class powers for trial of certain offences in a certain place is competent to exercise on his transfer to another place the powers conferred upon him as Sub-Registrar of the place from which he was transferred unless the Local Government directed him not to exercise them—Q. E. v. Veeranna 15 Mad 132. A Mamlatdar invested by name with second class powers in a district retains them though he ceases to be a Mamlatdar and becomes an Awalkarkun his revenue title being a matter of description only—Q. E. v. Rama Ratanlal 322.

94. Continuance of trial.—Where a Head Assistant Magistrate having almost completed the trial of a case was appointed to the office of a Deputy Magistrate in another place in the same district and case was by order of the District Magistrate brought on to his file to the latter place it was held that the Magistrate could proceed with the case from the point at which he had arrived as Head Assistant Magistrate and the trial need not be commenced de novo—Karuppana v Akobalamatam 22 Mad 47

But where during a trial the Magistrate is transferred to another district he cannot continue the trial See notes under sec 12

95 Going on leave —The Magisterial powers conferred on an officer are kept alive under this section even though he is absent on leave (This is now made clear by the present amendment) But the case is different if he vacates his office by absenting himself without leave—Bas Harku v Sitaram 2 Bom L R 536

41 (1) The Local Government may withdraw all or any Powers may be cancelled of the powers conferred under this Code on any person by it or by any officer subordinate to it

(2) Any powers conferred by the District Magistrate may be withdrawn by the District Magistrate

PART III.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

CHAPTER IV

OF AID AND INFORMATION TO THE MAGISTRATES THE POLICE AND PERSONS MAKING ARRESTS

42 Every person is bound to assist a Magistrate or police officer reasonably demanding his aid whether within or without the presidency towns —

(a) in the taking or preventing the escape of any other person whom such Magistrate or police officer is authorized to arrest,

(b) in the prevention or suppression of a breach of the peace or in the prevention of any injury attempted to be committed to any railway canal telegraph or public property

95A Every person* —A police officer charged with the duty of arresting an accused can ask a chowkidar to assist him in arresting the accused or preventing his escape—Manik v Kenaram 6 C W N 337

96 Reasonably —No person is bound to obey an unreasonable order of a Magistrate or Police officer. Thus where a Magistrate ordered a landholder to find a clue to a theft within 15 days it was held that such an order was unreasonable and unwarranted by this section and the landlord was not bound to perform an act for which the police are appointed and paid. Disobedience by the landlord to such an order is no offence—Emp v Bakshi Ram 3 All 201. Members of the public are bound to assist a police officer reasonably demanding their aid in the taking of any dacoits or suspected dacoits whom that officer is authorized by law to arrest. The law however does not intend that the police officers should have a general power of calling upon the members of the public to join them in arresting a number of unknown persons whose whereabouts are not known. Refusal to assist the police officer in such a quest is not an offence—Josi Prasad v Emp 42 All 314 15 A L J 169 21 Cr L J 801

(e) the commission of or intention to commit at any place out of British India near such village any act which if committed in British India would be an offence punishable under any of the following sections of the Indian Penal Code namely 231 232 233 234 235 236 237 238 302 304 382 392 393 394 395 396 397 398 399 402 435 436 449 450 457 458 459 460 489A 489B 489C and 489D

(f) any matter likely to affect the maintenance of order or the prevention of crimes or the safety of person or property respecting which the District Magistrate by general or special order made with the previous sanction of the Local Government has directed him to communicate information

(2) In this section—

(i) village includes village lands and

(ii) the expression proclaimed offender includes any person proclaimed as an offender by any Court or authority established or continued by the Governor General in Council in any part of India in respect of any act which if committed in British India would be punishable under any of the following sections of the Indian Penal Code namely 302 304 382 392 393 394 395 396 397 398 399 402 435 436 449 450 457 458 459 and 460

(3) Subject to rules in this behalf to be made by the Local

Appointment of village headman by District Magistrate in certain cases for purposes of this section

Government the District Magistrate or Sub divisional Magistrate may from time to time appoint one or more person with his or their consent to perform the duties of a village headman under this section whether a village headman has or has not been appointed for that village under any other law

Change —The italicised words show the amendments made by the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 The reasons are stated below

100 Object of Section —The provisions of this section are not to be worked solely for the purpose of vexation but for the purpose of ensuring that information be not intentionally withheld by persons whose position renders them liable to give it. Therefore when information is given to the nearest Magistrate or Police by one of the persons bound to give such information it is not reasonable that every other person bound to give the information should be prosecuted for not having done so—Emp v Sashi Bhushan, 4 Cal 623. In re Pandya, 7 Mad 436, Q E v Gopal, 20 Cal 316 Q E v Hari Gopal Ratanlal 778. Where the police are already informed of a fact by the Chowkidar, there is no further obligation upon the village headman to report the same information again to the police—Rampal v Emperor, 23 Cr L J 162 (Oudh)

101 Persons bound — Village headman in Madras means a Village Munsiff or Village Magistrate—In re Sivan Chellu, 32 Mad 258. A Zailder is not a village headman within the meaning of this Section—Q E v Hari Singh 1894 P R 25, Shah Mahammad v Emp, 1886 P R 19

Every mukhaddam and Kotwar in C P. is bound to give information under this section because they have to perform the duties of a village headman—Local Govt v Mamharsingh, 7 N L R 101=12 Cr L J 441

A Village Accountant was not bound under the corresponding section of the Code of 1872 or 1882—In re Ramunih Nayar, 1 Mad 266, but now he is expressly mentioned

The owner or occupier of a house in a village is not the 'owner or occupier of land'—Q E v Achula, 12 Mad 92. Residence in a dwelling house belonging to another is not occupation of land—23 W R 60

Owner and agent —The liability of the resident agent arises when the owner is not resident and has no personal knowledge of the fact to be reported. Where the owner has such knowledge, the liability certainly attaches to the owner (and not to the agent)—In re Mudhoo Soodun, 23 W R 60. Under the present law the agent is liable only if he is 'in charge of the management of the land'

These words have been added during the Debate in the Legislative Assembly on the motion of Mr Agnihotri who stated the reasons as follows—'The word 'agent' should be qualified and made definite in such a way that only such agents be made liable to give information under sec 45 as may be connected with the land or be in charge of the management of that land the occurrence on which is to be reported. The word 'agent' is very comprehensive and vague, for instance there may be agents for various purposes, they may be for the collection of land revenue, they may be for looking after the cultivation of the land they may be for the construction of buildings on the land or for conducting and defending suits for title of such land and so on, the word may apply even to servants. And to make such agents liable would be to make the term very wide and troublesome so it is necessary to restrict it only to such persons as are in charge of the management of the land and who may be in a better position to know about the occurrences on that land — Legislative Assembly Debates, January 16 1923 page 1114

A Khazanchi of a Zemindar of a village is not an agent. A dewan may be an agent during the absence of his master, but not a dewan who acts only under the orders of his resident master—Emp v Achiraj, 4 Cal 603

Forthwith —The word 'forthwith' must be construed with reference to the object of the enactment. Where a Kulkarni gave information of a suspicious death some 7 or 8 hours after he was aware of the same, held that the information was not given forthwith—Reg v Pirlappa, Ratanlal 78

102 Information —The persons enumerated in this section are bound to report an information and not a mere rumour—Iachnis v Emp, 5 P L T 305 25 Cr L J 972. Where the Zemindar heard of the disappearance of a man from the village and a rumour that he had been murdered the omission to report such rumour to the police was not an offence—In re Bhup Singh 1900 A W N 207. But under clause (d) as now amended, the disappearance of a man under suspicious circumstances must be reported

'Possess' —This word has been substituted for the word 'obtain'. In 1904 the Madras Government found that the word 'obtain' did not cover information obtained by personal observation, because the word undoubtedly meant 'obtain by making inquiries'. There was therefore some difficulty in making certain that information obtained by personal observation, such as for example the discovery of a corpse on the ground came within the scope of the law. Moreover the deletion of the word was absolutely necessary, because it implied an obligation to seek the information. The Magistrates were likely to be misled by the word 'obtain' they might come to the conclusion that it was obligatory on the persons concerned to obtain information. It was therefore necessary to make an amendment by substituting the word 'possess' for the word 'obtain'. In moving the amendment Mr Pantulu observed "The offending portion of the section is that the landholder would be called upon to give information which he may possibly obtain but which he may not have in his possession. Now if we take away the word 'obtain' and substitute the word 'possess' it comes to this that the landlord is bound to give only the information which he possesses and not information which he may possibly obtain by making inquiries. If my amendment is carried, it will be incumbent upon the prosecution to show that the accused had that information in his possession, and not merely that he might have obtained it. Therefore, I think that if this amendment is carried, the sting will be taken out of the section"—Legislative Assembly Debates, January 16, 1923 page 1116 See also Lachmi v Emp, (ubi supra)

103 Clause (b) —Resort to or passage through:—The bringing of a suspected robber under arrest to the village and releasing him there does not amount to the resorting to or the passage through the village of such robber—Emp v Malik Daud, 1887 P R 30

Proclaimed offender:—These words include persons over and above those to whom the words in their ordinary sense apply—Q E v Narpat, 1901 A W N 10 The fact that the offender's property has been attached and sold under the provisions of Sec 88 of this Code does not raise any presumption that he is a proclaimed offender. It is on the prosecution to prove that the proclamation was made in the manner prescribed by Sec 87 of this Code—In re Pandya Nayak, 7 Mad 436

104 Clause (c) —The information to be given to the police under clause (c) is the information of the commission of an offence. An information that a certain jewel is missing is not an information that an offence has been committed, and need not be communicated to the police—In re Venu Reddi, 5 M L T 257 9 Cr L J 224

If the offence is a bailable one, the persons enumerated in this section are not bound to give information of it—Emp v Malik Daud, 1887 P R 30, In re Sitan Chetti, 32 Mad 258

105 Clause (d)—Occurrence of death —The duty imposed by this section on a village headman etc of giving information as to the occurrence of any sudden or unnatural death is intended to apply only when the death takes place at or near the village of which he is the headman, owner, occupier, etc —In re Mudhoosoodun, 23 W R 60

If a body is found on one's land, the presumption is that the death took place there, and the owner is under an obligation to give information regarding the matter—Maluki v Queen, 11 Cal 619 (Witter J, dissenting, held in this case that there could be no such presumption, it could be equally presumed that the death took place in another village and the dead body was thence removed to this village) Under clause (d) as now amended, the finding of a corpse must be reported, without reference to the question of presumption as to whether the death took place in the same village or in another village

If a dead body is found in a stream, it is enough to give rise to a presumption that the death took place under suspicious circumstances, and the person finding it is bound to report it under this section—Saker Muhammad v. Emp, 1887 P. R 20

Where a man fell from a tree and died two days afterwards held that although the death was 'unnatural' in the ordinary sense of the word still it would not come within the meaning of the word 'unnatural' as used in sec 45 (d) so as to require to be reported immediately, unless it occurred fairly soon after the cause—Domarsing v Emp, 23 Cr L J 345 (Nag)

106 Punishment —For omission to give information under this section see Sec 176 I P C But omission to give information by persons not enumerated in this section is not an offence—Bahadur v Emp, 1882 P R 34

False information —A person giving a false information of an offence to a village Magistrate who is bound to pass the information on to the higher authorities under this section will be guilty of an offence under Sec 211 I P C—In re Sivan Chellis 32 Mad 258 It would be otherwise if the offence complained of is one in regard to which the information need not under this section be passed to the higher authorities—Ibid

Proof —To support a conviction for omitting to give information under this section it should be proved that the accused bears the character which raises the obligation under this section—3 Mad 266, it must be proved that a specified offence has been committed by some one that the accused knew of its having been committed and that he wilfully omitted to give the information—Queen v Ahmed Ali 22 W R 42

107 Sub-section (3)—Appointment of village headmen —An order of a District Magistrate dismissing a person from the office of a head man of a village under the rules framed under this sub section is an executive order and is not subject to revision by the High Court—In re Damma 29 All 563

'With his or their consent' —These words were added during the Debate in the Assembly on the motion of Mr Rangachariar "My amendment would remove any misconception there may be as to the power of the District Magistrate to appoint persons against their will and it is for this reason that I have inserted this clause that when they are so appointed it should be with their consent I know that in the case of enlisting special police people without their consent are enlisted This ought not to degenerate into such a provision It must be a voluntary duty to be performed by people who are given a certain status' —Legislative Assembly Debates, January 16 1923 page 1117

Bengal rules for the appointment of headmen —

(1) In all villages in which Bengal Act VI of 1870 has been introduced, the Magistrate of the District may appoint the principal member of the Chowkidari Panchayat or the collecting member, where there is one to be village headman

(2) In villages where Bengal Act VI of 1870 has not been introduced, the Magistrate of the District may appoint the principal resident agent of land owner, or rent receiver, or his representative, or the principal resident cultivator to be village headman

(3) In the case of a principal or collecting member of a Chowkidari Panchayat, a clause shall be added to the appointment under sec 3 of the Chowkidari Act to the effect that he has also been appointed to be village headman under sec 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code When a person other than a member of a Chowkidari Panchayat is appointed, he shall receive a special sanad from the Magistrate

(4) The Magistrate shall keep a register of all persons who have been appointed village headmen, showing their names and father's names and the village for which they are responsible, and shall take measures to effect mutations in that register from time to time when one headman dies and is succeeded by another—Calcutta Gazette, 26 12 1894

OF ARREST, ESCAPE AND RETAKING.

A —Arrest Generally

46. (1) In making an arrest the police officer or other person making the same shall actually touch or confine the body of the person to be arrested, unless there be a submission to the custody by word or action.

(2) If such person forcibly resists the endeavour to arrest him, or attempts to evade the arrest, such police officer or other person may use all means necessary to effect the arrest

(3) Nothing in this section gives a right to cause the death of a person who is not accused of an offence punishable with death or with transportation for life

108 Warrant —When a warrant of arrest has been issued the officer making the arrest must have the warrant in his possession otherwise the arrest is illegal—Emp v Amar Nath 5 All 318

109 Arrest —An arrest is a restraint of the liberty of the person Unless there is submission actual contact is necessary to effect it Where a bailiff met the accused in the street showed his staff told him he was under arrest but did not touch him and the accused instead of going with him walked away and entered a shop, held that the accused was not arrested at all and could not be convicted of escape from custody—Aludomal v Crown 9 S L R 141 17 Cr L J 87

110 All means —Justifiable violence —The means employed to stop the fugitive should be such as an ordinary prudent man would make use of who had no intention of doing any serious injury The wounding of a thief by a Chowkidar in order to effect his arrest was held to be justifiable under the circumstances—Q v Protap Chowkedar 2 W R 9 Under clause (3) of this section an Excise officer pursuing an opium smuggler has no right to fire at him where he so fired and the accused cut the Excise officer on his thigh with a sword but did not cause a severe wound held that the act of the officer in firing at the accused was illegal and the latter exercised his right of private defence in wounding the officer with his sword—Nga Nan v K E 21 Cr L J 97 (Bur)

Punishment for resistance to arrest—see secs 224 225 225B I P C

47 If any person acting under a warrant of arrest or any Search of place entered by person sought to be arrested police officer having authority to arrest, has reason to believe that the person to be arrested has entered into or is within any place the person residing in or being in charge of such place shall on demand of such person acting as aforesaid or such police officer allow him free ingress thereto and afford all reasonable facilities for a search therein

111 Scope —This section is not intended to restrict the powers of the Police to enter the place to be searched On the contrary it is a provision compelling householders to afford the police facilities in carrying out their duties and the next section provides that if difficulties are placed in the way of a Police officer he may use force to obtain ingress—Ramesh Chandra v Emp 41 Cal 350

Demand —No precise words are needed it is enough to give notice that entry is sought under proper authority Russell on Crimes p 745

48 If ingress to such place cannot be obtained under section 47 it shall be lawful in any case for a person acting under a warrant and Procedure where ingress not obtainable

in any case in which a warrant may issue but cannot be obtained without affording the person to be arrested an opportunity of escape, for a police officer to enter such place and search therein, and in order to effect an entrance into such place, to break open any outer or inner door or window of any house or place, whether that of the person to be arrested or of any other person, if after notification of his authority and purpose, and demand of admittance duly made, he cannot otherwise obtain admittance

Provided that, if any such place is an apartment in the actual occupancy of a woman (not being the person to be arrested) who, according to custom, does not appear in public, such person or police-officer shall, before entering such apartment, give notice to such woman that she is at liberty to withdraw and shall afford her every reasonable facility for withdrawing and may then break open the apartment and enter it

112 A Police officer entering into a building for the purpose of arresting suspected persons will not be liable for trespass—Clarke v Brojendra Kishore, 36 Cal 433

49. Any police officer or other person authorised to make an arrest may break open any outer and inner door or window of any house or place in order to liberate himself or any other person who, having lawfully entered for the purpose of making an arrest, is detained therein

50. The person arrested shall not be subjected to more restraint than is necessary to prevent his escape

No unnecessary restraint For punishment for unnecessary restraint see sec 20, I P C

51. Whenever a person is arrested by a police officer under a warrant which does not provide for the taking of bail or under a warrant which provides for the taking of bail but the person arrested cannot furnish bail, and whenever a person is arrested without warrant or by a private person under a warrant and cannot legally be admitted to bail or is unable to furnish bail

the officer making the arrest or when the arrest is made by a private person the police officer to whom he makes over the person arrested may search such person and place in safe custody all articles other than necessary wearing apparel found upon him

52 Whenever it is necessary to cause a woman to be searched

Mode of search ng the search shall be made by another women woman with strict regard to decency

53 The officer or other person making any arrest under

Power to seize this Code may take from the person offensive weapons arrested any offensive weapons which he has about his person and shall deliver all weapons so taken to the Court or officer before which or whom the officer or person making the arrest is required by this Code to produce the person arrested

B — Arrest without Warrant

When police may arrest without war 54 (1) Any police officer may with rant out an order from a Magistrate and with out a warrant arrest—

first any person who has been concerned in any cognizable offence or against whom a reasonable complaint has been made or credible information has been received or a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been so concerned

secondly any person having in his possession without lawful excuse the burden of proving which excuse shall lie on such person any implement of house breaking thirdly any person who has been proclaimed as an offender either under this Code or by order of the Local Government fourthly, any person in whose possession anything is found which may reasonably be suspected to be stolen property, and who may reasonably be suspected of having committed an offence with reference to such thing, fifthly, any person who obstructs a police officer while in the execution of his duty or who has escaped, or attempts to escape, from lawful custody sixthly any person reasonably suspected of being a deserter from Her Majesty's Army or Navy or of belonging to Her Majesty's Indian Marine Service and being illegally absent from that service, seventhly, any person who has been concerned in or against whom a reasonable complaint has been made or credible information has been received or a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been concerned in any act committed at any place out of British India, which, if committed in British India, would have been punishable as an offence and for which he is, under any law relating to extradition or under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, or otherwise liable to be apprehended or detained in custody in British India, eighthly, any released convict committing a breach of any rule made under section 565 sub-section (3), and ninthly, any person for whose arrest a requisition has been received from another police officer provided that the requisition specifies the person to be arrested and the offence or other cause for which the arrest is to be made and it appears therefrom that the person might lawfully be arrested without a warrant by the officer who issued the requisition

(2) This section applies also to the police in the town of Calcutta

Change —In the fourth clause the word "and" has been substituted for the word or and the ninth clause has been newly added by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 For reasons see below

113 Any Police officer —Village Chowkidars are not Police officers within the meaning of this section—Kalai v Kalu Chowkidar 27 Cal 366 Emp v Kallu 3 All 60 Bolai v Emp 35 Cal 361 Purna Chandra v Hachanali 41 Cal 17

The words any police officer show that where a warrant has been issued for the arrest of certain culprits on a charge of a cognizable offence any police-officer even though he is not entrusted with the execution of such warrant and has not got the warrant with him will be justified under this section in making the arrest—Ratna Mudali v Emp 40 Mad 1028 18 Cr I J 709

Where a complaint has been made against any person in respect of a cognizable offence any police officer may arrest him without warrant even though the Police officer be not in his uniform—Mahadeo v Emp 21 A L J 791

114 Power of arrest —The words may arrest show that the power of arrest is discretionary A Police officer is not always bound to arrest for cognizable offences If a complaint of such an offence is made to him he ought if there be circumstances in the case which lead him to suspect the information to refrain from arresting persons of respectable position and to leave the complainant to go to a Magistrate and convince him that the information justifies the serious step of the issue of a warrant of arrest—Q E v Irappa Ratanlal 79,

The powers under this section must be cautiously used This section gives wide powers to a Police officer to make an arrest without an order from the Magistrate and without warrant only in certain circumstances limited by the provisions contained in this section and it is necessary in exercising such large powers to be cautious and circumspect—In re Charu Chandra 44 Cal 76 20 C W N 1233

Power to detain —Authority given to arrest under this section implies authority to detain—Q E v Ramchandra Ratanlal 270 But when certain persons were arrested under section 54 Cr P Code on suspicion of having been concerned in a dacoity, and afterwards the investigating police-officer reported to the Magistrate that there was no sufficient evidence upon which to charge those persons with participation in the dacoity the Magistrate ought to discharge these persons and ought not to detain them in order that the police might institute proceedings under sec 110 If the police believe that those persons were habitual thieves or robbers they ought to re arrest them under section 55 —Emp v Rahu 43 All 186 18 A L J 1114

115 Punishment —A police officer arresting a person unjustifiably or otherwise than on a reasonable ground is guilty of an offence under sec 220 I P Code

A person causing obstruction to a Police officer making an arrest under this section is guilty of an offence under section 25 I P C —Raina Mudali v Emp 40 Mad 1078 Gopal Singh v K E 36 All 6

116 Clause (1)—Reasonable complaint or suspicion, credible information —What is a reasonable complaint or suspicion must depend on the circumstances of each particular case but it must be at least founded on some definite fact tending to throw suspicion on the persons arrested and not a mere vague surmise or information Still less have the police any power to arrest persons as they sometimes appear to do merely on the chance of something being hereafter proved against them—7 W R 3

A general definition of what constitutes reasonableness in a complaint or suspicion and credibility of information cannot be given Both must depend upon the existence of tangible legal evidence within the cognisance of the Police officer and he must judge whether the evidence is sufficient to establish the reasonableness and credibility of the charge information or suspicion—Reg and Ord N IV P Sec 10 para 366 (8) Subodh v K E, 52 Cal 319 29 C W N 98 26 Cr L J 625

If a Magistrate after taking the statement of the complainant respecting an offence under section 406 I P Code issues a warrant for the arrest of the accused there is a reasonable complaint of the accused being concerned in a cognizable offence consequently a constable who arrests the accused without a warrant is justified in doing so under this section—Alay Muhammad v Emp 22 Cr L J 758 (All) If a warrant of arrest is issued against the accused on a charge of cognizable offence by the Police of any other province it amounts to a credible information that the accused has committed a cognizable offence—Gopal Singh v Emp 36 All 6 11 A L J 957

Where a complaint of a cognizable offence was made to the Magistrate who recorded it under section 200 and directed the police to make an investigation and send a report and the police after making the investigation arrested three persons it was held that the complaint recorded under sec 200 was a credible information upon which the police were entitled to arrest under this section even though the Magistrate had not issued process against the accused—Emp v Bhole Bhi at Pat 379 4 P L T 521 24 Cr I J 375 The police can make an arrest under this section on a complaint of a cognizable offence made before them—Mahadeo v Emp 21 A L J 791 25 Cr I J 65

117. Clause (4) —A formal complaint need not be made in order to authorise a police officer to arrest under this clause any person found with stolen property—Queen v Gourtee Singh 8 W R 28

The possession of stolen property must be recent and exclusive—Ibid

The word and has been substituted for 'or' Under the old law as it stood before 1923 a police officer could arrest any person in whose possession anything was found which might reasonably be suspected to be stolen property even though he might come in possession of that property innocently The effect of the amendment is that the mere possession of stolen property will not empower a police officer to arrest the person in possession of it but the person must also be reasonably suspected of having committed an offence in respect of the thing See the Legislative Assembly Debates, 16th January, 1923 page 1154

117A Clause (5)—Obstruction to police-officer —Where a police constable, after questioning a person carrying bundles of cloth under his arms (suspecting the cloth to be stolen) and receiving unsatisfactory replies, took hold of the pieces of cloth in order to inspect them, but the latter refused to allow the officer to inspect the cloth and scuffled with him, after which the police-officer arrested him held that the person was legally arrested under the fifth clause of this section, for obstructing a police officer while acting in the execution of his duty—Bhawoo v Mulji, 12 Bom 377.

118. Clause (7) —Offence committed out of British India —By virtue of this clause the ruling in 19 Bom 72 is no longer good law This clause authorises the police in British India to arrest without warrant a British subject committing outside British India any of the offences enumerated in the first Schedule of the Extradition Act—Emp v Hussein-ally, 7 Bom L R 463

An arrest in British India by a police of the Native State of a person suspected to have committed an offence in the Native State is illegal—Emperor v Debi, 29 All 377

The wording of this clause indicates that the arresting Police-officer has to exercise his own judgment and form his own opinion as to whether he should or should not act, and to enable him to do so he must have the necessary facts before him A bare assertion of the commission of an offence does not amount to a reasonable suspicion or a credible information, on the basis of which an arrest can be made under this clause If there is a credible information of the issue of a warrant by the Foreign State, that would justify an action under this section—Subodh v. Emp, 52 Cal 319 29 C W. N 98 40 C L J 489

The expression 'liable to be apprehended' etc contemplates cases in which there is a present liability to apprehension or detention in custody in British India under the laws of extradition or the Fugitive Offenders

Act or any other law and not cases in which there may be liability in future for apprehension or detention. The issue of some sort of process under the law would create such a liability though the process may not have arrived and is not available for execution—Ibid

119 Clause (9)—The first two lines of this clause have been added on the recommendation of the Select Committee in 1916 and the latter portion on the recommendation of the Joint Committee in 1922. As regards the first two lines the Select Committee of 1916 observed. The Committee are of opinion that an amendment is required in section 54 to meet the case of a requisition from a police officer to arrest a man at a distance. We think it is clear that there should be power for an investigating officer to require by telegram the arrest of a person who may perhaps have absconded from the place where the investigation was taking place. We therefore propose to add a clause at the end of section 54. As regards the rest of the clause the Joint Committee (1922) added

We agree with those critics who desire that some safeguard should be provided and we have therefore proposed to lay down that the requisition should reveal the offence or other cause for which the arrest is to be made so that the arresting officer can satisfy himself that the arrest could lawfully have been made without warrant by the officer issuing the requisition.

Before the ninth clause was added it was held that the reasonable suspicion and credible information in this section must be based upon definite facts which the Police officer must consider for himself before he could act under this section. He could not delegate his discretion or take shelter under another person's belief or judgment. Any other interpretation of these words would tend to diminish the sense of responsibility of the officers concerned and to make the exercise of their powers dangerous. Thus where a Police-officer arrested the accused on receipt of a letter written by an inspector of Police in which it was stated that the accused committed offences under secs 409 and 420 I P C and it appeared that the officer effecting the arrest relied solely on the aforesaid letter and had no personal knowledge of the facts of the case it was held that the arrest of the accused was not proper—In re Charu Chandra 44 Cal 76. This ruling is no longer correct in view of this new clause.

120 Arrest without warrant under Special Acts.—Arrest of a person in possession of a contraband salt (Sec 24 Madras Act VII of 1864 Sec 4 of Madras Act I of 1887) carrying arms under suspicious circumstances (Sec 12 Arms Act XI of 1878) Gambling in open streets (Sec 13 of Act III of 1867) committing offences under the Railways Act (Sec 13 Railways Act) Cantonments Act (Sec 15 of Act XIII of 1861) the Criminal Tribes Act (Secs 20 and 26 of Act XXXII of 1871) Emigration Act (XXI of 1883 Sec 17) Ind in Explosives Act (IV of 1864 Sec 2

13) Forest Act (Act VII of 1878 Sec 63) European Vagrancy Act (Act IX of 1874 Sec 19) Assam Labour and Emigration Act (VI of 1901 section 195) Bengal Excise Act (VII of 1878 secs 40 and 41) Cruelty to Animals Act (Bengal Act III of 1869 section 1) Punjab Municipal Act (XX of 1891 secs 18 83) Bombay Gambling Act (IV of 1867 sec 12A) Rangoon Tramways Act (XXII of 1883 sec 19)

Arrest of vagabonds, habitual robbers, etc 55. (1) Any officer in charge of a police station may, in like manner arrest or cause to be arrested—

- (a) any person found taking precautions to conceal his presence within the limits of such station under circumstances which afford reason to believe that he is taking such precautions with a view to committing a cognizable offence, or
- (b) any person within the limits of such station who has no ostensible means of subsistence or who cannot give a satisfactory account of himself, or
- (c) any person who is by repute an habitual robber house-breaker or thief or an habitual receiver of stolen property knowing it to be stolen or who by repute habitually commits extortion or in order to the committing of extortion habitually puts or attempts to put persons in fear of injury

(2) This section applies also to the police in the town of Calcutta

121 Object of section —The powers with which officers in charge of police stations have been armed under the Code for the purpose of restraining bad characters are exceptional powers. They provide very strong remedies and should never be put in force without the greatest deliberation and except upon convincing evidence. This section was intended for the suppression of habitual bad characters whom an officer in charge of a Police station suddenly finds within his jurisdiction or about whom he has good cause to fear that they will commit serious harm before there is time to apply to the nearest Magistrate empowered to deal with the case under sec 112—In re Daulat Singh 14 All 45

122 Illegal arrest —A person against whom proceedings under Chapter VIII were held by the High Court to be illegal was re-arrested under this section after giving him ostensible release. It was held that the re arrest was illegal and an unlawful exercise of authority as it was an attempt in another way to do what had been declared by the High Court to be illegal—1883 A W N 123 Similarly where the Sessions Judge has passed orders for the immediate release of an accused person who had been prosecuted for dacoity the action of a Police officer or a Magistrate in re arresting him under this section and subsequently taking proceedings against him is a grave irregularity and wholly without jurisdiction—Emp v Maiku 41 All 483 17 A L J 458 20 Cr L J 381

In order to justify an arrest under clause (c) of this section the prosecution will have to prove that the man was reputed to be a habitual robber or house breaker etc it is illegal to arrest a person merely on the ground that the police had reason to suspect that he was concerned in several offences—Appasami v King Emp 47 Mal 442 (445) 46 M L J 447 25 Cr L J 563

123 Section applies to Calcutta Police—This section is expressly made applicable to the Police of Calcutta Therefore an officer in charge of a Police-station in Calcutta may arrest a person although there is no declaration by Government declaring a thana or police station in Calcutta to be a police station within the meaning of this Code—Emp v Madho Dhoti 31 Cal 557

124 Bail—When the Police arrest under this section they are bound to give the person arrested the option of bail and the bond should not be excessive but in accordance with the position in life occupied by the person arrested—In re Daulat Singh 14 All 45

125 Clause (a)—Habitual gambler—Only the persons enumerated here can be arrested under this section Persons who are suspected of earning their livelihood by unlawful gambling are not liable to arrest by the Police The proper course is to proceed under sec 112 of the Code—King Emp v Kyaw Dun 3 L B R 91 3 Cr L J 10

126 Sections 55 and 110—This section is independent of Chapter VIII of this Code although proceedings under that Chapter might follow on arrest under this section as a natural sequence A police-officer can therefore arrest or cause to be arrested without a warrant or an order of a Magistrate any person who is by repute a robber house-breaker or thief or otherwise comes under section 110 of the Code—Nepal v Emperor 35 All 407 14 Cr L J 618 11 A L J 596

56 (1) When any officer in charge of a police-station

Procedure when or any police officer making an investigation sub-ordinate to arrest under Chapter XII requires any without warrant officer subordinate to him to arrest without a warrant (otherwise than in his presence) any pe who may lawfully be arrested without a warrant, he shall deliver to the officer required to make the arrest an order in writing specifying the person to be arrested and the offence or other cause for which the arrest is to be made

The officer so required shall before making the arrest notify to the person to be arrested the substance of the order and, if so required by such person shall show him the order

(2) This section applies also to the police in the town of Calcutta

Change —The italicised words have been added by sec 11 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII) of 1923)

We consider that a Police officer making an investigation should no less than an officer in charge of a police station have power to depute a subordinate to effect an arrest under the provisions of section 56 (1) and we propose an amendment in this subsection accordingly 'Report of the Select Committee of 1916

The second para of subsection (1) did not exist in the Bills of 1914 or 1921, but was added on the motion of Mr Rangachariar during the debate in the Assembly See Legislative Assembly Debates, January 17, 1923, page 1186

127 "Officer subordinate" —A chowkidar is an officer subordinate to an officer in charge of a police station—Bahubal v Emp 10 C W N. 287 Umrao v Emp 26 Cr L J 795

128 In his presence —If the arrest is made in the presence of the officer in charge of the Police station the arrest is virtually made by him, and no order in writing is necessary, a verbal order is sufficient—Queen v Shaikh Emoo 11 W R 20

129 Order in writing —The order in writing is an authority to a subordinate officer to make an arrest which the superior Police officer, if present could himself make on his own responsibility—Q E v Basant Lal, 27 Cal 320 The mere writing of the name of the subordinate on the back of the warrant and the signing of that endorsement by the officer in charge of the station does not constitute the warrant an order in writing But adding the words 'arrest the person within named and for the offence within stated' would make it a valid order in writing—Q E v Dalip, 18 All 246

Section 80 of the Code applies only to warrants and not to orders in writing mentioned in this section therefore it was held that a subordinate officer making an arrest under an order in writing was not bound to notify to the person arrested the authority for and the cause of his arrest—Q E.

v Basant Lal 27 Cal 320 (323) This is no longer good law because the new second para of subsection (1) now expressly makes it obligatory on the subordinate officer to notify to the person arrested the substance of the order in writing and to show him the order if called upon to do so.

The subordinate officer making the arrest is not bound to show the accused the order given by the officer in charge of the police station unless he is asked to produce the order—Umrao v L 1 p 26 Cr L J 795

130 Warrant by a Magistrate —The issuing of a warrant by a Magistrate for the arrest of a person does not exclude the jurisdiction of the officer in charge of the Police station and prevent him from issuing the order under this section. It might be different if the Magistrate has decided that no warrant should issue and that summons only should issue—Q E v Dalip 18 All 246

57 (1) When any person, who in the presence of a police officer has committed or has been accused of committing a non cognizable offence, refuses on demand of such officer to give his name and residence or gives a name or residence which such officer has reason to believe to be false he may be arrested by such officer in order that his name or residence may be ascertained

(2) When the true name and residence of such person have been ascertained he shall be released on his executing a bond, with or without sureties, to appear before a Magistrate if so required

Provided that if such person is not resident in British India the bond shall be secured by a surety or sureties resident in British India

(3) Should the true name and residence of such person not be ascertained within twenty four hours from the time of arrest or should he fail to execute the bond or if so required to furnish sufficient sureties he shall forthwith be forwarded to the nearest Magistrate having jurisdiction

131 Refusal to give name and address —A police constable asked a man not to create any disturbance on the public road. Upon the man's declining to do so the constable demanded his name and address which were not given. Then the constable arrested and dragged him to the police chowky and detained him there till his name and address were ascertained It was held that the constable had lawfully exercised the powers conferred by this section—Lmp v Goolab Rasul 5 Bom L R 597

Where two police officers arrested without warrant a person who was drunk and creating disturbance in a public street and confined him in the police station though one of them knew his name and address held that the police officers' action was not justified under this section—Gopal Naidu v King Emp 46 Mad 605 6-5 (T B) 44 M L J 655 24 Cr L J 599

58 A police officer may, for the purpose of arresting without warrant any person whom he is authorized to arrest under this Chapter, pursue such person into any place in British India

132 Pursuit in foreign territory —The Police may in hot pursuit follow an offender into an independent Native State, if they arrest him there, they must take him at once to the nearest Police authority of that State, if not in hot pursuit they should ordinarily apply to the nearest Police authorities of the State and request them to effect the arrest of the fugitive—C P Pol Man p 170

59 (1) Any private person may arrest any person who, in his view, commits a non-bailable and cognizable offence, or who has been proclaimed as an offender, and shall, without unnecessary delay, make over any person so arrested to a police-officer, or in the absence of a police-officer, take such person to the nearest police station	59 (1) Any private person may arrest any person who, in his view, commits a non-bailable and cognizable offence or any proclaimed offender, and without unnecessary delay, shall make over any person so arrested to a police-officer, or, in the absence of a police-officer, take such person or cause him to be taken in custody to the nearest police-station
---	---

(2) If there is reason to believe that such person comes under the provisions of section 54, a police-officer shall re-arrest him

(3) If there is reason to believe that he has committed a non-cognizable offence, and he refuses on the demand of a police-officer to give his name and residence, or gives a name or residence which such officer has reason to believe to be false, he shall be dealt with under the provisions of section 57. If there is no sufficient reason to believe that he has committed any offence, he shall be at once released

Change —Subsection (1) has been re drafted by sec 12 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923), but the actual amendment made in the subsection is the addition of the words "or cause him to be taken in custody " This amendment gives effect to the ruling in 29 All 575 cited below

133 Principle —The principle of this section is that "for the sake of preservation of the peace, any individual who sees it broken may restrain the liberty of him whom he sees breaking it, so long as his conduct shows that the public peace is likely to be endangered by his acts"—per Parke B in Timothy v Simson, (1835) 4 L J Ex 81 Thus, if a person is drunken and disorderly and is committing assaults on others, so that his conduct is at that time a grave danger to the public, he may be rightly arrested under this section by a private citizen—In Ramaswamy Ayyar, 44 Mad 913. 22 Cr L J 412

134 Scope of Section.—The intention of this section is to prevent arrest by a private person on mere suspicion or information, and the power of arrest by such person is restricted only to non bailable and cognizable offences committed in his presence, and to a proclaimed offender—Q E v. Potadu, 11 Mad 480 The words "in his view" mean 'in his presence' or 'within his sight' and not 'in his opinion' The Legislature did not intend to give a private person authority to arrest an offender, if upon information received or from other circumstances appearing before him he is of opinion that an offence has been committed—Gakul v Emp., 7 P L T. 65; 26 Cr L J. 1462. A I R (1926) Pat. 53

This section enables a private person to arrest an accused for committing the abetment of a non-bailable and cognizable offence (e g abetment of the offence of extortion)—Raghunath v K E. 5 P L J 129. 1 P L T. 60.

The arrest by a private person is authorised only in case the offence is committed in the presence of such person; therefore an arrest by a private person would be illegal if it is made after the offence (which is not a continuing one) has been completed before such person comes up and makes the arrest—Holus v Emp., 35 Cal 361 Where a private person whose bullock was lost, traced the bullock to the house of the thief arrested him and made him over to the police ekhidir, held that the arrest was not lawful as the offence of theft was not committed in the presence of the private person arresting the thief—K. E v. John, 23 All 266 A private person has no power to arrest an accused who is running away after committing murder where the murder did not take place in the presence of such person—Alawal v Emp 1922 P L R 19=23 Cr L J 3

135 Make over to a police officer —A village Chowkidar (Kalas v Kalu Chowkidar 27 Cal 366 Purna Chandra v Hachanali 41 Cal 17 17 C W N 978) or a village Talayari or a village Toti (Q v Bojigan 5 Mad 22) is not a Police officer to whom the arrested person may be made over But under the present amendment the arrested person may be made over to the Chowkidar etc so that the Chowkidar may take such person to the nearest police station

Take such person to the Police-station —It is not the intention of the Legislature that the person making the arrest should be bound himself to take the arrested person to the police station—Emp v Parsiddhan Sing 29 All 575 Q E v Potadu 11 Mad 480 See also King Emp v Johns 23 All 266 The directions are sufficiently complied with if the person arresting the accused forwards him in charge of a servant or a village servant—Ibid This is now made clear by the addition of the words or cause him to be taken

60 A police officer making an arrest without warrant shall,
 Person arrested to be taken before Magistrate or officer in charge of police-station without unnecessary delay and subject to the provisions herein contained as to bail, take or send the person arrested before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case, or before the officer in charge of a police station

136 Send the person —On a police officer arresting a person the prisoner should not be kept in confinement in any place which the officer might select, but should be sent immediately to the police station and be placed in the custody of the officer in charge of the station who is the person entrusted by the Act with the conduct of the enquiry—Q v Tarinee 7 W R 3

Report to the Magistrate —Where a policeman arrested a thief but being himself unable to send or take the accused to a Magistrate made a report upon which the Magistrate issued a warrant it was held under the circumstances that the accused was legally brought before the Magistrate—Reg v Mahipya 5 B H C R 99

61 No police-officer shall detain in custody a person arrested Person arrested not to be detained more than twenty-four hours without warrant for a longer period than under all the circumstances of the case is reasonable, and such period shall not, in the absence of a special order of a Magistrate under section 167 exceed twenty four hours exclusive of the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the Magistrate's Court

137 Object of section —The intention of the Legislature having regard to this section and section 167 is that an accused person should be brought before a Magistrate competent to try or commit with as little delay as possible—Q E v Engadu 11 Mad 98 Ponnusami v Queen 6 Mad 69 Narendra v Emb 36 Cal 166 In re Nagendra Nath 51 Cal 402 (412) 38 C L J 388 The precautions laid down in sections 60 and 61 seem to be designed to secure that within not more than 24 hours some Magistrate shall have seisin of what is going on and some knowledge of the nature of the charges against the accused however incomplete the information may be—Dwarkanadas v Ambalal 28 C W N 830 25 Cr L J 1203

138 Detention in custody —Where the accused were not allowed to leave the thana or to go to their homes held that they were detained in custody within the meaning of this section and the mere fact of there not being a special guard over them would not alter the nature of their position—Queen v Basooram 19 W R 36

139 Period of detention —In no case is a Police officer justified in detaining a person for a single hour in excess of 24 hours without bringing him before a Magistrate except upon some reasonable ground justified by all the circumstances of the case—6 W R 88 Even if a person be rightly arrested it does not rest with the police officer to keep the prisoner in custody where and as long as he pleases Under no circumstances can he be detained without the special order of a Magistrate under sec 167 for more than 24 hours Unless the special order has been obtained, the prisoner must either be discharged or sent on to the Magistrate and any longer detention is absolutely unlawful—Q v Tarinee 7 W R 3

The provisions of this section are imperative and where a police officer is charged with having detained prisoners for more than 24 hours without the special order of a Magistrate it is not necessary for the Crown to prove that the police officer detained them with a guilty knowledge—Queen v Basooram 19 W R 36

The detention mentioned in this section means continuous detention This section does not apply to cases where there has not been a continuous detention for more than 24 hours The law does not mean that the number of hours during which an accused person is detained at a thana is to be added up irrespective of circumstances Thus where the accused person was brought to the thana at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and was allowed to go (to get bail) at noon the next day and was not a prisoner in the

till his return on the morning of the next day and then he was sent up to the sudder station by the evening held that although the period of detention exceeded 24 hours there was no continuous detention for more than 24 hours and that the detention was not illegal—In re Indrobeer 1 W R 5

Time occupied in journey —The time occupied in journey to the Magistrate is not to be counted in the 24 hours but it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that the time so occupied is reasonable with reference to the distance to be travelled and other local considerations—Ratanlal 22

62 Officers in charge of police-stations shall report
Police to report to the District Magistrate, or, if he so apprehensions directs to the Sub divisional Magistrate, the cases of all persons arrested without warrant, within the limits of their respective stations, whether such persons have been admitted to bail or otherwise

Failure to report on the part of the police officer is punishable under section 217 I P Code

63 No person who has been arrested by a police officer Discharge of person shall be discharged except on his own apprehended bond or on bail, or under the special order of a Magistrate

64 When any offence is committed in the presence of a Offence committed in Magistrate within the local limits of his Magistrate's presence. jurisdiction, he may himself arrest or order any person to arrest the offender, and may thereupon, subject to the provisions herein contained as to bail, commit the offender to custody

140 Secs 64 and 556 —Although this section gives to a Magistrate authority to arrest a person committing an offence in his presence yet it is clearly not intended to trench upon the general principle embodied in Sec 556 of this Code that no Judge or Magistrate shall try a case in which he is personally interested Therefore, where a Magistrate while travelling in a railway carriage requested the accused who were his fellow passengers to desist from smoking and on their contemptuously refusing to do so arrested and subsequently tried and convicted them it was held that the Magistrate was legally and morally disqualified from exercising his judicial functions in relation to the offence imputed—Q F v Venkana, Ratanlal 339

65 Any Magistrate may at any time arrest or direct the arrest in his presence within the local limits of his jurisdiction of any person for whose arrest he is competent at the time and in the circumstances to issue a warrant

141 Arrest under Bombay Gambling Act —Under the provisions of sec 6 of the Bombay Gambling Act IV of 1887 a first class Magistrate has power to give authority under a special warrant to a Police officer to make an arrest and search those provisions must be read subject to the provisions of secs 63 and 105 of this Code that is the Legislature must be presumed to have intended that the Magistrate should have authority to make the arrest and search himself if necessary—Fmp v Fernandez 31 Bom 438 9 Bom L R 695 6 Cr L J 60

66 If a person in lawful custody escapes or is rescued the person from whose custody he escaped or was rescued may immediately pursue and arrest him in any place in British India

67 The provisions of sections 47, 48 and 49 shall apply to arrests under section 66 although the person making any such arrest is not acting under a warrant and is not a police officer having authority to arrest

CHAPTER VI

OF PROCESSES TO COMPEL APPEARANCE

A —Summons

68 (1) Every summons issued by a Court under this Code shall be in writing in duplicate signed and sealed by the presiding officer of such Court or by such other officer as the High Court may from time to time by rule direct

(2) Such summons shall be served by a police-officer or subject to such rules as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf by an officer of the Court issuing it or other public servant

(3) This section applies to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay

Scope—The corresponding sections in the Code of 1872 (secs 152 and 153) were limited to service of summons against an accused person only. The scope has now been enlarged. This is the only section which provides for the issue of a summons under this Code and a summons to an assessor must comply with the terms of this section—1 C W N cxvi

142 Application for summons—Duty of Court—When an application is made for a process to compel the appearance of witnesses it is the duty of the Court to pass an order either granting the prayer or refusing it. To make a mere order directing the petition to be filed is to leave the matter open and is improper—Bhomar v Diganbar 6 C W N 548

143 Form and Contents—A summons should be clear and specific in its terms as to the title of the Court, the place at which and the day and the time of the day when the attendance of the person summoned is required and it should go on to say that such person is not to leave the Court without permission and if the case in which he has been summoned is adjourned without ascertaining the date of the adjournment. If these formalities are not duly observed a conviction for non attendance in obedience to the summons cannot be sustained—Express v Ram Saran 5 All 7

Where a defendant was summoned to appear before a Magistrate on a certain date but the summons did not specify the place at which he was to appear it was held that the Magistrate was not competent to dispose of the case ex parte on failure of the person to appear before the Magistrate—7 M H C R App 43 See 1 Weir 100

A summons should contain the name of the father of the person summoned, his caste or tribe and his residence so as to place his identity beyond all doubt—See Punj Cir Vol II p 151. In a process issued against a person residing in a large town the description should contain not merely the name and father's name of the person to whom the process is addressed and the name only of the town in which such person resides but should give such further particulars regarding the section or street of the town in which such person resides as can be ascertained and will facilitate his identification—Cal G R & C O Ch 1 Rule 19

Signing—Signing not by full name but by initials is only an irregularity and does not affect the validity of the proceedings—Sec 537 Illustration (under the old law). The illustration to Sec 537 has now been omitted by the 193 Amendment Act but the law does not seem to have been changed. Sealed —A summons which is not sealed is not valid in law and therefore disobedience to a summons not sealed is not an offence—1 Weir 100, In re Abdul Rahim 37 M L J 588 21 Cr L J 800

By whom served —Under clause (2) of section 68 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal has declared that the processes issued under that Act shall be served by peons appointed under the rules framed by the High Court under Sec 22 of the Court Fees Act VII of 1870 vide Notification Government of Bengal the 11th May 1883 Calcutta Gazette 23rd May 1883 page 426 Similar orders were passed by the Chief Commissioner of Assam see Assam Gazette 23rd June 1883 page 290

69 (1) The summons shall if practicable be served personally on the person summoned by delivering or tendering to him one of the duplicates of the summons

(2) Every person on whom a summons is so served shall, if so required by the serving officer, sign a receipt therefor on the back of the other duplicate

(3) Service of a summons on an incorporated company or other body corporate may be effected by serving it on the secretary local manager or other principal officer of the corporation, or by registered post letter addressed to the chief officer of the corporation in British India In such case the service shall be deemed to have been effected when the letter would arrive in ordinary course of post

This is the only section which provides for the procedure of service of summons and every summons (e g summons to attend as assessor) under this Code must be served in accordance with the provisions of this section Any other mode (e g sending summons by post or under registered cover) is illegal and not justifiable—1 C W N 651

144 Service how effected—The mere showing of a summons to the person summoned is not sufficient service Either the original should be left with the party meant to be served or should be exhibited to him and a copy of it delivered to him—Reg v Karsintil 5 B H C R 0

Refusal to take or sign —If however the person refuses to take the summons the mere tendering is sufficient service—Er p v Ganga Ram 1886 A W N 93 Sahadeo v Emp 40 All 577 16 A L J 433 19 Cr

B—Warrant of Arrest

75 (1) Every warrant of arrest issued by a Court under this Code shall be in writing signed by the presiding officer or in the case of a Bench of Magistrate by any member of such Bench and shall bear the seal of the Court

(2) Every such warrant shall remain in force until it is cancelled by the Court which issued it, or until it is executed

147 Grounds for issuing warrants —A Magistrate should issue a warrant on good and legal grounds. It is essential that he should have a knowledge of the offence having been committed and that knowledge must be either personal or derived from testimony legally given before him. The report of the Police or any statement which is not on oath and which falls short of actual formal complaint is not sufficient to give the Magistrate jurisdiction to issue a warrant—Q v Surendra 13 W R 27 (31)

148 Warrant —Form —When any Act does not provide a form of warrant the form to be used is the ordinary one prescribed by this Code—Alter Caufman v Govt of Bombay 18 Bom 636

Pardanashin lady —Until and unless a Magistrate is convinced that there is strong likelihood of the charge being proved a pardanashin lady of good position should not be ordinarily compelled to appear in person in the first instance—Prem Kuar v Mai Stam Nath 1908 P W R 20

General warrants —The issuing of a general warrant which means a warrant to apprehend all persons committing a particular offence or offences is illegal—In re James Hashigs 9 B H C R 154. No general warrant for arrest should ever be issued by a Court of Justice. Every warrant should state as shortly as possible the special matter on which it proceeds. A strict adherence to the forms of warrants of arrest prescribed by the Code will tend to prevent their being granted irregularly and without inquiry as to whether the circumstances justify their issue—Punj Cir P 144

Conditional warrants —A warrant which directs that in the event of a certain named person not leaving British India forthwith all officers to whom the warrant is directed are to arrest that person is invalid—Alter Caufman v Govt of Bombay 18 Bom 636. The proper procedure in this case would be first to issue an order directing the person to leave British India forthwith which should be duly served upon him and then in case of his refusal or neglect to comply with its terms there should be a further order by the Governor in Council authorising his arrest and detention in jail—Ibid

149 Requisites of a valid warrant —

(a) It must be in writing

(b) It must be signed signing not by full name but by initials is a mere irregularity and does not affect the validity of the warrant or vitiate the arrest—Ra 143 Behary v Emp 3 P L J 493 19 Cr L J 747 Q E v Janki Prosad 8 All 293 [In Abdul Gafur v Q E 23 Cal 896 it was held that the signing must be by full name But this does not seem to be correct See note 143 under sec 68] The signing must be by pen and ink and not by stamp—Subramania Ayyar v Queen 6 Mad 396 The warrant must be signed by the presiding officer of the Court and not by any other Magistrate A warrant signed not by the Magistrate who took cognisance of the case but by an Honorary Magistrate who lived in the same town is invalid and a person resisting or escaping from an arrest made in pursuance of such warrant does not commit an offence under Sec 353 I P C—Jagpat Koori v Emp 2 P L J 487 18 Cr L J 526

(c) It must be sealed An unsealed warrant is void—In re James Hastings 9 B H C R 154 Mahajan v Emp 42 Cal 708 19 C W N 224 Alter Causman v Govt of Bombay 18 Bom 636

(d) The person named in the warrant must be described with sufficient certainty and particularity—18 Bom 636 The warrant must give particulars of the person to be arrested so as to identify him clearly. A warrant which directs the committal of James Hastings without giving any further description of him is invalid since it may lead to the arrest of any person bearing that name—In re James Hastings 9 B H C R 154 So also a warrant containing a wrong description of the accused (e.g. giving a wrong name of his father) is invalid—Debi Sing v Q E 28 Cal 399

(e) The warrant must specify the offence Where a warrant was issued for the arrest of a person on a charge of abduction it was held that since the act with which the accused was charged did not amount to an offence without a specific intention the warrant must state the intent with which the offence was committed otherwise it would be invalid—Bidhoomookhi v Sreenath 15 W R 4

(f) And lastly the warrant must contain the name and designation of the police officer or other person who is to execute it If the name is left blank the warrant is invalid—Emp v Gama 1913 P R 16 14 Cr L J 142 A warrant not addressed to a bailiff as required by Form 154 of Sch V of this Code or to any other person is not valid—Mahammad Daksh v King Emp 1904 P R 16

Language of warrant —A warrant should be written in the language of the District from which it is issued. If sent to another District or Province where a different language is in ordinary use it should be invariably accompanied by a translation—Caf G R and C O p 3, Bom H C Cr Civ p 10

Warrant by telegram —A Court should not issue a judicial order or communicate the purport of a warrant or process by telegram—N W P Reg and Ord p 71

150 Shall remain in force —When the law has not fixed any period limiting the duration of a warrant the presumption is that it remains valid until it is executed—Emp v Alloomiya 28 Bom 129

A warrant on which there is an endorsement for bail to be taken for the appearance of the accused on a particular date does not lapse on the expiry of that date after that date only the direction to take bail lapses but the warrant continues in force until it is cancelled by the Court which issued it or until it is executed—Raushan Singh v King Emperor 13 C W N 1091

151 Cancellation of warrant —A Magistrate has discretion on sufficient cause shown to cancel a warrant and issue summons instead—Imp v, Janal 1 S L R 69 Prem Keor v Mai Sham Nath 1908 P W R 20

When a warrant is cancelled it is at an end and cannot be re issued. Even where a subordinate Magistrate issued warrants for the apprehension of some accused persons for trial and afterwards cancelled the warrants the District Magistrate had no authority to direct the re issue of the warrants against the accused—In re Guru Charan 1 C W N 650

76 (1) Any Court issuing a warrant for the arrest of any person may in its discretion direct that security be taken by endorsement on the warrant that, if such person executes a bond with sufficient sureties for his attendance before the Court at a specified time and thereafter until otherwise directed by the Court, the officer to whom the warrant is directed shall take such security and shall release such person from custody.

(2) The endorsement shall state—

(a) the number of sureties,

(b) the amount in which they and the person for whose arrest the warrant is issued, are to be respectively bound, and

(c) the time at which he is to attend before the Court

(3) Whenever security is taken under this section the Recognizance to be officer to whom the warrant is directed forwarded shall forward the bond to the Court.

152 Scope of section —This section now applies to witnesses as well as to accused persons. In the 1872 Code there were instead of the words for his attendance before a Court the words to answer the complaint which applied only to accused persons—2 Weir 39

152A Bond —Under sec 513 the Court or officer may allow a sum of money or G P Notes to be deposited in Court in lieu of executing a bond

A Magistrate should issue a bailable warrant even in non bailable cases when the offence charged borders on the technical (e g when the head of a mutt is alleged to have committed robbery in respect of property which he admittedly claims to be his) and the accused is a man of position and respectability—Sivamulu v Emp (1911) 1 M W N 452 12 Cr L J 430

Bail bonds in criminal cases are exempt from Court fees under sec 19, Cl 13 of the Court Fees Act; but the bonds given by sureties are not—Ahmedabad Magistrate's Endorsement Ratanlal 126

153 Attendance before a Court —The Magistrate may issue a warrant of arrest for attendance before himself or some other Court, but he has no power to issue a warrant for the arrest and production of a person in order that he may give evidence before the Police in an investigation under Chap XIV—Q E v Jogendra 24 Cal 320

77. (1) A warrant of arrest shall ordinarily be directed Warrant to whom to one or more police officers, and, when directed issued by a Presidency Magistrate, shall always be so directed, but any other Court issuing such a warrant may, if its immediate execution is necessary and no police-officer is immediately available, direct it to any other person or persons, and such person or persons shall execute the same

(2) When a warrant is directed to more officers or persons Warrants to several than one, it may be executed by all, or Persons by any one or more, of them

154 This section merely directs that a warrant shall be ordinarily directed to one or more Police officers but it does not say that the name of that Police-officer should be inserted in the warrant as well as his designation—Bankey Behary v Emp 3 P L J 493 19 Cr L J 747 The reasons have been thus stated It would be extremely difficult to carry on the Police administration of the country if every warrant had to be directed by name to a Police officer and upon his transfer it were to become incapable of execution till the name of some other officer had been substituted in his place —Ibid In K E v Shankar Dayal 25 O C 111 24 Cr L J 14 it has been held however that a warrant which does not contain the name of the police officer to whom it was issued and to whom authority to make the arrest was given is irregular but it has been conceded that the evidence of the Magistrate who signed the warrant or of the Sub Inspector who executed it may supply the omission The Rangoon High Court also holds that if a warrant is directed to a police thana without specifying the name of any officer in the station it is at most a clerical error and does not invalidate the arrest if the accused has not suffered any prejudice—Mahin v Emp 3 Bur L J 18 A I R (1924) Rang 383

Warrant by Presidency Magistrate—A warrant issued by a Presidency Magistrate shall always be directed to Police officers Where such a warrant was directed to a person other than a Police officer though such officer was immediately available the High Court severely condemned the procedure—Queen v Syud Hossain 8 W R 74

Any other person—A Magistrate may under this section direct a warrant to an unofficial person only when its immediate execution is necessary and when he cannot immediately obtain the assistance of the Police—Queen v Surendra Nath Roy 13 W R 27

78. (1) A District Magistrate or Sub divisional Magistrate may direct a warrant to any landholder farmer or manager of land within his district or sub division for the arrest of any escaped convict proclaimed offender or person who has been accused of a non bailable offence and who eluded pursuit

(2) Such landholder, farmer or manager shall acknowledge in writing the receipt of the warrant and shall execute it if the person for whose arrest it was issued is in or enters on his land or farm or the land under his charge

(3) When the person against whom such warrant is issued is arrested he shall be made over with the warrant to the nearest police-officer who shall cause him to be taken before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case unless security is taken under section 76;

79 A warrant directed to any police-officer may also be executed by any other police-officer whose name is endorsed upon the warrant by the officer to whom it is directed or endorsed

155 Endorsement —If a warrant directed to a police officer is executed by another officer without endorsement (e g if a warrant addressed to the bailiff of the Court is executed by a naiib nazir and process server without any endorsement by the bailiff) the execution is illegal—Ghasita v Emp 22 Cr L J 145 3 Lah L J 346 The endorsement should be regularly made by naiib to a certain person in order to authorise him to make the arrest—Durga Tewari v Rahman 4 C W N 85

Again the endorsement must be made by the Police officer to whom the warrant is directed Where a warrant was directed to a Court Sub Inspector and the endorsement was made by the Court Head Constable it was held to be invalid—Durga Charan v Q E 27 Cal 457

Any other Police officer —A process serving peon is not included in the term any other police officer in the section—Durga Charan v Q E 27 Cal 457

156 Warrant under special Acts —A special warrant issued under sec 6 of the Bombay Gambling Act IV of 1887 cannot be executed by any other officer except the officer therein named—Crown v Mishu 3 S L R 56 Similarly a warrant under sec 45 of the Bengal Chowkidari Act (VI of 1870 B C) can be executed only by the person named therein—Sheikh Nasur v Emp 37 Cal 122 The Burma Gambling Act does not contain any provision for endorsement of the warrant issued under section 6 of that Act by the officer to whom it is issued to another officer—Po Thuas v Emp 12 Bur L T 165 21 Cr L J 9

80 The police officer or other person executing a warrant of arrest shall notify the substance thereof to the person to be arrested, and if so required shall show him the warrant

157 Notify the substance —Where a Police-officer simply shows the warrant to the accused but does not give him an opportunity of reading it, and does not notify its substance to him the arrest so made is unlawful—Satish Chandra v Jadunandan 26 Cal 748 Abdul Gafur v Q E 23 Cal 806 But if the Police-officer shows the warrant to the accused and gives him sufficient opportunity of reading the warrant itself the omission on the part of the officer to explain the particulars of the warrant does not invalidate the arrest, because all that this section requires is that the accused should have reasonable opportunity of knowing on what charge he is being arrested and before what Court he is to appear so that he may take steps for arranging for his defence—Bankey Behary v Emp 3 P L J 493 19 Cr L J 747

158 Show the warrant —This implies that the arresting officer must have the warrant of arrest in his possession at the time of making the arrest otherwise it is illegal—Emp v Amar Nath 5 All 318 see also Emp v Ganesh Lal 27 All 258

Merely showing is not sufficient An opportunity should be given to the person to be arrested by showing him the warrant so that he might read it (26 Cal 748) and see that the person arresting has authority—Al Dul Gafur v Q E 3 Cal 896 Satish Chandra v Jadunandan 26 Cal 748 Anand Lal v Empress 10 Cal 18 Q E v Tulsiram 13 Bom 168 Sheikh Nasir v Emp 37 Cal 12

81 The police-officer or other person executing a warrant of arrest shall (subject to the provisions of section 76 as to security) without unnecessary delay bring the person arrested before the Court before which he is required by law to produce such person

Person arrested to be brought before Court without delay

159 Further detention —When the arrested person is brought before the Magistrate the Magistrate cannot lawfully commit him to prison or remand him without sufficient grounds and in the complete absence of evidence there can be no grounds—Queen v Surendra Nath 13 W R 27

The warrant is exhausted as soon as the person arrested is brought before the Court If the accused is to be further detained it must be under some fresh warrant or order such as an order of remand under Sec 344 The warrant for further detention would be one of commitment directed to some jailor or other person having authority to receive and keep the prisoner—In re H Bourke 13 W R 1

The warrant is exhausted as soon as the person arrested is brought before the Court If the accused is to be further detained it must be under some fresh warrant or order such as an order of remand under Sec 344 The warrant for further detention would be one of commitment directed to some jailor or other person having authority to receive and keep the prisoner—In re H Bourke 13 W R 1

Where warrant may be executed 82 A warrant of arrest may be executed at any place in British India

160 Arrest outside British India —Where the accused was arrested by a constable of the Jeypur State, and was afterwards arrested by a British Constable in the Residency of Jeypur, the arrest was made outside British India—Empress v. Sheu Bun, 7 Bur L R 83

The arrest of a person at a Railway Station in a Native State (e.g. the Gwalior State) on a charge of an offence committed in British India is illegal. The Gwalior State has ceded to the British Government jurisdiction over the Railway lands for the administration of civil and criminal justice in connection with the Railway and not in respect of offences not committed on those lands and having no connection with the Railway administration—Radha Kishen v. Crown 1 Lah 406 21 Cr L J 303. So also the grant by the Nizam to the British Government of civil and criminal jurisdiction along the line of Hyderabad State Railway does not justify the arrest of a person on the lands of the State Railway under the warrant of a Magistrate in British India for an offence committed in a British territory and not committed in the Railway nor in any way connected with the administration of the Railway—Valammad Yusufuddin v. Q. E. 25 Cal 70 (P C)

83 (1) When a warrant is to be executed outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the same such Court may, instead of directing such warrant to a police-officer forward the same by post or otherwise to any Magistrate or District Superintendent of Police or the Commissioner of Police in a presidency town within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it is to be executed

(2) The Magistrate or District Superintendent or Commissioner to whom such warrant is so forwarded shall endorse his name thereon and if practicable, cause it to be executed in manner hereinbefore provided within the local limits of his jurisdiction

161 Warrant under Act XIII of 1859.—The provisions of this section read with Sec 5 apply to a warrant issued under the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act. Therefore a Magistrate cannot refuse to execute within his district a warrant issued by a Magistrate of another district under that Act—Queen Empress v. Chatu 1898 P R 11, Q. E. v. Kattayan 10 Mad 235, Q. E. v. Muthya 20 Mad 457, Gauri Shankar v. Mata Prosad 20 All 124

84 (1) When a warrant directed to a police-officer is to be executed beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the same, he shall ordinarily take it for endorse

Warrant directed to police-officer for execution outside jurisdiction

ment either to a Magistrate or to a police officer not below the rank of an officer in charge of a station within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the warrant is to be executed

(2) Such Magistrate or police officer shall endorse his name thereon and such endorsement shall be sufficient authority to the police-officer to whom the warrant is directed to execute the same within such limits and the local police shall if so required assist such officer in executing such warrant

(3) Whenever there is reason to believe that the delay occasioned by obtaining the endorsement of the Magistrate or police officer within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the warrant is to be executed will prevent such execution the police-officer to whom it is directed may execute the same without such endorsement in any place beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which issued it

(4) This section applies also to the police in the town of Calcutta

85 When a warrant of arrest is executed outside the district in which it was issued the person arrested shall unless the Court which issued the warrant is within twenty miles of the place of arrest or is nearer than the Magistrate or District Superintendent of Police or the Commissioner of Police in a presidency town within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the arrest was made or unless security is taken under section 76 be taken before such Magistrate or Commissioner or District Superintendent

86 (1) Such Magistrate or District Superintendent or Commissioner shall if the person arrested appears to be the person intended by the Court which issued the warrant direct his removal in custody to such Court

Procedure on arrest of person against whom warrant issued

Procedure by Magistrate before whom person arrested is brought

Provided that if the offence is bailable and such person is ready and willing to give bail to the satisfaction of such Magis trate, District Superintendent or Commissioner, or a direction has been endorsed under section 76 on the warrant and such person is ready and willing to give the security required by such direction, the Magistrate District Superintendent or Commissioner shall take such bail or security as the case may be and forward the bond to the Court which issued the warrant

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a police officer from taking security under section 76

C—Proclamation and Attachment

87. (1) If any Court has reason to believe (whether after Proclamation for taking evidence or not) that any person person absconding against whom a warrant has been issued by it has absconded or is concealing himself so that such warrant cannot be executed such Court may publish a written proclamation requiring him to appear at a specified place and at a specified time not less than thirty days from the date of publishing such proclamation

(2) The proclamation shall be published as follows —

- (a) it shall be publicly read in some conspicuous place of the town or village in which such person ordinarily resides,
- (b) it shall be affixed to some conspicuous part of the house or homestead in which such person ordinarily resides or to some conspicuous place of such town or village, and
- (c) a copy thereof shall be affixed to some conspicuous part of the Court house

(3) A statement in writing by the Court issuing the proclamation to the effect that the proclamation was duly published on a specified day shall be conclusive evidence that the requirements of this section have been complied with and that the proclamation was published on such day

162 Summons cases —This section read with section 88 shows that even in summons cases and as against witnesses a proclamation may be issued But to lay a foundation for the issue of a proclamation under this section with an accompanying order for attachment under Sec 88. It is necessary strictly to comply with the provisions of law relating to the issue of a warrant in a case where a summons is the ordinary mode of enforcing attendance—Yasin Khan v Emperor, 5 N L R 125

163 Conditions precedent to proclamation —The processes of attachment and proclamation are not to issue whenever a warrant fails of its effect. Before issuing a proclamation the officer sent to serve the warrant must be examined as to the measures adopted by him to serve it. If on his evidence or in any other manner the Magistrate is satisfied that the accused is absconding or concealing then and then only the processes of proclamation and attachment may be issued—Bishonath Petitioner, 3 W R 63 Queen v Runjeet Santal 6 W R 73 King Emp v Po Ni, 3 L B R 116 In re Ramkishore 19 W R 12 Yasin Khan v Emp 5 N L R 15

The previous issue of a warrant against the person whose attendance is required before the Court is a necessary condition. Therefore if the Court has no authority to issue a warrant an order for the issue of proclamation and a subsequent order for attachment are illegal—Kanwar Singh v Q E 1893 P R 15 In re Ramyibat 14 Bom L R 889. If a warrant is not served upon the accused the proclamation and subsequent order of attachment are illegal—Emp v Jina Badhar 14 Bom L R 163 13 Cr L J 293

164 Absconding —The term abscond does not necessarily imply change of place. Its etymological and ordinary sense is to hide oneself and it matters not if a person departs from his place or remains in it if he conceals himself. In either case he is said to abscond. Moreover the term does not apply to the commencement of concealment. If a person having concealed himself before process issues continues to do so after it is issued he is said to abscond—Srinivasa Aiyengar v Queen, 1 Mad 393

To be deemed an absconder one need not be proclaimed as such under this section. But an absent person should not be too readily assumed to be an absconder without due inquiry and notice—2 Weir 40

A man who files a petition against an order issuing the warrant and takes steps to procure the order of a superior Court that he should be allowed to remain on bail after such warrant has been issued cannot be said to be absconding or concealing himself and a Magistrate is not justified in proceeding under this section—Qamardin v Emp 19 P L R 66 23 Cr L J 451

165 Mode of publication —The provisions of subsection (2) as to the mode of publishing a proclamation are perfectly clear and explicit in their terms and failure to comply with the rules will vitiate the subsequent attachment and sale—Utan Jan v Abdul 27 All 572 Where the provisions of clause (a) were not complied with at all and although the provisions of clause (b) and (c) were complied with the proclamation did not specify a place and a time for the appearance of the absconder held that the proclamation was not made according to law—Abdullah v Jitu 22 All 216 (218), Abdul v Kazim 1904 A W N 159 (cited in 27 All 572 at p 513)

But where the proclamation was made and was read and published in the places where the absconders were most likely to hear of them but a copy was not affixed to the Court house the flaw would in no way prejudice the proceedings and would be cured by section 537—Mali v Crown 1917 P R 39 18 Cr I J 979

The most important part of the publication is the publishing of the proclamation in the accused's place of residence and it is from the date of such publication that the 30 days should be counted—Mali Singh v Emp 1917 P R 6 17 Cr L J 414 Q E v Subbarayar 19 Mad 3

Burden of proof —It is on the prosecution to prove that the proclamation was made in the manner prescribed by this section—Inore Pandya Vayak 7 Mad 436

166 Thirty days' time —The period of thirty days is to run from the date of publishing such proclamation i e from the date of the complete publication by doing all that is required under subsection () of this section—In re Ram Ashore 19 W R 11

The rules prescribed by this section with regard to time and place are imperative and if the date fixed for the appearance of the accused is less than 30 days from the date of publishing the proclamation it is illegal and all subsequent proceedings (attachment and sale) will also be invalid and must be quashed—Emp v Mullan Singh 1919 P R 32 21 Cr L J 210 Q E v Subbarayar 19 Mad 3 In re Subba Naichen 17 M I J 438

167 Disobedience to proclamation —An accused person against whom a proclamation has been issued must until he has surrendered be regarded as in contempt and the Court will not entertain any application on his behalf He must appear before the Magistrate and apply to him to be discharged on the ground that the warrant is informal or offer some explanation by way of purging his contempt and at the same time application may be made for the release of his property It will then be the duty of the Magistrate to determine judicially whether the warrant was valid and when he has done so the person against whom and whose property the warrant was respectively issued may if he be so advised apply for the resumption of proceedings—Q v Bistekur 2 A W P H C P 4111 Q v Homesh Chandra 5 W R 71

168 Statement in writing —When there is no endorsement or statement in writing made by the Court validating the proclamation the proclamation is not made according to law and the subsequent attachment and sale are invalid—Mian Jan v Abdul 27 All 572 Abdulla v Jitu 22 All 216 The Magistrate ought to take particular care to preserve the proclamation and there must be records in the Court to show that the formalities were strictly observed Where such records were lost (e g where neither the proclamation nor its copy was forthcoming) the High Court set aside the proclamation and attachment and restored the property to the owner—Erip v Jina Badhar 14 Bom L R 163 13 Cr L J 293

The statement in writing should state clearly that the proclamation was duly published and should also mention the date of publishing the proclamation Where the validating order merely stated that the proclamation was duly published but omitted to specify the date of the publication held that it could not be considered as a conclusive evidence that the requirements of Sec 87 had been complied with—Erip v Mullan Singh 1919 P R 3 1 Cr L J 210

88 (1) The Court issuing a proclamation under section 87 may at any time order the attachment of any property moveable or immovable or both belonging to the proclaimed person

Attachment of property of person absconding

(2) Such order shall authorize the attachment of any property belonging to such person within the district in which it is made and it shall authorize the attachment of any property belonging to such person without such district when endorsed by the Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within whose district such property is situate

(3) If the property ordered to be attached is a debt or other moveable property the attachment under this section shall be made—

- (a) by seizure or
- (b) by the appointment of a receiver, or
- (c) by an order in writing prohibiting the delivery of such property to the proclaimed person or to any one on his behalf, or
- (d) by all or any two of such methods as the Court thinks fit

(4) If the property ordered to be attached is immoveable the attachment under this section shall in the case of lands paying revenue to Government be made through the Collector of the district in which the land is situate, and in all other cases—

- (e) by taking possession or
- (f) by the appointment of a receiver or
- (g) by an order in writing prohibiting the payment of rent or delivery of property to the proclaimed person or to any one on his behalf, or
- (h) by all or any two of such methods as the Court thinks fit

(5) If the property ordered to be attached consists of livestock or is of a perishable nature the Court may if it thinks it expedient, order immediate sale thereof and in such case the proceeds of the sale shall abide the order of the Court,

(6) The powers, duties and liabilities of a receiver appointed under this section shall be the same as those of a receiver appointed under Chapter XXXVI of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882

(6A) If any claim is preferred to or objection made to the attachment of any property attached under this section within six months from the date of such attachment, by any person other than the proclaimed person on the ground that the claimant or objector has an interest in such property and that such interest is not liable to attachment under this section, the claim or objection shall be inquired into, and may be allowed or disallowed in whole or in part,

Provided that any claim preferred or objection made within the period allowed by this sub-section may, in the event of the death of the claimant or objector, be continued by his legal representative

(6B) Claims or objections under sub-section (6A) may be preferred or made in the Court by which the order of attachment is issued or, if the claim or objection is in respect of property attached under an order endorsed by a District Magistrate or Chief

168 Statement in writing —When there is no endorsement or statement in writing made by the Court validating the proclamation, the proclamation is not made according to law and the subsequent attachment and sale are invalid—Mian Jan v Abdul 27 All 572 Abdulla v Jitu, 22 All 216 The Magistrate ought to take particular care to preserve the proclamation and there must be records in the Court to show that the formalities were strictly observed Where such records were lost (e g where neither the proclamation nor its copy was forthcoming) the High Court set aside the proclamation and attachment and restored the property to the owner—Emp v Jina Badhar 14 Bom L R 163 13 Cr L J 293

The statement in writing should state clearly that the proclamation was duly published and should also mention the date of publishing the proclamation Where the validating order merely stated that the proclamation was duly published but omitted to specify the date of the publication held that it could not be considered as a conclusive evidence that the requirements of Sec 87 had been complied with—Emp v Mullan Singh 1919 P R 32 21 Cr L J 210

88 (1) The Court issuing a proclamation under section 87 may at any time order the attachment of any property moveable or immovable or both belonging to the proclaimed person

(2) Such order shall authorize the attachment of any property belonging to such person within the district in which it is made, and it shall authorize the attachment of any property belonging to such person without such district when endorsed by the Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within whose district such property is situate

(3) If the property ordered to be attached is a debt or other moveable property, the attachment under this section shall be made—

- (a) by seizure, or
- (b) by the appointment of a receiver, or
- (c) by an order in writing prohibiting the delivery of such property to the proclaimed person or to any one on his behalf, or
- (d) by all or any two of such methods, as the Court thinks fit

(4) If the property ordered to be attached is immoveable the attachment under this section shall in the case of lands paying revenue to Government be made through the Collector of the district in which the land is situate, and in all other cases—

- (e) by taking possession, or
- (f) by the appointment of a receiver, or
- (g) by an order in writing prohibiting the payment of rent or delivery of property to the proclaimed person or to any one on his behalf, or
- (h) by all or any two of such methods, as the Court thinks fit

(5) If the property ordered to be attached consists of livestock or is of a perishable nature the Court may, if it thinks it expedient, order immediate sale thereof and in such case the proceeds of the sale shall abide the order of the Court,

(6) The powers, duties and liabilities of a receiver appointed under this section shall be the same as those of a receiver appointed under Chapter XXXVI of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882

(6A) If any claim is preferred to, or objection made to the attachment of, any property attached under this section within six months from the date of such attachment, by any person other than the proclaimed person, on the ground that the claimant or objector has an interest in such property, and that such interest is not liable to attachment under this section, the claim or objection shall be inquired into, and may be allowed or disallowed in whole or in part.

Provided that any claim preferred or objection made within the period allowed by this sub-section may, in the event of the death of the claimant or objector, be continued by his legal representative

(6B) Claims or objections under sub section (6A) may be preferred or made in the Court by which the order of attachment is issued or, if the claim or objection is in respect of property attached under an order endorsed by a District Magistrate or C

Presidency Magistrate in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) in the Court of such Magistrate

(6C) Every such claim or objection shall be inquired into by the Court in which it is preferred or made :

Provide that, if it is preferred or made in the Court of a District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate, such Magistrate may make it over for disposal to any Magistrate of the first or second class or to any Presidency Magistrate, as the case may be, subordinate to him

(6D) Any person whose claim or objection has been disallowed in whole or in part by an order under sub-section (6A) may, within a period of one year from the date of such order, institute a suit to establish the right which he claims in respect of the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive

(7) If the proclaimed person does not appear within the time specified in the proclamation, the property under attachment shall be at the disposal of Government but it shall not be sold until the expiration of six months from the date of the attachment and until any claim preferred or objection made under sub-section (6A) has been disposed of under that sub-section, unless it is subject to speedy and natural decay, or the Court considers that the sale would be for the benefit of the owner, in either of which cases the Court may cause it to be sold whenever it thinks fit

Change —Sub-sections 6A to 6F and the italicised words in sub-section (7) have been added by Sec 13 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below in their proper places

169 Proclamation and attachment —Having regard to the words at any time a Magistrate may issue a simultaneous order of proclamation (under Sec 87) and attachment (under this section)—Bhai Lal v. Emperor 20 Cal 117. Since the object of attachment is to enforce the appearance of the absconder, the attachment must immediately follow a

the proclamation and it is unnecessary or even illegal to wait till the time specified in the proclamation has run out and then to order attachment because the proclamation has not been obeyed—Espress v Mulchand Pewray 6 C P L R 38

170 Property—The words of the section order the attachment of any property moveable or unmoveable are enabling and not restrictive so that the Court may attach both kinds of property—4 M H C R App 48

But the Magistrate has no power to order the attachment of any property that does not belong to the absconder. He should be most careful not to interfere with or disturb the rights of third persons—Queen v Kisorce Pater 7 W R 35

The Lahore High Court holds that with regard to ancestral lands all that can be attached is the interest of the absconder and on his death the lands must be released in favour of his heirs—Shah Muhammad v Crown A I R (19 5) Lah 6-9 (1925) P L R 395 See also Sadhu Singh v Secy of State 1908 P R 18 and Niamat Ali v Secy of State 1915 P R 52 But according to the Madras High Court the undivided property of a coparcener of a joint Hindu family cannot be attached and sold under this section because his interest cannot be ascertained—In re Ciumlan, 2 Weir 43 Contra—2 Weir 43 (Footnote)

The unascertained share of a partner in the assets of the partnership which were then in the hands of a Receiver under a winding up order was not attachable such share not being property belonging to the defaulter—Abbott v Abbott 5 B I R 382 But the share of a judgment debtor in partnership with another person who alone was in possession of the property at the time of attachment was liable to attachment, but the attachment must be by prohibitory order and not by actual seizure—Thama Sing v Kalidas 5 B L R 386

171 Subsection (6A)—Claims of third parties—Before the addition of this subsection by the Amendment Act of 19 3 it was held in a number of cases that Secs 88 and 89 did not provide for the investigation by a Magistrate of the claims of third parties whose property had been attached as the property of the accused the remedy of the claimant was by way of a civil suit, as the question was one more for the Civil Court than for the Magistrate—Q L v Sheodihal, 6 All 487, Queen v Kisorce Pater 7 W R 35 Su Wa v King Emp 4 L B R 109, Q E v Kaudappa Ganudan 20 Mad 88 Emp v Gaman 1911 P R 8 These rulings are now rendered obsolete by the new subsection 6A which provides for the investigation by the Magistrate of claims and objections preferred by third parties

The proviso to the subsection provides for the continuance of proceed-

Presidency Magistrate in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) in the Court of such Magistrate

(6C) Every such claim or objection shall be inquired into by the Court in which it is preferred or made

Provide that, if it is preferred or made in the Court of a District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate, such Magistrate may make it over for disposal to any Magistrate of the first or second class or to any Presidency Magistrate as the case may be, subordinate to him

(6D) Any person whose claim or objection has been disallowed in whole or in part by an order under sub-section (6A) may, within a period of one year from the date of such order, institute a suit to establish the right which he claims in respect of the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive

(7) If the proclaimed person does not appear within the time specified in the proclamation, the property under attachment shall be at the disposal of Government, but it shall not be sold until the expiration of six months from the date of the attachment and until any claim preferred or objection made under sub-section (6A) has been disposed of under that sub-section, unless it is subject to speedy and natural decay, or the Court considers that the sale would be for the benefit of the owner, in either of which cases the Court may cause it to be sold whenever it thinks fit

Change —Sub sections 6A to 6E and the italicised words in sub-section (7) have been added by Sec 13 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below in their proper places

169 Proclamation and attachment —Having regard to the words at any time a Magistrate may issue a simultaneous order of proclamation (under Sec 87) and attachment (under this section)—Bhai Lal v Emperor 29 Cal 117. Since the object of attachment is to enforce the appearance of the absconder the attachment must immediately follow

the proclamation and it is unnecessary or even illegal to wait till the time specified in the proclamation has run out and then to order attachment because the proclamation has not been obeyed—Empress v Mulchand Pemraj 6 C P L R 38

170 Property—The words of the section order the attachment of any property moveable or immoveable are enabling and not restrictive so that the Court may attach both kinds of property—4 M H C R App 48

But the Magistrate has no power to order the attachment of any property that does not belong to the absconder. He should be most careful not to interfere with or disturb the rights of third persons—Queen v Assoree Pater 7 W R 35

The Lahore High Court holds that with regard to ancestral lands all that can be attached is the interest of the absconder and on his death the lands must be released in favour of his heirs—Shah Muhammad v Crown, A I R (1925) Lah 679 (1925) P L R 395. See also Sadhu Singh v Secy of State 1908 P R 18 and Niamat Ali v Secy of State 1915 P R 52. But according to the Madras High Court the undivided property of a coparcener of a joint Hindu family cannot be attached and sold under this section because his interest cannot be ascertained—In re Chinnian, 2 Weir 43 Contra—2 Weir 43 (Footnote)

The unascertained share of a partner in the assets of the partnership which were then in the hands of a Receiver under a winding up order was not attachable such share not being 'property belonging to the defendant'—Abbott v Abbott 5 B I R 382. But the share of a judgment-debtor in partnership with another person who alone was in possession of the property at the time of attachment was liable to attachment, but the attachment must be by prohibitory order and not by actual seizure—Thama Singh v Halidas 5 B L R 386

171 Subsection (6A)—Claims of third parties—Before the addition of this subsection by the Amendment Act of 1923 it was held in a number of cases that Secs 88 and 89 did not provide for the investigation by a Magistrate of the claims of third parties whose property had been attached as the property of the accused the remedy of the claimant was by way of a civil suit as the question was one more for the Civil Court than for the Magistrate—Q E v Sheodihal, 6 All 487, Queen v Assoree Pater, 7 W R 35, Su We v King Emp 4 L B R 109, Q E v Kandappa Gaundan 20 Mad 88 Emp v Gaman 1911 P R 8. These rulings are now rendered obsolete by the new subsection 6A which provides for the investigation by the Magistrate of claims and objections preferred by third parties.

The proviso to the subsection provides for the continuance of proceedings by the legal representative of a claimant or objector who may die pending the inquiry into his claim or objection

Subsection (6B) — We have provided for the case of claims to property in another district from that in which the order of attachment was made — Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Subsection (6C) — The subsections which the Bill adds to section 88 imply that the Court which issues an order of attachment or endorses the same under subsection (2) is to investigate and determine a claim or objection. We think that a limited power to transfer claims and objections for disposal to subordinate Magistrates would be useful and we have therefore provided that the District Magistrates may transfer such cases to Magistrates not below the rank of second class Magistrates and that Chief Presidency Magistrates may likewise transfer cases to Presidency Magistrates subordinate to them — Report of the Joint Committee (1912)

172 Subsection (6D) — We have provided a period of limitation within which proceedings in a Civil Court to establish a claim which has been disallowed by a Magistrate must be instituted — Report of the Select Committee of 1916. The language of this subsection may be compared with that of O XXI rule 63 C P Code

A civil suit is maintainable by the real owner against the Government and the person at whose instance the criminal proceedings were instituted to recover possession of the property attached with mesne profits and damages done to the property while it was at the disposal of the Government—Secretary of State v Jagat Mohan 28 Cal 540

173 No revision of order passed on a claim — It was held in Q E v Sheodhal 6 All 487 Queen v Kissors Pater 7 W R 35 Abdulla v Jitu 22 All 216 and Q E v Kandappa Goundan 20 Mad 88 that since the Code did not contain any provisions for the investigation of claims of third parties to the attached property the orders of Magistrates passed on claims of third parties were not judicial proceedings and therefore they were not open to revision under Secs 435 439 of the Code

Under the present law also though the claim proceeding held by the Magistrate would be a judicial proceeding still the Magistrate's order in such a proceeding is not liable to revision because the words subject to the result of such suit if any the order shall be conclusive show that the order is not liable to be contested in appeal or revision

Subsection (6E) — Release of property — This subsection did not exist in the Bills or Reports but was added (on the motion of Mr Ranga chariar) during the debate in the Legislative Assembly

The reasons have been thus stated by the mover of the amendment

The object of the proclamation and attachment is a compulsory process to compel the party to appear in obedience to the summons or warrant of the Court and there is no provision here ordering the release of property from attachment in case he complies with the condition contained in the proclamation. This is a slip I take it. Whereas section 89 provides that if within two years from the date of attachment any person whose property is at the disposal of Government appears and shows that he had sufficient cause for not appearing then the property shall be restored to him but if he appears within the time limited in the proclamation, there is no provision ordering the release of attachment. An attachment has got some legal effects as Honourable members are aware. It prohibits the party from alienating the property. It prohibits the Civil Court from attaching the same property over again and various other complications do arise. Therefore it is necessary that once the condition on which the attachment has been made is fulfilled the attachment should cease ipso facto—Legislative Assembly Debates January 17 1923 page 1199.

The High Court can interfere in revision with an order passed by a Magistrate refusing to release the property from attachment—Santia Singh v Emp, 25 Cr L J 82 (Lab)

174 Subsection (7)—Property shall be at the disposal of Government—Before the passing of an order declaring the property to be at the disposal of Government there must be a proclamation specifying a time within which the absconder is required to appear—Queen v Runjeet Santal 6 W R 73

The mere seizure of property of an absconder by the police does not confer any right to the Government unless and until proceedings are taken under secs 87 and 88 of this Code. Therefore where the Police seized certain property of an absconder in August 1911 but no proceedings were taken under secs 87 and 88 until December an attachment of the property in October 1911 made by a creditor of the absconder in a civil suit would prevail and the refusal of the Magistrate to hand over the property in obedience to the order of the Civil Court was held to be wrong—Subramanyam v A E, 6 L B R 57 13 Cr L J 368. But when proceedings have been taken under these sections and the property has been at the disposal of the Government no title can be conferred by an attachment and sale subsequently made in execution of a money decree by the Civil Court—Golam Abed v Toolseeram 9 Cal 861.

When the property has been declared to be at the disposal of the Government the title of the accused to the property is put an end to. The Government can regrant the property (which consists of vatan lands) to some other person. Such grant does not confer on the accused any right to institute a suit to recover the property from such person—Dattaji v Narayan 25 Bom L R 228 A I R (1923) Bom 198.

Time —The law does not lay down any express time when the order of forfeiture should be made if by mistake it has not been passed before the accused appears it may be passed after he has appeared if he does not satisfy the Court that he has not been evading justice—Bishonath Sarkar Petitioner 3 W R 63 But it has been held in In re Ravikishore 19 W R 12 that if an order of forfeiture has not been made before the person has come in or has been brought in it ought not to be made at all because by that time its purpose has been effected though even possibly by other means than that of the process that was evaded

Irregularity —An order of forfeiture under this section if in substance quite legal cannot be disturbed on the ground of an irregularity in procedure—Baijn Baul v Gajun 8 W R 61

Power to restore property —Property which has been declared to be at the disposal of the Government can be restored to its owner only by the Government and not by the Court—Government of Bengal v Mir Sarwarjan 18 W R 33 even the High Court has no power to make any order with respect to that property—Government of Bengal Petitioner 9 B L R 347

175 Sale —Where the land was subject to a lease the sale should be subject to the right of the lessees to remain in possession until the expiry of the lease—Ilam Din v King Emperor 1908 P R 9

Sale of revenue paying land should be done by the Collector and the procedure laid down in the C P Code for execution sale should be strictly followed See Cal G R and C O p 6

176 Setting aside of sale —Where the publication of the proclamation was not in accordance with law and the accused applied in revision to have the sale set aside and to have the purchase money refunded to the purchasers held that whatever irregularities there might have been in the publication of the proclamation when a sale has taken place and the purchasers have acquired some sort of title it is not open to the High Court in exercising its revisional power to pass an order affecting the title of persons (purchasers) who are strangers to the legal proceedings in which the order is made—Abdulla v Jisu 22 All 716 But the accused can institute a suit in a Civil Court for setting aside the sale and for recovery of his property from the purchaser if it turns out that the proclamation was illegal—Abdul v Razim 1904 A W N 159 (cited in 27 All 572 at p 574) Mia Jan v Abdul 27 All 572

But the Punjab Chief Court holds that it is within the revisional powers of that Court to set aside an attachment on the ground of illegality of the proclamation or defect in its publication—Mallu v Emp 1917 P R 39 18 Cr L J 979, Emp v Mullan Singh 1919 P R 32

89 If within two years from the date of the attachment of any person whose property is or has been attached property at the disposal of Government under sub section (7) of section 88 appears voluntarily or is apprehended and brought before the Court by whose order the property was attached or the Court to which such Court is subordinate and proves to the satisfaction of such Court that he did not abscond or conceal himself for the purpose of avoiding execution of the warrant and that he had not such notice of the proclamation as to enable him to attend within the time specified therein such property or if the same has been sold the nett proceeds of the sale, or, if part only thereof has been sold the nett proceeds of the sale and the residue of the property shall after satisfying thereout all costs incurred in consequence of the attachment be delivered to him

177 Scope—This section prescribes a remedy where there has been a good and legal publication of proclamation under sec 87 but offers no facility for contesting the validity of an illegal proclamation. In the latter case the person aggrieved has his remedy by a civil suit—Abdulla v Jitu 22 All 216 Abdul v Karim 1904 A W N 159 Mala Singh v Emp 1917 P R 6

But in two other cases the Punjab Chief Court has held that it cannot be said that the person aggrieved by an illegal attachment has no remedy except by a civil suit for the Chief Court has revisional powers which it would employ to annul such an attachment—Malli v Emp 1917 P R 39 18 Cr L J 979 (d approving Mala Singh v Emp 1917 P R 6) Emp v Multan Singh 1909 P R 32 21 Cr L J 210

178 Two years—An application under sec 89 not made within two years from the date of attachment is not entertainable—Mala Singh v Emp 1917 P R 6

And proves etc—The phrase within two years qualifies not only the word appears but also the word proves therefore it is not enough that the accused person appears within two years it is also necessary that the proof that the accused has not been absconding should be offered within two years—In re Asikanth 15 Bom I R 175 14 Cr L J 237

Forfeiture of property—Forfeiture of property of an absconding offender who appears within two years from the attachment of his property should not be carried into effect until after a regular inquiry into the cause of the offender's absence—In re Bishanath 3 W R 63

179 Restoration of property.—For the purpose of this section it is not necessary that the absconding accused should himself personally apply for the restoration of the property; the application can be made by any one on his behalf. But it is essential that the absconding accused should appear and prove the facts required, viz., that he did not abscond or conceal himself for the purpose of avoiding the arrest and that he had not notice of the proclamation—In re Nilkanth, 15 Bom L R 175: 14 Cr L J 237

A Magistrate's direction to his subordinate to write to the Collector and authorise the taking off of a certain attachment will amount to an order releasing the property from attachment—Jhundoo Singh, 5 W R 8.

After the sale of the property of an absconding accused, if an application by him for restoration is allowed, all that he can get is the nett sale-proceeds and not the property itself—Emp v. Fazalddad, 24 Cr L J 573 (Lab).

180. No civil suit.—Where the accused did not appear within two years of the attachment and the property was ordered to be sold, no civil action could lie to set aside the sale—Mirza Zowad Ali v. Hussain Bibee, 8 W. R 207 (civil)

Appeal:—An order refusing restoration of property is appealable, see Sec 405

D.—Other Rules regarding Processes

90. A Court may, in any case in which it is empowered by this Code to issue a summons for the appearance of any person other than a juror or assessor, issue, after recording its reasons in writing, a warrant for his arrest—

Issue of warrant in lieu of, or in addition to, summons.

- (a) if, either before the issue of such summons, or after the issue of the same but before the time fixed for his appearance, the Court sees reason to believe that he had absconded or will not obey the summons; or
- (b) if at such time he fails to appear and the summons is proved to have been duly served in time to admit of his appearing in accordance therewith, and no reasonable excuse is offered for such failure.

181. Scope:—This section applies to witnesses as well as to the accused. [But witnesses brought up under arrest should be dealt with not as criminals but simply as persons arrested on civil process Cal G R & C O P 7

This section empowers the Court to issue a warrant only in cases in which it is empowered to issue summons and not in a case in which it has no power to issue the latter. Therefore where no case is found against the accused and he is discharged by a Magistrate under sec 253 it is not in the power of the District Magistrate to issue a warrant for his arrest for a retrial until the order of discharge is set aside and the case is taken to his own file—Kanwar Singh v Q E 1893 P R 15

182 Recording of reasons—A Magistrate ought not to issue a warrant either in lieu of or in addition to summons in a summons case, unless he has previously recorded his reasons for so doing—Yasin Khan v Emp 5 N L R 125 Q E v Anant Pershad O S C 99 Bela Singh v Emperor 1918 P L R 50 19 Cr L J 443 Where an accused person has been let out on his own bond a warrant issued under this section without recording reasons is illegal. The recording of reasons is a necessary preliminary to the issue of a warrant and omission to do so vitiates the warrant such omission cannot be overlooked and cannot be cured by sec 537—Re Karuthan Ambalam 38 Mad 1088 17 Cr L J 132 In Mahar Singh v Emperor 18 A L J 1149 the omission by the Magistrate to record reasons for the issue of a warrant in the first instance was held by the Allahabad High Court to be a mere irregularity and not an illegality

The Calcutta High Court also holds that the provisions as regards the recording of reasons are merely directory and not mandatory. Therefore in a case in which the Magistrate had materials before him sufficient to justify the issue of a warrant and to which the Magistrate did apply his judicial discretion and the warrant was good and valid on the face of it and the Magistrate stated in the warrant the reasons upon which he relied the warrant was not invalid by reason of the fact that the Magistrate omitted to record separately in his order sheet the reasons which actuated him in issuing the warrant—Govt of Assam v Salehulla 51 Cal 1 (F B) 27 C W N 857 24 Cr L J 881 (overruling Sukheslar Phukan v Emperor 38 Cal 789) Magistrates should record their reasons specifically in writing in the warrant (though not necessarily in the order sheet) before issuing the warrant and should not be satisfied with merely signing their names to warrants in the form given in the schedule—51 Cal 1 (at p 21)

183 Issue of warrant in the first instance—Grounds—In the absence of special grounds mentioned in this section the Court ought to issue a summons—Yasin v Emp 5 N L R 125 A C v Po Ali 3 L B R 116 Great care should be taken that a warrant which implies personal arrest and restraint never goes forth when a summons to attend would be sufficient for the ends of justice and any attempt to cover or restrain a party who has been summoned only should be checked and punished—Punj Cir Chap XLI p 144

A warrant cannot be issued to enforce the attendance of a witness unless the Magistrate is first satisfied that the witness will disobey or has disobeyed the summons served on him—Sutherland 14 W R 20 or unless he believes that the witness will not give evidence voluntarily—In re Bourke 13 W R 1 or unless it is proved that summons has been duly served and in spite of it the witness did not appear—In re Abdoor Rahman 7 W R 37 King Emp v Po Nt 3 L B R 116

Where in proceedings under section 498 I P C the complainant stated on oath that a warrant should be issued for the attendance of the abducted woman or else the accused would remove the woman from their house held that the Magistrate was justified in issuing a warrant for the arrest of the woman—Mahar Singh v Emp 18 A L J 1149 22 Cr L J 111

184 Clause (b)—Proof of service of summons—A warrant ought not to issue unless due service of summons is proved But a report by the station writer that he served the summons is no evidence of service of summons under clause (b) of this section—K E v Po Nt 3 L B R 116

Bail—A Magistrate is competent to admit to bail a recalcitrant witness arrested under this section—2 Weir 39

91 When any person for whose appearance or arrest the officer presiding in any Court is empowered to take bond for appearance, the officer is empowered to issue a summons or warrant is present in such Court such officer may require such person to execute a bond with or without sureties for his appearance in such Court

185 Bond by Mukhtear—A bond by a mukhtear by which he undertook to produce a witness when called upon was held to be sufficient although no security for appearance had been taken from the witness herself—Q E v Kazim Husain 1901 A W N 35

Power to lock up—Even though a Magistrate may suspect that the witness who is present may in future be kept out of the way by the accused still it will not justify the Magistrate in arresting the witness and placing her in the lock up—Ibid

92 When any person who is bound by any bond taken under this Code to appear before a Court, Arrest on breach of bond for appearance does not so appear, the officer presiding in such Court may issue a warrant directing that such person be arrested and produced before him

186 Scope —Sec 9 has reference to the case of a person who is bound by a bond to appear in Court. It provides for a warrant only in case the person does not appear at the time when he is bound by the bond to appear and does not apply to a case where prior to the time for appearance arrest by warrant is sought to be effected. Such a case falls under sec 90—Re Karuthan Ambalam 38 Mad 1088 17 Cr L J 132

93 The provisions contained in this Chapter relating to a summons and warrant and their issue service and execution shall so far as may be apply to every summons and every warrant of arrest issued under this Code

Provisions of this Chapter generally applicable to summonses and warrants of arrest

CHAPTER VII

OF PROCESSSES TO COMPEL THE PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND OTHER MOVEABLE PROPERTY AND FOR THE DISCOVERY OF PERSONS WRONGFULLY CONFINED

A —Summons to produce

94 (1) Whenever any Court or in any place beyond the limits of the towns of Calcutta and Bombay, any officer in charge of a police station, considers that the production of any document or other thing is necessary or desirable for the purposes of any investigation inquiry trial or other proceeding under this Code by or before such Court or officer, such Court may issue a summons or such officer a written order, to the person in whose possession or power such document or thing is believed to be requiring him to attend and produce it or to produce it, at the time and place stated in the summons or order

Summons to produce document or other thing

(2) Any person required under this section merely to produce a document or other thing shall be deemed to have complied with the requisition if he causes such document or thing to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, sections 123 and 124, or to apply to a letter, postcard, telegram or other document or any parcel or thing in the custody of the Postal or Telegraph authorities

187. Court —It was held in Brojendra Kishore v Clarke, 12 C W N. 973, Clarke v Brojendra Kishore, 36 Cal 433, and In re Harilal, 22 Bom 949 that if there were no proceedings pending before a Magistrate he was not a Court within the meaning of this section, and could not issue an order under sec 94 or 96. But the Privy Council in the case of Clarke v Brojendra Kishore 39 Cal 953 (at p 966) has laid down that the words "Court" and "Magistrate" are convertible terms, and that Sch V, Form VIII contemplates the issue of a search warrant before any proceedings are initiated, and in view of an inquiry to be made

188. Document —This section deals with documents forming the subject of a criminal offence as also with documents which are or can be used only as evidence in support of a prosecution—In re Lakshmidas, 5 Bom L R 980. The words 'document or thing' are general and seem to cover any document, the production and inspection of which are necessary or desirable or will serve the ends of justice. When the premises to be searched are those of the accused person, the warrant issued under sec 96 need not be only for the document or thing in respect of which an alleged offence has been committed—Municipal Committee, Jhang v Md Hayat, 1914 P R 36 15 Cr L J 225

The document or thing must be clearly specified, see Pranhkan v King Emp, 16 C W N 1078

189. Necessary or desirable —Before the Magistrate can order for the production of any document he must judicially consider whether the production of the document is necessary or relevant for the purpose of the trial—In re Lakshmi Das, 5 Bom L R 980. The Magistrate cannot call for anything and everything from anybody and everybody. The document or thing called for must have some relation to or connection with the subject matter of the investigation or the inquiry, or throw some light on the proceeding, or supply some link in the chain of evidence—Nizam of Hyderabad v Jacob, 19 Cal 52. Before a person can be punished for the non production of a document, it is necessary to show that its production was material for the decision of the case in which the document was called for—Damri Ram v Emp, 4 P L W 65: 19 Cr. L J 217. A document is a necessary document even though it is necessary as a mere piece of evidence only—In re Lakshmi Das, 5 Bom. L R 980. It may be that the thing called for may turn out to be wholly irrele-

Whether the documents are necessary for the inquiry is a matter to be decided by the Magistrate at the time of issuing a summons under this section or a search warrant under sec 96—Mahomed Jachariah v Ahmed Mahomed 15 Cal 109 In a murder case the accused has a right to a copy of the statements made by the witnesses at the inquest inquiry, and if the record of the inquest proceeding is not in the Court the Magistrate has power under this section to call for it to be produced by the Police—In re Chanlet, 20 L W 745 26 Cr L J 426

190 Person in possession —The person called upon to produce need not be a party to the proceedings The Magistrate can order the production of things in the possession of the solicitor—Nizam v Jacob, 19 Cal 52

Person whether includes 'accused' —The provisions of this section apply to an accused and it is competent for the Magistrate to issue summons to an accused to produce a document or other thing (e g a stolen article) the production of which might incriminate him—Konda Reddi v Emperor 37 Mad 112 13 Cr L J 493, Mahomed Jachariah v Ahmed, 15 Cal 109 Nizam v Jacob, 19 Cal 52 The Magistrate has the power of issuing a search warrant under sec 96 to obtain documents in possession of the accused (Disser Missar v Emperor 41 Cal 261) and the issue of summons is a milder means of attaining the same end—Konda Reddi v Emperor 37 Mad 112 Contra—Ishwar Chandra v Emp, 12 C W N, 1016 and Bayrang Gope v Emperor 38 Cal 304 15 C W N 343, where it is held that this section does not refer to stolen articles or to any incriminating document or things in the possession of an accused person

191. Order for production —The order for production must be made on sufficient materials Where a complaint was made against a certain person before the Chief Presidency Magistrate who examined the complainant and directed a local investigation and an application was made thereafter by the complainant for summons under this section, and was granted by the Court after his further examination thereon, held that there were sufficient materials on which an order under this section could properly be made and that it was properly made—T R Pratt v King Emp 47 Cal 647 24 C W N 110 21 Cr L J 577

Inspection. —The jurisdiction of the Magistrate to order the production of a document or thing carries with it the jurisdiction to allow the prosecution the right of inspection But the Magistrate can order for production in Court he cannot allow the prosecution to inspect the entries in the account book kept by the accused, in his solicitor's office They

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the Indian Evidence Act 1872 sections 123 and 124 or to apply to a letter postcard telegram or other document or any parcel or thing in the custody of the Postal or Telegraph authorities

187 Court —It was held in Brojendra Kishore v Clarke 12 C W N 973 Clarke v Brojendra Kishore 36 Cal 433 and In re Harilal 22 Bom 949 that if there were no proceedings pending before a Magistrate he was not a Court within the meaning of this section and could not issue an order under sec 94 or 96 But the Privy Council in the case of Clarke v Brojendra Kishore 39 Cal 953 (at p 966) has laid down that the words Court and Magistrate are convertible terms and that Sch V Form VIII contemplates the issue of a search warrant before any proceedings are initiated and in view of an inquiry to be made

188 Document —This section deals with documents forming the subject of a criminal offence as also with documents which are or can be used only as evidence in support of a prosecution—In re Lakshmidas 5 Bom L R 980 The words document or thing are general and seem to cover any document the production and inspection of which are necessary or desirable or will serve the ends of justice When the premises to be searched are those of the accused person the warrant issued under sec 96 need not be only for the document or thing in respect of which an alleged offence has been committed—Municipal Committee Jhang v Md Hayat 1914 P R 36 15 Cr L J 225

The document or thing must be clearly specified see Prankhan v King Emp 16 C W N 1078

189 Necessary or desirable —Before the Magistrate can order for the production of any document he must judicially consider whether the production of the document is necessary or relevant for the purpose of the trial—In re Lakshmi Das 5 Bom L R 980 The Magistrate cannot call for anything and everything from anybody and everybody The document or thing called for must have some relation to or connection with the subject matter of the investigation or the inquiry or throw some light on the proceeding or supply some link in the chain of evidence —Nizam of Hyderabad v Jacob 19 Cal 52 Before a person can be punished for the non production of a document it is necessary to show that its production was material for the decision of the case in which the document was called for—Damru Ram v Emp 4 P L W 65 19 Cr L J 217 A document is a necessary document even though it is necessary as a mere piece of evidence only—In re Lakshmi Das 5 Bom L R 980 It may be that the thing called for may turn out to be wholly irrele

Whether the documents are necessary for the inquiry is a matter to be decided by the Magistrate at the time of issuing a summons under this section or a search warrant under sec 96—Mahomed Jackariah v Ahmed Mahomed 15 Cal 109 In a murder case the accused has a right to a copy of the statements made by the witnesses at the inquest inquiry and if the record of the inquest proceeding is not in the Court the Magistrate has power under this section to call for it to be produced by the Police—In re Chanlet 20 L W 745 26 Cr L J 426

190 Person in possession —The person called upon to produce need not be a party to the proceedings The Magistrate can order the production of things in the possession of the solicitor—Nizam v Jacob 19 Cal 52

191 Order for production —The order for production must be made on sufficient materials Where a complaint was made against a certain person before the Chief Presidency Magistrate who examined the complainant and directed a local investigation and an application was made thereafter by the complainant for summons under this section and was granted by the Court after his further examination thereon held that there were sufficient materials on which an order under this section could properly be made and that it was properly made—T R Pratt v King Emp 47 Cal 647 24 C W N 110 11 Cr L J 577

187 Court —It was held in Brojendra Kishore v Clarke 12 C W N 973, Clarke v Brojendra Kishore, 36 Cal 433 and In re Harilal 22 Bom 949 that if there were no proceedings pending before a Magistrate, he was not a 'Court' within the meaning of this section, and could not issue an order under sec 94 or 96. But the Privy Council in the case of Clarke v Brojendra Kishore 39 Cal 953 (at p 966) has laid down that the words 'Court' and 'Magistrate' are convertible terms and that Sch V, Form VIII contemplates the issue of a search warrant before any proceedings are initiated and in view of an inquiry to be made

189. Necessary or desirable —Before the Magistrate can order for the production of any document, he must judicially consider whether the production of the document is necessary or relevant for the purpose of the trial—In re Lakshmi Das, 5 Bom L R 980. The Magistrate cannot call for anything and everything from anybody and everybody. Before a person can be punished for the non production of a document, it is necessary to show that its production was material for the decision of the case in which the document was called for—Damru Ram v Emp, 4 P L W 65 : 19 Cr L J 217. must be first produced in Court where they can be inspected—In re Lakshmidas 5 Bom L R 978 980

Putting it in evidence —On production of a document the accused has no right to insist upon the prosecution putting it in evidence. The prosecution is entitled to determine whether it is to be put in evidence or not—Mahomed Jackariah v Ahmed 15 Cal 109 In re Lakshmi Das 5 Bom L R 980

Security for production —Where a Magistrate thinks that there are articles in a person's possession the production of which is necessary he can issue a summons under this section or a search warrant under sec 96 there is no section to enable him to demand security from the person for the production of the articles when required instead of issuing a summons under sec 94 or a warrant under sec 96—Purna Chandra v Sassi Blusan 7 C W N 52 But after a warrant has been issued against a person for the search of certain articles in his premises if such person offers an undertaking to produce the articles before the Court whenever required the Magistrate may stay execution of the warrant conditionally on the execution of the bond by such person for production of the articles in Court whenever called upon—Kishore Mohan v Hari Das 47 Cal 164 21 Cr L J 391

Lien —The mere fact that the person in possession of the articles has a lien over them does not affect the power of the Magistrate to order their production—Nizam of Hyderabad v Jacob 19 Cal 52

Punishment —Omission to produce the document or thing is punishable under sec 175 I P C

 Court or Court of Session wanted for the purpose of any investigation inquiry trial or other proceeding under this Code such Magistrate or Court may require the Postal or Telegraph authorities as the case may be to deliver such document parcel or thing to such person as such Magistrate or Court directs

(2) If any such document parcel or thing is in the opinion of any other Magistrate or of any Commissioner of Police or District Superintendent of Police, wanted for any such purpose he may require the Postal or Telegraph Department as the case may be to cause search to be made for and to detain such document parcel or thing pending the orders of any such District Magistrate Chief Presidency Magistrate or Court

192 Production of Post office records before Courts —The attention of all Civil and Criminal Courts in the Provinces of Bengal and Eastern Bengal and Assam is invited to the following departmental instructions which the Director General of Post Office with the approval of the Government of India has issued for the guidance of Postmasters on the subject of the production of Post Office Records before Court —

A summons from a Court of Civil or Criminal jurisdiction to produce any of the records of a Post Office or a certified extract from or copy of any such records must be complied with. The receipt of such a summons and such particulars as are known to the Post Master regarding the case should be at once reported to the Post Master General in case he should see fit to raise any objection in Court under secs 123 and 124 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) to the production of any of the records. When any journal or other record of a Post Office is produced in Court and admitted in evidence the Officer producing it shall ask the Court to direct that only such portions of the record as may be required by the Court shall be disclosed —Cal G R and C O p 7

B —Search warrants

98 (1) Where any Court has reason to believe that a person to whom a summons or order under section 94 or a requisition under section 95 sub section (1) has been or might be addressed will not or would not produce the document or thing as required by such summons or requisition or where such document or thing is not known to the Court to be in the possession of any person, or where the Court considers that the purposes of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code will be served by a general search or inspection

it may issue a search warrant and the person to whom such warrant is directed may search or inspect in accordance therewith and the provisions hereinafter contained

(2) Nothing herein contained shall authorize any Magistrate other than a District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate to grant a warrant to search for a document, parcel or other thing in the custody of the Postal or Telegraph authorities

193 Conditions precedent—Duty of Magistrate —

(a) Before issuing the search warrant the Magistrate must have before him some information or evidence that the document is necessary or desirable for the purposes of the inquiry before him—Moideen Brothers v Eng Thaung 9 L B R 45 10 Bur L T 216

(b) The Court issuing the search warrant must have reason to believe that the person against whom the search warrant is issued is not likely to produce the document or thing in his possession in pursuance of a mere summons or order under section 94 or a requisition under section 95 (1) of this Code—In re Mauekyi Sorabyi 5 Bom L R 1032 The issue of a search warrant is a judicial act and it is the duty of the Magistrate before issuing such warrant to satisfy himself by inquiry that summons may not have the desired effect Where without such inquiry the Magistrate issued a search warrant on the mere application of the complainant the order was ultra vires—Iyavoo Chetty v Jehangir 1917 M W N 494 18 Cr L J 837 Piyare Lal v Thakur Dal 1916 P W R 12 17 Cr L J 60

(c) A search warrant ought to be issued only after judicial inquiry and on proper materials—Mahomed Jackariah v Ahmed 15 Cal 109 Queen v Syud Hossain Ali 8 W R 74 In re Harilal 22 Bom 949 Rash Behary v Emperor 35 Cal 1076 Of course it is not obligatory on a Magistrate to wait until a preliminary inquiry is held and all the witnesses for the prosecution are examined and cross examined the Magistrate is entitled to act upon information which he considers credible provided that there is a complaint before him and the complainant is examined by him on oath or solemn affirmation—Q E v Mahant of Tirupati 13 Mad 18 In re Sinagurunatha Pillai 1910 M W N 818 8 M L T 416 If a complaint is laid before a Magistrate a search warrant issued on the complaint without examining the complainant is irregular If the Magistrate is about to issue a search warrant on the strength of information as distinguished from a complaint the Court should if feasible examine the informant on oath and if evidence cannot be taken on oath the Court should act with a due appreciation of the fact that it is taking upon itself the responsibility of issuing upon the basis of that information an order of a very serious nature involving the invasion and search of a man's house—Mulchand v King Emperor 8 A L J 517 The statement of a counsel who is appearing for the prosecuting complainant is not information on which a Magistrate is entitled to issue a search warrant—8 A L J 517 A telegram received by the Police is not a good ground for issuing a search warrant—In re Hari Lal 22 Bom 949

The provision of the law requiring the sanction of a Magistrate before the issue of a search warrant means that the Magistrate should apply his mind to the facts and ought not to issue a search warrant simply because a Police officer asks him to do so. When there is no inquiry or trial or other proceeding under the Code a general search warrant cannot be issued under this section. Thus in the course of an investigation which was being made by a Police officer appointed by the Government to inquire into the dealings with the Munitions Board a petition was presented by that officer to the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta stating that certain offences appeared to have been committed in connection with the dealings with the Munitions Board and praying for a search warrant against the firm of one T R Pratt. There was nothing in the petition to connect T R Pratt with those offences. It was held that there were no materials before the Magistrate on which he could decide that a search warrant should be issued—T R Pratt v Emp 47 Cal 597 21 Cr L J 313 24 C W N 403. An order under this section cannot be made to further a police investigation which may or may not result in an inquiry. The Magistrate is to form his own opinion upon the materials placed before him. He is not relieved from his duty by stating that he believed that the officer holding the investigation for the purposes of which the documents or things were required had formed a correct opinion—Jagannath Agarwalla v Emp, 24 C W N 405 21 Cr L J 573.

Record —Although there is no express provision requiring the Magistrate to make a record or keep notes of the examination of the person on whose application he issues the search warrant still some record ought to be kept to enable the High Court to form an opinion as regards the materials upon which the Magistrate acted—Jagannath v Emp 24 C W N 405.

194 Court —It means Magistrate Court and Magistrate are convertible terms and it is not necessary that the Magistrate in order to issue a search warrant should sit as a Court or that some proceeding should have been initiated before him—Clarke v Brojendra Kishore 39 Cal 953 at p 966 (P C) overruling Clarke v Brojendra Kishore 36 Cal 433.

195 Person —The word person includes the accused—Municipal Committee Jhang v Muhammad Hayat 1914 P R 36 15 Cr L J 225. A search can be made for a stolen article or incriminating document in the possession of the accused person—Bissar Misser v Emp 41 Cal 261. See Note 190 under sec 94.

196 Who can make the search —The Magistrate who is competent to issue a search warrant is also competent to conduct the search.

himself, see sec 105, Emp v Ganeski, 1884 A W N 213, Clarke v Brojendra Kishore 36 Cal 433. on appeal, 39 Cal 953 P C)

197 Only specific articles can be searched—The search must be for a specific article or thing and not for stolen property generally—Bissar Misser v Emperor 41 Cal 261 17 C W N 1209 The law does not authorise a search for anything but specified articles which have been or can be made the subject of summons or warrant to produce—Pran Khan v Emperor 16 C W N 1078 13 Cr L J 764, Mosdeen Brothers v Eng Thaung 9 L B R 45

A search ought not to be conducted for fishing out evidence This section contemplates the production of a specified or distinct thing which may be deemed essential for the conduct of the inquiry and the conviction of the accused and for that purpose a specified house or place may be searched It does not empower police officers or other underlings to make harassing domiciliary visits to inquire into the private concerns of individuals and to seize any papers under the bare chance of finding something tending to conviction—Queen v Syud Hossain, 8 W R 74, Mosdeen Brothers v Eng Thaung, 9 L B R 45 17 Cr L J 543 Therefore, where a Magistrate issued a search warrant for the search and seizure of all letter books letters bills and books of account in a man's house for the purpose of inquiry as to whether he had used or sold articles with a counterfeit trade mark it was held that the issue of such a search warrant was a gross perversion of the law—Mosdeen Brothers v Eng Thaung, 9 L B R 45. Piyare Lal v Thakar Das, 17 Cr L J 60

198. Extent of search.—In taking action under this section, the Court is authorised to go as far as is physically possible in the search The accused can perhaps defeat the Court by concealing or destroying the document or by having it concealed or destroyed, taking of course the consequences of such action, just as the accused in the dock can, when questioned under sec 342, thwart the Court in its search for truth by answering falsely or refusing to answer But the mere fact that the accused can so defeat or thwart the Court is no reason for holding that the Court is debarred from going as far as the section specifically allows—Municipal Committee, Jhang v Muhammad Hayat 1914 P. R 36 The Magistrate has power to issue a search warrant for the production of copies of the infringing book, proofs, plates, printed and set up matters, together with letters and orders with reference to the book, for the purpose of making an order under section 10 of the Copyright Act—Kishori Mohan v Hari Das, 47 Cal 164 21 Cr L J 391

o thing—Mahomed Jackaria v Ahmed Wahomed 15 Cal 109 In re Bhanji Ratanlal 677

Inspection —When documents and other things seized upon the premises of an accused by virtue of a search warrant are brought before the Court the Magistrate would have the power to allow the prosecution an inspection thereof. They stand when they are brought to the Court precisely in the same position as documents or things found upon the person of a prisoner at the time of his arrest—Mahomed Jackaria v Ahmed 15 Cal 109 In re Lakhmi Das 5 Bom L R 980 but he is not entitled to examine it all e.g. in case of account books the Court should restrict the examination to the particular book or portions of the book relating to the subject matter under inquiry or trial—Mahomed Jackaria v Ahmed 15 Cal 109

Seizure without search warrant —An order of the Magistrate to seize certain account books without issuing a summons under Sec 94 or warrant under this section is illegal—Hari Charan v Girish Chandra 38 Cal 68

Search warrant when to be executed, —A search warrant should be executed between sunrise and sunset. If for special reasons it is executed between sunset and sunrise such reasons must be reported to the D S P for the information of the Magistrate—Bengal Police Manual 2nd Ed, P 402

Issue of search warrant must be prompt —Where in a case of criminal trespass and theft the complainant at the time of applying for process prayed for the issue of a search warrant but the Magistrate after repeated applications made an order for the issue of warrant more than three weeks after it was held that although the procedure was not contrary to the actual letter of sections 96 and 98 still it was so dilatory that it could only tend to defeat the very object for which such a warrant was issued—Bilas v Ram Gopal 22 C W N 719 19 Cr I J 707

200 Stay of execution of warrant on security —Where the person against whom a search warrant was issued gives for the stay thereof and offers an undertaking not to sell copies of the infringing book but to produce them before the Court whenever required the Magistrate has jurisdiction to stay execution of the warrant conditionally on the execution of a bond to produce the copies in Court—Kishore Mohan v Hari Das 47 Cal 164 (See this case cited in Note 121 under section 94)

97 The Court may, if it thinks fit specify in the warrant the particular place or part thereof to which only the search or inspection shall extend, and the person charged with the execution of such warrant shall then search or inspect only the place or part so specified

98 (1) If a District Magistrate, Subdivisional Magistrate, Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, upon information and after such inquiry as he thinks necessary, has reason to believe that any place is used for the deposit or sale of stolen property or for the deposit or sale or manufacture of forged documents, false seals or counterfeit stamps or coin, or instruments or materials for counterfeiting coin or stamps or for forging or that any forged documents, false seals or counterfeit stamps or coin, or instruments or materials used for counterfeiting coin or stamps or for forging are kept or deposited in any place, or if a District Magistrate Sub Divisional Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate upon information and after such inquiry as he thinks necessary, has reason to believe that any place is used for the deposit sale manufacture or production of any obscene object such as is referred to in section 292 of the Indian Penal Code or that any such obscene objects are kept or deposited in any place, he may by his warrant authorize any police officer above the rank of a constable—

- (a) to enter, with such assistance as may be required, such place and
- (b) to search the same in manner specified in the warrant, and
- (c) to take possession of any property, documents seals, stamps or coins therein found which he reasonably suspects to be stolen, unlawfully obtained, forged, false or counterfeit, and also of any such instrument and materials or of any such obscene objects as aforesaid, and
- (d) to convey such property, documents, seals, stamps, coins, instruments or materials or such obscene objects before a Magistrate or to guard the same on the spot until the offender is taken before a Magistrate or otherwise to dispose thereof in some place of safety, and

- (e) to take into custody and carry before a Magistrate every person found in such place who appears to have been privy to the deposit, sale or manufacture or keeping of any such property documents seals, stamps, coins, instruments or materials or such obscene objects, knowing or having reasonable cause to suspect the said property to have been, stolen or otherwise unlawfully obtained, or the said documents, seals, stamps, coins, instruments or materials to have been forged, falsified or counterfeited, or the said instruments or materials to have been or to be intended to be used for counterfeiting coin or stamps or for forging or the said obscene objects to have been or to be intended to be sold, let to hire, distributed publicly exhibited, circulated, imported or exported

(2) The provisions of this section with respect to—

- (a) counterfeit coin,
- (b) coin suspected to be counterfeit, and
- (c) instruments or materials for counterfeiting coin, shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply respectively to—

- (a) pieces of metal made in contravention of the Metal Tokens Act, 1889 [I of 1889] or brought into British India in contravention of any notification for the time being in force under section 19 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 [VIII of 1878],
- (b) pieces of metal suspected to have been so made or to have been so brought into British India or to be intended to be issued in contravention of the former of those Acts, and
- (c) instruments or materials for making pieces of metal in contravention of that Act

Change —The italicised words have been added by the Obscene Publications Act (VIII of 1925)

201 Secs 98 and 96 —The Calcutta High Court has made a distinction between secs 96 and 98, and laid down that Section 96 contemplates the existence of a judicial proceeding in the course of which alone the Magistrate can issue a search warrant but that section 98 does not require a criminal proceeding as a condition precedent to the issue of a search warrant—Rash Behary v Emp, 35 Cal 1076 But See Clarke v Brojendra Ashore 39 Cal 953 (P C) which lays down that it is not necessary that there should be any proceeding before the issue of any search warrant See Note 194

202 Search without warrant —If there is no search warrant under this section the search is illegal and the occupiers of the house have a legal right of private defence in resisting it—Bajrang Gope v Emp, 38 Cal 304 (306) 15 C W N 343 But a police officer investigating a charge of theft is entitled to search without a warrant a house which he suspects to contain stolen property, in such a case his right to search is incidental to his right to investigate—Emp v Nirmal Singh, 42 All 67 (68) 17 A L J 1047, 20 Cr L J 695

99 When, in the execution of a search-warrant at any place beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which issued the same, any of the things for which search is made, are found, such things, together with the list of the same prepared under the provisions hereinafter contained, shall be immediately taken before the Court issuing the warrant, unless such place is nearer to the Magistrate having jurisdiction therein than to such Court, in which case the list and things shall be immediately taken before such Magistrate, and, unless there be good cause to the contrary, such Magistrate shall make an order authorizing them to be taken to such Court.

Disposal of things found in search beyond jurisdiction
Power to declare certain publication forfeited, and to issue search warrants for the same

99A (1) Where—

(a) any newspaper, or book as defined in the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, or

(b) any document,

wherever printed, appears to the Local Government to contain any seditious matter, that is to say, any matter the publication of which is punishable under section 124A of the Indian Penal Code, the Local Government may by notification in the local Official Gazette, stating the grounds of its opinion, declare every copy of the issue of the newspaper containing such matter, and every copy of such book or other document, to be forfeited to His Majesty, and thereupon any police officer may seize the same, wherever found in British India, and any Magistrate may by warrant authorize any Police-officer not below the rank of Sub Inspector to enter upon and search for the same in any premises where any copy of such issue or any such book or other document may be or may be reasonably suspected to be

(2) In sub-section (1) "document" includes also any painting, drawing or photograph, or other representation

Sections 99A to 99G have been added by Act XIV of 1922 (Indian Press Law Repeal and Amendment Act)

99B Any person having any interest in any newspaper, book or other document, in respect of which an order of forfeiture has been made under section 99A, may, within two months from the date of such order, apply to the High Court to set aside such order on the ground that the issue of the newspaper, or the book or other document, in respect of which the order was made, did not contain any seditious matter

202A When an application is made to the High Court under this section the High Court is precluded by section 99D from considering any other point than the question whether in fact the matters contained in the book were seditious or not. The High Court cannot enter into the question as to whether the Government Notification declaring all copies of the book to be forfeited complied with the requirements of section 99A—Bajnath v. K. E. 47 All 298 23 A L J 1 26 Cr L J 679

99D Every such application shall be heard and determined by a Special Bench of the High Court composed of three Judges.

Hearing by Special Bench.

99D (1) On receipt of the application the Special Bench shall if it is not satisfied that the issue of the newspaper or the book or other document in respect of which the application has been made contained seditious matter of the nature referred to in sub section (1) of section 99A set aside the order of forfeiture

(2) Where there is a difference of opinion among the Judges forming the Special Bench the decision shall be in accordance with the opinion of the majority of those Judges

Where the applicant is alleged to have published a series of seditious books the whole series must be looked to to determine whether the passages contained therein are seditious—Baigmath v K E 47 All 298

99E On the hearing of any such application with reference to any newspaper any copy of such newspaper may be given in evidence in aid of the proof of the nature or tendency of the words signs or visible representations contained in such newspaper which are alleged to be seditious matter

99F Every High Court shall as soon as conveniently may be frame rules to regulate the procedure in the case of such application the amount of the costs thereof and the execution of orders passed thereon and until such rules are framed the practice of such Courts in proceedings other than suits and appeals shall apply so far as may be practicable to such applications

section signed by the said witnesses, shall be delivered to such occupant or person at his request

(4) When any person is searched under section 102 sub section (3) a list of all things taken possession of shall be prepared and a copy thereof shall be delivered to such person at his request

(5) Any person who without reasonable cause refuses or neglects to attend and witness a search under this section when called upon to do so by an order in writing delivered or tendered to him shall be deemed to have committed an offence under section 187 of the Indian Penal Code

The italicised words have been added by sec 14 of the Crim Pro Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) For reasons see below

208 Witnesses —It is obligatory on the officer about to execute a search warrant to call on and get two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality to witness the search before he enters the place to be searched —Emp v Kwe Haw 4 L B R 213 The witnesses are to be selected by the officer conducting the search and not by any other person—Q E v Raman 21 Mad 83

The regularity and proper conduct of the search is to be secured by two or more witnesses the intention of the enactment is to ensure that searches are conducted with decency and in order and that no wrong doing such as planting of articles by the Police in the house searched should take place—Emp v Kwe Haw 4 L B R 213 Ah Shwee v R E 3 L B R 229 and that no false evidence may be fabricated—Ts Ya v Emp 7 Bur L T 143 15 Cr L J 441

Persons unconnected in any way with the Government and officialdom should be called to witness the search—Ah Shwee v King Emp 3 L B R 229 Therefore a Teahouse Goung in Burma is not a competent witness to a search as he is a police officer—12 Bur L T 269 so also the Head men of Wards in Rangoon being appointed by the Commissioner of Police and having to do many Police duties it is not advisable that witnesses should be chosen from that class as being Police officials they are not likely to have the confidence of men—Emp v Kwe Haw 4 L B R 213 Ah Shwee v K E 3 L B R 229 Emp v Khan Haw 4 Bur L T 91 (F B) In Ts Ya v Emp 7 Bur L T 143 (F B) it is held that Ward Headmen of towns other than Rangoon are competent witnesses to a search

It is objectionable to be constantly calling the same person to witness the search because such a practice is likely to prejudice the mind of the

trying Magistrate against the prosecution—M: Hauk v Emp., 4 L. B. R 121

209 Respectable inhabitants —Only those persons should be chosen as witnesses who can be reasonably relied on to secure the desired result (viz prevention of fabrication of evidence, and decent and orderly conduct on the part of the officers conducting the search) and in whose trustworthiness and ability towards the carrying out of the particular duty required of them confidence can be felt—Emp v Kwe Haw, 4 L. B. R 213. T: Ya v Emp 7 Bur L T 143 (F B) The intention of the Legislature is to exclude from the category of the inhabitants those persons in whom confidence cannot be felt and against whom a reasonable suspicion exists that they may not carry out the duty required of them—Ibid

A respectable person is a person who would be impartial and on whom the owner or occupier of the premises searched can prima facie rely—T: Ya v. Emp., 7 Bur L. T. 143 (F. B) 15 Cr. L J. 441. The word 'respectable' means 'respectable and independent'—Emp. v. Khan Haw, 4 Bur L T 91 F B. (following Rex v Hall, 1 B & C. 123), Sher Ali v. Emp., 23 Cr L J. 609 (Lah) Where one of the witnesses was a friend of the Sub Inspector and lived two miles away, and the other witness lived a mile away, held that the search was illegal—Ma Htazay v Emp., 4 Bur L J 2 26 Cr L J 827

210 'Of the locality' —For the purposes of this section a person living in a quarter within a part of the place to be searched may reasonably be regarded as an inhabitant 'of the locality,' even if a river flows between—T: Ya v Emp., 7 Bur L T. 143 The word 'locality' in this section does not mean the same quarter of the town as the place which is to be searched—Ah Sein v Emp., 4 Bur L T. 222; 12 Cr L J. 479 Where the witnesses lived in a quarter exactly half a mile west of the house searched in Rangoon, held that the witnesses lived within easy reach and in the same locality within the meaning of this section—Ah Poh v. Emp., 18 Cr L J 1009 Where the witnesses lived a mile or 2 miles away, held that they were not inhabitants of the locality—4 Bur L J 2.

It has been held in some cases that the fact that the witnesses are not men 'of the locality' is immaterial if they are 'respectable' men; the important point is that the men called in as witnesses should be persons of some standing whose word can be believed, not that they should be persons living within a stone's throw of the house which is to be searched. The stress is on the word 'respectable' and not on the word 'locality'—7 Bur. L. T. 143 (F. B); 18 Cr L. J. 1009 (Bur); and failure to call inhabitants of the locality as witnesses does not make a search illegal—Q. E v. Ramani, 21 Mad. 83. Satagopachari v. Satrugna, 23 M. L. J. 445

But the intention of the Legislature is to lay equal stress on the words 'respectable' and locality or rather to lay more stress on the word 'locality', for the Report of the Select Committee of 1916 runs as follows — We think that the power thus given to the police practically to compel the attendance of respectable witnesses from as near as possible to the place where the search is to be effected should go far to put an end to the objectionable practice of bringing semi professional search witnesses from a greater distance and will also prevent the frustration of searches by the unreasonable refusal of witnesses to attend which, we understand is by no means uncommon. If executive instructions are issued to the police that with the new sub section (5) to back them they are whenever possible to require the attendance of respectable witnesses from the immediate vicinity we think that a considerable improvement will be effected.

211 Right of occupant to be present—The language of sub section (3) is that the occupant of the place shall be permitted to attend during the search, and it means that he is to be given the option of being present and not that he is to be allowed to be present only if he demands it. This section permits the occupants of the search to be present at the search and this rule is not one merely of technicality but of substance in that it is enacted to guarantee the reality of the search and the discoveries made thereat. Therefore where the occupants of the house who were inside the room searched by the Police were after the discovery in their presence of a gun and after search of their persons arrested and sent out of the room and the search was continued it was held that the exclusion of the occupants during the search was not a technical but a substantial violation of the law enunciated in this sub section—Romesh Chandra v Emperor 41 Cal 350 (370 377) 18 C W N 496 15 Cr L J 385

The word occupant is not intended to cover every person who may happen to be in the place at the time but it refers back to the person mentioned in sec 102 i e a person residing in or being in charge of the place—Ramesh Chandra v Emperor 41 Cal 350 (377)

212 Search list—A search list prepared under this section is a proper evidence as to the matter contained therein viz the articles found and the place where they were found—Weir 47

After a search list has been prepared and signed it is not proper to make additions thereto subsequently but such additions however will not invalidate the whole search nor is the omission of unimportant articles a circumstance invalidating the search—Hlaung v Emp 7 Bur L T 163 15 Cr L J 323

But it is competent for the Court to receive evidence other than the search list regarding the things seized in course of the search and the places in which they were found. The provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act do not apply to the case of a search list prepared under this section—Solai Naik v Emp 34 Mad 349 (F B) 21 M L J 281 11 Cr L J 576 overruling 2 Weir 515

Non signing of search list —Refusal by a witness to sign the search-list is not punishable under section 187 I P Code (intentional omission to assist a public servant in the execution of his duty) because the assistance referred to in sec 187 I P C must have some direct personal relation to the execution of the duty by the Police officer. The signing of the list is an independent duty cast upon the witness whereas the word assistance in sec 187 I P C implies that the party who assists is doing something which in ordinary circumstances the party assisted could do for himself—In re Ramaya Naika 26 Mad 419 (F B)

In Ana Dewa Sing v Emp 4 L B R 134 it has been laid down that unless the search list is signed by witnesses the search would not be legal. But a more reasonable view has been taken in Solai Naik v Emp 34 Mad 349 cited above.

In the Bill of 1914 it was proposed to add another sub section (6) to this section as follows — The fact that any person so attending neglects or refuses to sign the list of the articles seized shall not affect the legality of the search. But this was thought unnecessary and omitted by the Select Committee of 1916 who observed as follows — We doubt if it would be wise to enact the new sub section (6) proposed by the Bill and we recommend that it should be omitted. We think that it will be sufficient to rely upon the law as expounded recently by the Full Bench in Madras (1 L R 31 Mad 349) which shows that the facts with reference to a search may be proved otherwise than by the production of the search list.

213 Duty of prosecution to summon search witnesses —The prosecution is in duty bound to call search witnesses at the trial unless it is of opinion that they would misrepresent facts and would mis state what happened. The fact that the prosecution thought that these persons had formed an opinion unfavourable to the prosecution story regarding the search, is no reason why those persons should not be called by the prosecution in as much as what these persons would be required to state in their deposition was what they observed and not what they thought—Munni Sonar v Emperor 9 C W N 438

Sub section () of this section suggests that while the rendering of assistance in making the search is imperative on the persons called upon to assist they are not compellable by the Inspector to attend the Court to give evidence without a summons in that behalf—In re Ippili Irappakka, 38 M L J 77 21 Cr L J 33

214 Refusal to attend and witness search —See sub section (5) If a person who is requisitioned by a Salt-Inspector to assist him in the search made under this section refuses to attend and witness the search, he is punishable under sec 187 I P C—In re Ippili Inagatha, 38 M L J 27 21 Cr L J 33

But the new sub section (5) now adds a further condition, namely that an order in writing must have been tendered to the person requisitioned to attend the search 'We accept the proposal of the Bill to penalise an unreasonable refusal or neglect to attend as a search witness, but would make it a condition precedent that the person in question should have been required to attend by an order in writing from the police-officer In order to make this clear we have in addition to the new sub section (5) made a small amendment at the end of sub-section (1)'—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

215 Irregular search —A search is irregular if it is conducted in violation of the police rules relating thereto such as the omission to make at the time a note of the articles found and where found the permitting of unauthorised persons to go in and out of the place searched, the omission to send up the articles found as soon as possible to the Magistrate, or the exclusion of the occupant of the place during the search But the effect of such irregularities is only to necessitate a careful scrutiny of the evidence of search, and if in spite of such irregularities it is found that no advantage was taken of them by the police they have no further effect (i.e. the search does not become illegal)—Romesh Chandra v Emp, 41 Cal 350 (368 371) 18 C W N 496 A search made without the presence of any witness is irregular, but such irregularity does not entitle the occupants of the place to exercise their right of private defence by assaulting the police officer, when it was not shown that that officer was acting maliciously and otherwise than in good faith—Queen Emp v Pukot Kotu, 19 Mad 349 Where the police-officer made a search without a warrant and in the presence of only one witness, and a constable entered the house to be searched by scaling a wall, held that the search was grossly irregular, but the occupants had no right of private defence, and any assault committed by them on the police was punishable under section 323 (though not under sec 332) I P. C.—Emp v Mukhtar Ahmad, 37 All 353 13 A L J 439 In a later Allahabad case, however it has been held that a search without witness is absolutely illegal, and the occupant of the house is entitled to exercise his right of private defence by assaulting the police officer so as to prevent him from entering the house—Emp v Nirmal Singh, 42 All 67 17 A L J, 1047 20 Cr L J 695

. If for any reason the officer making the search is unable to get two, or more respectable inhabitants of the locality, and a search is effected in the presence of one or more men available at the time leading to the discovery of an excisable article the accused who is found in possession of that article can all the same be convicted under the Excise Act if the Court is satisfied from the evidence that an offence has been committed. The irregularity in the proceeding leading to the search would not mitigate the offence or operate as a bar to the conviction of the accused—Abdul Hafiz v Emp A I R (1946) All 188

PREVENTION OF OFFENCES

CHAPTER VIII

OF SECURITY FOR KEEPING THE PEACE AND FOR GOOD BEHAVIOUR.

A —Security for keeping the Peace on Conviction

106 (1) Whenever any person accused of rioting, assault or other offence involving a breach of the peace, or of abetting the same or of assembling armed men or of taking other unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing the same, or any person accused of committing criminal intimidation, is convicted of such offence before a High Court, a Court of Session or the Court of a Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class, and such Court is of opinion that it is necessary to require such person to execute a bond for keeping the peace,

106 (1) Whenever any person accused of any offence punishable under Chapter VIII of the Indian Penal Code, other than an offence punishable under section 143 section 149 section 153A or section 154 thereof or of assault or other offence involving a breach of the peace, or of abetting the same, * * or any person accused of committing criminal intimidation, is convicted of such offence before a High Court, a Court of Session or the Court of a Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class, and such Court is of opinion that it is necessary to require such person to execute a bond for keeping the peace,

such Court may at the time of passing sentence on such person order him to execute a bond for a sum proportionate to his means with or without sureties for keeping the peace during such period not exceeding three years as it thinks fit to fix

(2) If the conviction is set aside on appeal or otherwise the bond so executed shall become void

(3) An order under this section may also be made by an Appellate Court or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision

such Court may, at the time of passing sentence on such person order him to execute a bond for a sum proportionate to his means with or without sureties for keeping the peace during such period not exceeding three years as it thinks fit to fix

(2) If the conviction is set aside on appeal or otherwise, the bond so executed shall become void

(3) An order under this section may also be made by an Appellate Court including a Court hearing appeals under section 407 or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision

Change —The words or of assembling committing the same which occurred in sub section (1) of the old section have been omitted and the italicised words have been added by sec 15 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (VIII of 1923) The reasons are stated below in their proper places

218 Object of this Chapter —The object of this Chapter is the prevention and not the punishment of offences and its provisions are aimed at persons who are a danger to the public by reason of the commission by them of certain offences—Emp v Iarian Satharam 11 Bom L R 743 Emp v Murl 1885 P R 43 This Chapter gives a certain amount of discretion to the Magistrates and the High Court must always be slow to interfere with that discretion unless there is an error of law—Emp v Raoji 6 Bom L R 34 In re Umbica Prosad 1 C L R 768 But the Magistrate should exercise this preventive jurisdiction under this Chapter with cautious discrimination and watchful care and see that the administration of this branch of criminal law does not become harsh and oppressive —Q E v Nga On L B R (1993—1900) 2 3

PART IV.

PREVENTION OF OFFENCES

CHAPTER VIII

OF SECURITY FOR KEEPING THE PEACE AND FOR GOOD BEHAVIOUR

A —Security for keeping the Peace on Conviction

106 (1) Whenever any person accused of rioting, assault or other offence involv-

Security for keeping the peace on conviction

ing a breach of the peace, or of abetting the same or of assembling armed men or of taking other unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing the same, or any person accused of committing criminal intimidation, is convicted of such offence before a High Court, a Court of Session or the Court of a Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class, and such Court is of opinion that it is necessary to require such person to execute a bond for keeping the peace,

106 (1) Whenever any person accused of any offence punishable under Chapter VIII of the Indian Penal Code, other than an offence punishable under section 143 section 149 section 153A or section 154 thereof or of assault or other offence involving a breach of the peace, or of abetting the same, * * or any person accused of committing criminal intimidation, is convicted of such offence before a High Court, a Court of Session or the Court of a Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class,

Security for keeping the peace on conviction

221 Other offences involving breach of the peace —These words refer to offences in which a breach of the peace is an essential or necessary ingredient and not to offences which merely provoke or are likely to lead to a breach of the peace—Ayru Samanta v Emp 30 Cal 366 Muthia Chetty v Emp 29 Mad 190 Kannookaran v Emp 26 Mad 469 Abdulla v Crown 2 Lah 279 22 Cr L J 709 Raj Narain v Bhagabat 35 Cal 315 Kuppa Reddiar v A E 47 Mad 846 (848) 25 Cr L J 1096 47 M L J 232

But according to the Bombay High Court the words involving a breach of the peace include offences which are offences because a breach of the peace has occurred or because a breach of the peace is likely to occur. And therefore when an accused person being convicted of an offence punishable under sec 504 I P C (insult with intent to provoke a breach of the peace) was ordered to furnish security to keep the peace it was held that the order was lawful in as much as a breach of the peace or a probability of a breach of the peace was an ingredient of the offence under sec 504 I P C—Emp v Sayad Yacoob 43 Bom 554 21 Bom L R 270 (dissenting from 30 Cal 366 and 26 Mad 469) The Allahabad High Court likewise holds that the word involving connotes inclusion not only of a necessary but also of a probable feature circumstance antecedent condition or consequence. That is an offence involving a breach of the peace' mentioned in sec 106 does not mean only an offence which necessarily involves a breach of the peace or of which a breach of the peace forms an ingredient but includes an offence such as the removal of a landmark (punishable under sec 448 I P. C.) which as a matter of common experience is often followed by serious riots and loss of life. Therefore where the evidence shows that the accused were prepared to commit the act of removal of landmark by a breach of peace and were only prevented from doing so by the other side running away held that the offence was one which came within the terms involving a breach of the peace' —Emp v Manik Lal 33 All 771 (dissenting from 30 Cal 93 30 Cal 366 35 Cal 315 and 29 Mad 190) Nauha v Kanhaiyalal 25 Cr L J 71 (Nag)

Upon a conviction of criminal trespass where the intention of the trespass is to commit a breach of the peace an order under sec 106 may lawfully be passed. Thus where the accused came armed with lathis to assault the complainant and aimed a blow at him which missed whereupon the complainant took refuge in his house but the accused pushed the door open and assaulted the complainant inside the house held that a breach of the peace was a necessary ingredient of the offence (criminal trespass with intent to cause hurt sec 452 I P C.) of which the accused was convicted and an order for security was proper in this case—Emp v Dharam Raj 42 All 345 18 A L J 300 21 Cr L J 388, Dulsh

219. Offences under Ch VIII, I. P. C. —In the Bill of 1914 it was proposed to include in this section the "offences which are likely to lead to a breach of the peace" But the Select Committee of 1916 changed those words into "offences punishable under Chapter VIII of the I P Code" and observed "We think it is better to enlarge the scope of this section by including all offences under Chapter VIII of the Penal Code than to involve the Court in an inquiry whether the offence of which the accused has been convicted, though not involving a breach of the peace, was nevertheless likely to have occasioned a breach"

A security can be demanded on a conviction for an offence under sec 147 I P C—Maharaj Singh v Emp, 20 Cr L J 760 (Nag); or on a conviction for rioting—In re Marimuthu, 32 M L T 315, 17 L W 577.

The words 'or of assembling armed men or of taking other unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing the same' which occurred in the old section have now been omitted, because these offences are covered by Chap VIII of the Indian Penal Code, and specific mention of them is unnecessary. The offence of assembling armed men is an offence under Chapter VIII of the I P Code therefore this section applies where armed men were assembled with the intention of committing a breach of the peace and an order for beating men was given, although no breach of the peace actually took place because the assembly did not go so far—Srihari v Lalkhan 5 C W N 250. So also the offence of being an armed member of an assembly (sec 144 I P C) or joining such assembly after it has been commanded to disperse (sec 145 I P C) is an offence under Chapter VIII of the I P Code and brings an accused under this section. The case of Yar Mahammed v Empress 1890 P R 3 in which the contrary view was held is no longer good law.

An offence under sec 149 I P C is excluded from this section for that section alone does not make any substantive offence—Chhedt Singh v Emp, 3 Pat 870 6 P L T 330 26 Cr L J 426

220. Assault —The word 'assault' as used in this section refers to the offence of assault as defined in section 351 I P C. An offence of causing grievous hurt under sec 325 I P C, though it involves the use of criminal force and is in that sense an assault does not strictly fall under the category of 'assault' as contemplated by this section and cannot form the basis of an order for security. Moreover, such offence does not always involve a breach of the peace—Dubri v Emp, 24 Cr L J 227 (Oudh). But where the offence of hurt was committed under such circumstances that it clearly implies the use of violence and a breach of the peace, e.g. assaulting a prosecution witness in a public place, the order for security was not improper—In re Ramaswami Thevan, 44 M. L J 485. 24 Cr L J 455

222 "Convicted of such offence" —This section refers only to parties convicted of rioting, assault, etc., and cannot be applied to cases where there is only a possible apprehension of a future breach of the peace. It is only when there has been a conviction, and not until then of the accused of the offence charged, that a Magistrate can resort to this section—Q v Hur Kumari, 24 W R 10. Therefore where a person was acquitted on a charge of unlawful assembly and trespass etc., the Magistrate would be in error in demanding security from him on the same evidence—Diloo Singh v Ootini Singh, 22 W R 9. So also, where the Magistrate only found that the accused threatened to beat the complainant, but did not convict the accused for assault or criminal intimidation, an order under this section was illegal—Subal v Ramkanat 25 Cal 628. The conviction must be for an offence specified in this section. Therefore, where the accused was charged with criminal intimidation, but was convicted of theft or unlawful assembly (sec 143 I P C) an order under this section was not legal—Kishore Sarkar v K E, 8 C W. N 517, Raj Narain v Bhagabat, 35 Cal 315, Abdulla v Crown, 2 Lah 279 (280) 22 Cr L J 709.

Annulment of conviction.—If the conviction is annulled on appeal, the order directing security abates ipso facto by virtue of sub-section (2) and it is not competent to the Appellate Court to order the security to be continued—Emp v Chajju Mal, 1895 A W N 141.

Summary trial.—An order under this section may be made even if the conviction takes place in a summary trial, provided the Magistrate has jurisdiction—Meghu v K E, 7 O C 338, Emp v Lachman, 1886 A W. N 181.

223 Magistrates empowered.—Since Section 18 confers full powers of a Presidency Magistrate on an Honorary Presidency Magistrate, the latter can take action under this section—Hassan v Yas Kubar, 7 Bom L R 833 2 Cr L J 770. If any Bench of Magistrates has first class powers, the Bench is competent to pass an order under this section—See sec 15 (2). The ruling in Q v Debheki, 21 W R 12 is no longer good law. A Sub Divisional Magistrate, even though he is a Magistrate of the second class, can pass an order under this section binding over a person to keep the peace for a period exceeding six months. The fact that the order carries with it an alternative sentence of imprisonment in case the security is not furnished, which will be beyond his ordinary powers under sec. 32, cannot have the effect of limiting the powers conferred on the Court of the Subdivisional Magistrate under this section. So long as the order was passed by a Court which had authority to do so under this section, and the period for which security was required did not exceed the limits he was authorised by this section to impose, the liability of the accused to be detained in prison unless he furnished security is something

v Emp 26 Cr L J 1462 (Lah) Where the accused is convicted under sec 323 I P C, he cannot be bound down to keep the peace merely on the ground that the parties were on bad terms There must be a further finding that a breach of the peace was involved in the occurrence—Md Rahim v Emp 23 A L J 1053 26 Cr L J 1457 A I R (1926) All 144

221A Offences involving no breach of the peace—(a) Merely being a member of an unlawful assembly (Sec 143 I P C)—Abdulla v Crown 2 Lah 279 Jib Lal v Jogmohan 26 Cal 576 Raj Narain v Bhagabat 35 Cal 315 Kaunookaran v Emp 26 Mad 469 Sheo Bhajan v Mosawi 27 Cal 983 Abdul Ali v Emp 43 Cal 671 20 C W N 197 an offence under sec 143 I P C is now expressly excluded from this section by the present amendment

(c) criminal trespass with intent to have illicit intercourse with the complainant's wife—Subal v Ramkanai 25 Cal 628

(d) merely causing disturbance to religious worship—2 Weir 47

(e) theft or mischief—Kaunookaran v Emp 26 Mad 469 Ram Charan v Umesh 1 C W N 186 Q E v Muniram Ratanlal 6*2

(f) breaking open a locked shop and criminal trespass—Emp v Kundan 1885 A W N 303

(g) house trespass with intent to commit theft—Morali v A E 4 L B R 277

(h) grievous hurt—Q v Kunhiya 4 N W P H C R 154

(i) robbery—In re Muthurakka 18 M L T 121 16 Cr L J 611

(j) offence under sec 297 I P C—Abdulla v Crown 2 Lah 279

(k) wrongful confinement—Md Afsal v Emp 24 Cr L J 271 (Lah) but if the accused is found to have violently seized another person tied his hands and wrongfully confined him in an open garden then it amounts to an offence involving a breach of the peace—Kuppa Reddiar v K E, 47 Mad 846 (849) 47 M L J 232 25 Cr L J 1096.

(l) defamation (even though the person defamed was provoked to commit a breach of the peace)—Emp v Syad Yacoob 43 Bom 554 (557) 21 Bom L R 270

(m) attempt to seduce married women and behaving indecently and immodestly towards them—Arun v Emp 30 Cal 366

When a person is convicted of offences which do not in themselves and apart from any other incidents come within the terms of this section it is incumbent on the Magistrate to record a clear finding with respect to the facts which in his opinion make this section applicable to the case—Baidya Nath v Nibaran 30 Cal 93 Sheo Bhajan v Mosawi 27 Cal 983 Jib Lal v Jogmohan 26 Cal 576, Kinoo Sheikh v Darastulla, 29 Cal 393

222 Convicted of such offence —This section refers only to parties convicted of rioting assault etc and cannot be applied to cases where there is only a possible apprehension of a future breach of the peace It is only when there has been a conviction and not until then of the accused of the offence charged that a Magistrate can resort to this section —Q v Hur Kumari 24 W R 10 Therefore where a person was acquitted on a charge of unlawful assembly and trespass etc the Magistrate would be in error in demanding security from him on the same evidence —Diloo Singh v Ootim Singh 22 W R 9 So also where the Magistrate only found that the accused threatened to beat the complainant but did not convict the accused for assault or criminal intimidation an order under this section was illegal—Subal v Ramkanai 25 Cal 628 The conviction must be for an offence specified in this section Therefore where the accused was charged with criminal intimidation but was convicted of theft or unlawful assembly (see 143 I P C) an order under this section was not legal—Kishore Sarkar v A E 8 C W N 517. Raj Narain v Bhagabat 35 Cal 315 Abdulla v Crown 2 Lah 279 (280) 22 Cr L J 709

Annulment of conviction —If the conviction is annulled on appeal the order directing security abates ipso facto by virtue of sub section (2) and it is not competent to the Appellate Court to order the security to be continued—Emp v Chajju Mal 1895 A W N 141

Summary trial —An order under this section may be made even if the conviction takes place in a summary trial provided the Magistrate has jurisdiction—Meghu v K E 7 O C 338 Emp v Lachman 1896 A W N 181

223 Magistrates empowered —Since Section 18 confers full powers of a Presidency Magistrate on an Honorary Presidency Magistrate, the latter can take action under this section—Hassan v Jas Anbar 7 Bom L R 833 2 Cr L J 770 If any Bench of Magistrates has first class powers the Bench is competent to pass an order under this section—See sec 15 (2) The ruling in Q v Bebheli 21 W R 1 is no longer good law A Sub Divisional Magistrate even though he is a Magistrate of the second class can pass an order under this section binding over a person to keep the peace for a period exceeding six months The fact that the order carries with it an alternative sentence of imprisonment in case the security is not furnished which will be beyond his ordinary powers under sec 32 cannot have the effect of limiting the powers conferred on the Court of the Subdivisional Magistrate under this section So long as the order was passed by a Court which had authority to do so under this section and the period for which security was required did not exceed the limits he was authorised by this section to impose the liability of the accused to be detained in prison unless he furnished security is something independent of the powers of the Magistrate in the matter of passing substantive sentences of imprisonment—Raja Singh v Emp 37 All 230 13 A L J 268 16 Cr L J 350

224 At the time of passing sentence —The order for security is to be made at the time of passing the sentence Where a second class Magistrate convicted a person for assault and sentenced him to a fine but ordered the sentence to be in abeyance pending the order of the District Magistrate for binding over the person and the District Magistrate ordered the accused to furnish security held that the order of the District Magistrate was bad in law—Crown v Nura 1901 P R 22 If a Magistrate of the 2nd or 3rd class is of opinion that the accused should be bound down under this section he must refer the whole case to a superior Magistrate under section 349 without passing any sentence himself—Rohimuddi v Emp 35 Cal 1093 The second or third class Magistrate when referring a case under sec 349 cannot even commit the accused Section 106 contemplates that before an order requiring security can be passed under it the accused shall have been convicted by the Court or Magistrate specified who is not inferior to a Magistrate of the first class Reading sections 106 and 349 together it follows that the conviction and order under section 106 must be passed by one and the same officer and when a second or third class Magistrate refers a case to a superior Magistrate for an order under section 106 the conviction and sentence must be passed by the superior Magistrate and not by the Magistrate of the 2nd or 3rd class Therefore where a third class Magistrate convicted the accused and then submitted the case to the District Magistrate with a recommendation that the accused should be bound over to keep the peace and the District Magistrate ordered security under this section the order was ultra vires and illegal—Mahmudi v Ali Sheikh 21 Cal 622

A second class Magistrate ought not to pass any sentence at all if he refers the case to a superior Magistrate for an order under section 106 Where a second class Magistrate convicted the accused under sections 147 and 325 I P C and sentenced the accused under section 147 I P C but passed no sentence under sec 325 I P C and forwarded the proceedings to the Subdivisional Magistrate in order that the accused should be bound down under sec 106 of this Code held that the action of the 2nd class Magistrate was wrong If he thought that the binding down was necessary he should have forwarded the whole case to the Subdivisional Magistrate without passing any part of the sentence (viz the sentence under sec 147 I P C) himself—Rohimuddi v Emp 35 Cal 1093

An order for recognizance or for security under this section must be passed at the time of deciding the original case If no such order is then made the only procedure open to the Magistrate is to take subsequent proceedings under section 107—Ram Adhin v Emp 21 A L J 839 25 Cr L J 965 In re Gobind 15 W R 56 If a Magistrate omits to order the accused to furnish security under this section at the time of passing the sentence he cannot afterwards upon receiving some further information (other than that which he derived from the previous trial) that the parties are likely to commit a breach of the peace pass an order under this section—Q v Powell 3 N W P H C R 96

An appellate Court can pass an order for security on confirmation of the sentence passed by the original Court. If the Appellate Court sets aside the sentence passed by the original Court but passes no sentence itself and makes an order for security the order is illegal—Crown v Nira 1901 P R 22 Reg v Bhaslar 3 B H C R 1

225 Order for security.—An order under this section can only be made in the presence of the accused. An order made at the instance of the prosecutor behind the back of the accused is bad in law—Reg v Dhaslar 3 B H C R 1

The security ordered under this section must be for keeping the peace. An order for furnishing security for good behaviour under this section is bad in law—Malabar v Emp 16 A L J 780 19 Cr L J 439

The security must be in addition to an award of punishment therefore a Magistrate cannot order security in lieu of other punishment—Crown v Nira 1901 P R 22

Who can be bound down.—Only the accused person can be asked to give security. Under this section a Magistrate is not authorised to demand security from the complainant (in a case under sec 323 I P C). If he considers it necessary to demand security from the complainant he must record a separate proceeding and give the complainant an opportunity to be heard under secs 117 and 118—Crown v Hallu 1907 P R 3. The Magistrate is not competent to take security from a witness for the defence on the ground that his evidence in the trial proved that he was one of the rioters—Q v Kadar Khan 5 Mad 380

Proportionate to his means.—The provision for taking security being a preventive measure intended to preserve future good conduct it should not be made an instrument of punishment by demanding excessive security disproportionate to the means of the person and thus making him undergo further imprisonment—Q E v Rama 16 Bom 37 Emp v Dedar, 2 Cal 384 In re Juggut 2 Cal 110 Emp v Kala Chand 6 Cal 14 Hasya v Emp 1901 P R 28 Ata v Emp 1900 P R 17 Ram Singh v Emp 1883 P R 1 Jayara v Emp 1890 P R 30 See Note 293 under sec 118

226 Cases when order should not be made.—An order for security should not be made when a sentence of transportation or imprisonment for a long time is passed—Kyaw Wa v K E 5 L B R 34 10 Cr L J 69 or where such an order would prevent the party bound down from exercising his lawful rights—Nanda Kumar v Emp 11 C W N 1128 thus where upon the complainant trying to take possession of the land in the possession of the accused the latter used more force than was necessary to prevent the complainant from taking possession and the accused was punished for rioting it was held that he should not be bound down under this section as such order would have the effect of preventing him from resisting any further attempt by the complainant to take possession of his land—Nahar v Emp 11 C W N 840 6 Cr L J 40 In Bepin v Pranukul 11 C W N 176 it has been held that if it is necessary in order to prevent a breach of the peace to bind down the party entitled to possession and if the effect of such order is to prevent him from taking possession of the property it is desirable that the other party should also be bound down under sec 107

227 Sub section (3)—Power of Appellate Court to direct security — The words including a Court hearing appeals under sec 407 recently added in this sub section by the Amendment Act of 1923 have removed the conflict of opinion which existed between the several High Courts as to whether an Appellate Court could direct security where the original Court (e g a 2nd or 3rd class Magistrate) was not empowered to pass the order It has been held in some cases that an Appellate Court can not pass an order under sub section (3) unless the person convicted has been sentenced by a Court not inferior to that of a first class Magistrate This result does not appear to have been intended and it is proposed to remove the restriction —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Thus it has been held by the Madras Bombay Allahabad and Patna High Courts as well as in Oudh C P and Burma that an Appellate Court can pass an order under this section although the original Court was not competent (being a 2nd or 3rd class Magistrate) to pass the order —In re Solai Gounden 37 Mad 153 14 Cr L J 574 (over ruling 29 Mad 190 and 30 Mad 48) Doraisami v Emp 30 Mad 182 Dharam Das v K E 33 All 48 11 Cr L J 480 Emp v Bhansingh 33 Bom 33 10 Bom L R 759 Tilak Patil v Emp 43 All 372 22 Cr L J 310 Baclan Singl v Emp 2 P L J 21 18 Cr L J 118 Hasa bag v Emp 19 N L R 154 Lachmi Narain v Emp 23 O C 380 22 Cr L J 276 Blarat Singh v Emp 16 O C 31 14 Cr L J 59 (over ruling 10 O C 287) U B R (1897—1901) Vol I page 9 (revision) The word also in sub section (3) plainly implies that the order may be independently made by an Appellate Court or by a Court of Revision in addition to those mentioned in sub section (1) and it is not implied that the power of the original Court should in any way control or limit the power of the Appellate or Revisional authority—Emp v Bhansingh 33 Bom 33

The Calcutta and Punjab Courts have however held that where the original Court was not competent to order security under this section the Appellate Court could not exercise such powers—Emp v Momin Ma'ita 35 Cal 434 12 C W N 752 Karim Baksh v Emp 19 Cr L J 20 (Cal) Eusafali v Emp 4 Cr L J 308 (Cal) Gopal Singh v A E 1908 P R 21 Radha Singh v K E 1907 P R 6 Lalkhan v Crown 1918 P R 5, Karam Singh v Emp 23 Cr L J 457 (Lah)

In view of the present Amendment the Calcutta and Punjab decisions are rendered obsolete

An Appellate Court can require the accused to furnish security even after the working out of the substantive punishment passed by the original Court and such an order would not amount to an enhancement of punishment under sec 423 (1) (b)—Miran v A E 1905 P R 21 Maharaj Singh v Emp 20 Cr L J 760 (Nag)

An Appellate Court can cancel an order of security passed by the original Court while upholding the sentence—Abdul v Amiran 30 Cal 101 But if the conviction and sentence are cancelled by the Appellate Court the order of security is also cancelled ipso facto under sub section (1) and it is not competent to the Appellate Court to order the security to be continued—Emp v Chajji Mal 1895 A W N 141

228 Revision.—This section gives a discretion to the Magistrate to pass an order for security and the High Court is reluctant to interfere upon a mere question of discretion unless the order is on the face of it such an improper exercise of discretion as to require interference—Emp v Dharam Raj 42 All 345 (346) 18 V L J 300 21 Cr L J 288 The High Court in revision set aside an order under sec 106 where the findings did not sufficiently and clearly show that the acts for which the accused were convicted necessarily involved a breach of the peace—Abdul Ali v Emp 43 Cal 671 20 C W N 197 17 Cr L J 241

B—Security for keeping the Peace in other Cases and Security for Good Behaviour

107 (1) Whenever a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity, or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace, or disturb the public tranquillity the Magistrate if in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding may, in manner hereinafter

Security for keeping the peace in other cases provided require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond with or without sureties for keeping the peace for such period not exceeding one year as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix

(2) Proceedings shall not be taken under this section unless either the person informed against or the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended, is within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction and no proceedings shall be taken before any Magistrate other than a Chief Presidency or District Magistrate unless both the person informed against and the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended are within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction

(3) When any Magistrate not empowered to proceed under sub section (1) has reason to believe that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity and that such breach of the peace or disturbance cannot be prevented otherwise than by detaining such person in custody such Magistrate may after recording his reasons issue a warrant for his arrest (if he is not already in custody or before the Court) and may send him before a Magistrate empowered to deal with the case together with a copy of his reasons

(4) A Magistrate before whom a person is sent under this section may in his discretion detain such person in custody until the completion of the inquiry hereinafter prescribed	(4) A Magistrate before whom a person is sent under sub section (3) may in his discretion detain such person in custody pending further action by himself under this Chapter

further action by himself under this Chapter." The reasons have been thus stated "We also recommend an amendment of section 107 (4), as we think that the powers conferred by the sub section as it stands are unnecessarily wide. We think that it will be sufficient that the Magistrate should have power to detain the accused in custody 'pending further action by himself under this Chapter,' and we have made this change"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

The words "if in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding" have been added during the debate in the Assembly adopting the phraseology of sec. 204, and the object of this amendment is to prevent the Magistrate from proceeding upon any and every information. The words "is informed" in this section are too wide and the amendment therefore makes it incumbent on Magistrates to be satisfied, by some sort of inquiry whether private or public, or by taking evidence whether in camera or in open Court, about the correctness and veracity of that information before they take any action. See the Legislative Assembly Debates, January 18, 1923 pp 1246-1254.

229 Object of section.—The object of this section is the prevention and not the punishment of offences. It is intended, not to punish persons for anything that they have done in the past, but to prevent them from doing in the future something that may probably occasion a breach of the peace. Therefore where offences have been committed, the proper procedure is to institute regular trials for those offences, and not to take proceedings under this section—Srikanta v. Emp., 9 C. W. N. 898, Emp. v. Manu, 25 Cr. L. J. 1226.

230. Information.—There should be reliable information as to the probability of a breach of the peace—Malik Sultan v. Bano, 1903 P. L. R. 115. The information must be of a clear and definite kind, directly affecting the person against whom process is issued, and should disclose tangible facts and details, so that it may afford notice to such person of what he is to come forward to meet—In re Jas. Prakash, 6 All. 26; Prankrishna v. Emp., 8 C. W. N. 180, Ainuddin v. Emp., 24 Cr. L. J. 230 (Cal.).

When a Magistrate receives verbal communication from certain persons, it is proper that he should order the institution of some inquiry into the truth of the matter before he proceeds to take action thereupon. It is not open to a Magistrate to draw up proceedings under this section upon vague and general statements which do not amount to any direct accusation or allegation—Grant v. Emp., 2 P. L. T. 669, 22 Cr. L. J. 745, Nurizund v. Crown, 3 Lah. L. J. 480.

A Magistrate ought not to act under this section upon the following informations.—A statement by a private person not upon oath or solemn

provided, require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond with or without sureties, for keeping the peace for such period not exceeding one year as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix

(2) Proceedings shall not be taken under this section unless either the person informed against or the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended, is within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction, and no proceedings shall be taken before any Magistrate, other than a Chief Presidency or District Magistrate unless both the person informed against and the place where the breach of the peace or disturbance is apprehended, are within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction

(3) When any Magistrate not empowered to proceed under sub-section (1) has reason to believe that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or to do any wrongful act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity, and that such breach of the peace or disturbance cannot be prevented otherwise than by detaining such person in custody, such Magistrate may, after recording his reasons, issue a warrant for his arrest (if he is not already in custody or before the Court), and may send him before a Magistrate empowered to deal with the case, together with a copy of his reasons

(4) A Magistrate before whom a person is sent under this section, may in his discretion detain such person in custody until the completion of the inquiry hereinafter prescribed

(4) A Magistrate before whom a person is sent under sub-section (3) may in his discretion detain such person in custody pending further action by himself under this Chapter

Change —The italicised words have been added by sec 16 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (LVIII of 1923) The words "until the completion of the inquiry hereinafter prescribed previously occurring in sub section (4) have been substituted by the words pending

further action by himself under this Chapter " The reasons have been thus stated : "We also recommend an amendment of section 107 (4), as we think that the powers conferred by the sub section as it stands are unnecessarily wide We think that it will be sufficient that the Magistrate should have power to detain the accused in custody 'pending further action by himself under this Chapter ' and we have made this change "—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

The words "if in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding" have been added during the debate in the Assembly adopting the phraseology of sec. 204, and the object of this amendment is to prevent the Magistrate from proceeding upon any and every information The words 'is informed' in this section are too wide and the amendment therefore makes it incumbent on Magistrates to be satisfied, by some sort of inquiry whether private or public, or by taking evidence whether in camera or in open Court, about the correctness and veracity of that information before they take any action. See the Legislative Assembly Debates, January 18, 1923, pp 1246 1254.

229 Object of section :—The object of this section is the prevention and not the punishment of offences It is intended, not to punish persons for anything that they have done in the past, but to prevent them from doing in the future something that may probably occasion a breach of the peace. Therefore where offences have been committed, the proper procedure is to institute regular trials for those offences, and not to take proceedings under this section—Srikanta v Emp, 9 C. W. N. 898; Emp. v. Mann, 25 Cr. L. J. 1216.

230. Information.—There should be reliable information as to the probability of a breach of the peace—Malik Sullan v Bano, 1903 P. L. R. 115 The information must be of a clear and definite kind, directly affecting the person against whom process is issued, and should disclose tangible facts and details, so that it may afford notice to such person of what he is to come forward to meet—In re Jai Prakash, 6 All. 26; Pranākrishna v. Emp, 8 C. W. N. 180; Ainuddin v. Emp, 24 Cr. L. J. 230 (Cal.).

When a Magistrate receives verbal communication from certain persons, it is proper that he should order the institution of some inquiry into the truth of the matter before he proceeds to take action thereupon. It is not open to a Magistrate to draw up proceedings under this section upon vague and general statements which do not amount to any direct accusation or allegation—Grant v. Emp, 2 P. L. T. 669. 22 Cr. L. J. 745; Nitigunnd v. Crown, 3 Lah. L. J. 480

A Magistrate ought not to act under this section upon the following informations.—A statement by a private person not upon oath or so

affirmation—Reg v Jwanji 6 B H C R 1 Chamaro v Kashi Chunder 8 W R 85 hearsay evidence—Mohan v Emp 21 Cr L J 560 (Nag) conversation out of Court with persons however respectable—Emp v Babua 6 All 132 personal knowledge of certain facts which he obtains from sources outside the record—Mathura v Emp 14 A L J 769 17 Cr L J 484

A police report is in itself a sufficient information on which a Magistrate may issue a summons but it is in no sense evidence upon which he can determine under section 118 whether it is necessary to take a bond to keep the peace or for good behaviour—Behari v Mahomed 12 W R 60 In re Brindaban 10 W R 41 When it appears that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace etc it is the duty of the police to lay information before the Magistrate having jurisdiction In laying such information the police should set out carefully the evidence on which they rely or the circumstances leading to the information—C P Pol Man 1 page 53

A statement of the complainant in the absence of the persons charged may be accepted by the Magistrate as credible information and may enable him to act upon it by issuing summons to show cause but it is not competent for the Magistrate on the appearance of the persons so charged to act upon his previous information and to pass final order without taking further evidence—Q v Nuseerodeen 2 N W P H C R 461 Q v Kristendra 7 W R 30 Similarly a report of a subordinate Magistrate is credible information to authorise a Magistrate to pass a preliminary order under this section—Egambara v Murugappa 2 Weir 51 Ex parte Nelli Kel 2 M H C R 240 but if unsupported by other evidence it cannot form a sufficient ground for final adjudication under section 118—Reg v Jwanji 6 B H C R 1 Reg v Dalpatram 5 B H C R 105

But the Magistrate is not entitled to initiate proceedings upon facts and information which had already been the subject of inquiry under Sec 107, or in connection with charges under the Penal Code brought against the same persons and which had ended in favour of the accused Thus where there have been a number of cases and proceedings going on for a long time between the parties and in all these cases the persons accused of the offences were either discharged or acquitted and the proceedings under section 107 fell through the Magistrate cannot initiate fresh proceedings under sec 107 upon the same facts and information when there are no fresh materials of any importance available in which fresh apprehension can arise of a breach of the peace The same facts cannot form the subject of repeated proceedings either under the Penal Code or under the Cr P Code—Konda Reddy v A L 41 Mad 240 18 Cr L J 878

231 Likely to commit breach of the peace.—The information must contain evidence of some specific conduct on the part of the accused from which a reasonable and immediate inference can be drawn that the accused is likely to commit a breach of the peace and it is only on information of this character that the Magistrate should initiate proceedings under this section—Run Bahadur v. Tslessuree 22 W R 79 Q v. Har Kumari 24 W R 10 Huree Mohar v. Kali Nath 25 W R 15 Q v. Abdul Haq 20 W R 57 Emp v. Shumbhu 1888 P R 21 The mere finding that the accused is a bad character and that it is not right in any way to leave him without a guarantee is wholly insufficient to justify an order under this section—Emp v. Shumbhu 1888 P R 21 Where the evidence on the record disclosed reliable statements that persons who were ordered to furnish security to keep the peace were men who had shown by their acts and general behaviour that their object was to disturb the public tranquillity (e.g. by wounding the religious feelings of the Muhammadans of a certain locality) it was held that the Magistrate was justified in making such order—Chunni Lal v. Emp 14 A L J 430 17 Cr L J 301

The information must shew that there is a strong and reasonable probability of a breach of the peace and not merely a bare possibility—Q v. Abdul Haq, 20 W R 57 Malik Sultan v. Baso 1903 P L R 115 Emp v. Chanbasawa, 6 Bom L R 862 The act likely to cause a breach of the peace must be an impending one and not one likely to happen at some future time it must be shewn to be in contemplation at the time of the information given and the fact that a person has done a wrongful act in the past should not give rise to the inference that he is likely to do the same again—In re Shivaram 6 Bom L R 663 In re Pasdeo 26 All 190 Q v. Hedarnath 7 N W P H C R 233 U B R (1897—1901) Cr P C 15 Thus the mere fact that certain persons had made preparations for disturbing the public tranquillity on the occasion of the last Muharram festival would afford no ground, after the festival had passed without the public tranquillity having been disturbed for inferring that they would be likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity at the next Mohurram and would not be a sufficient ground for binding them over—In re Basdeo 26 All 190 But security should be taken in a case where though the occasion on which the ill feeling between the parties (Hindus and Mussalmans) first came to a head had passed without any actual disturbances there still remained the probability of a recurrence of it in the near future in fact at any moment—Ajitha Prasad v. A. E. S. A. L. J. 1080 12 Cr L J 423

232 Wrongful acts that may occasion breach of the peace.—There are two distinct sets of circumstances in which a Magistrate may take action under Sec 107; first, where it appears that a person is likely himself to commit a breach of the peace or to disturb the public tranquillity, that is to say, by a direct act, e g., by committing an assault; and secondly, where a person may be the indirect cause of a breach of the peace or the disturbance of the public tranquillity by doing a certain act, but in the latter case the Magistrate may only take action where the act anticipated is a wrongful act. This section does not authorise action against a person who is expected to do an act which may cause a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity unless that act is wrongful, and the mere fact that the doing of a lawful act by certain persons may lead to the commission of a breach of the peace by other persons does not authorise the Magistrate to take action against the persons intending to do the lawful act, unless they are themselves likely to commit a breach of the peace or to disturb the public tranquillity—Nga Ti v Maung Kyaw, 11 Bur L T 59 18 Cr L J 512

Threats of violence are sufficient to indicate an intention to commit a breach of the peace and justify an order under this section—Surya Kanta v Emp, 31 Cal 350, Emp v Kallu, 27 All 92. Illegal collection of tolls accompanied with acts of violence and threats of violence in case of non-payment of tolls is a wrongful act likely to cause a breach of the peace—Bepin Behari v Emp 21 Cr L J 651 (Cal). An abetment by instigation of the offence of voluntarily causing hurt in a public place is a wrongful act justifying an order under this section—Barnes v Emp, 23 Cr L J, 394 (Nag)

The words 'wrongful act' mean an act forbidden or declared to be penal or wrongful by the criminal law, and not a mere improper act. The killing of a dedicated bull for the sake of its meat is not a 'wrongful' act—Pir Ali v Emp, 21 Cr L J 453 (Pat).

The following are not wrongful acts within the meaning of this section:—(a) Singing of ballads in open streets, although leading to an obstruction in the street by crowds collecting to hear the same is not a wrongful act—Ghulam Nabi v Emp, 1889 P. R. 13. (b) the grant of leases to tenants by the owner who is entitled to possession but is wrongfully kept out of possession, and the taking of possession by the lessee peacefully and without using violence, are not wrongful acts—Driver v. Q. E, 25 Cal. 798, (c) use of the word 'Amin' in a loud voice in prayers in a mosque—Khuda Baksh v. Emp, 1902 P. R. 15, Q. E v Ramtan, 7 All 461; Ataulla v Azimulla, 12 All 494, Jangu v. Amanulla, 13 All 419, Abdur Rahman v. Emp, 8 O L J. 282. 22 Cr. L J 590 (Oudh), (d) stopping the services of village barber and washerman being rendered to the complainant—Sh Jinuat v. Sh Rakesh, 7 C W. N. 32, (e) the opening of a cattle market by persons on their own land not far from an already existing cattle market—Mahu v Emp, 16 A L J 279: 19 Cr. L. J 437:

(f) mere use of idle threats and bombast—In re Chinnathambi, 9 M L T. 271 12 Cr L J 104

The Magistrate should have tangible evidence that some definite wrongful act is contemplated which act if committed is likely to occasion a breach of the peace therefore the fact that the accused had attempted to get up false cases and that he would probably continue to do so is not a ground of action under this section—Emp v Budhawa 1837 P R 64 So also merely being on bad terms with others (Emp v Balajee 7 C P L R 9) or being a quarrelsome head strong and contumacious person (Emp v Shimbhu 1883 P R 21) is neither a definite wrongful act nor likely to cause a breach of the peace So also, the mere fact that enmity exists between two parties does not entitle the Magistrate to bind down either party—Sher Khan v Emp 12 Cr L J 186 1911 P L R 126, Narendra v Emp, 1 A L J 418

233 Acts which amount to an exercise of lawful rights are not to be treated as wrongful acts necessitating an order under this section—Din Dayal v Emp, 34 Cal 935, In re Kashichandra 19 W R 47, Bepin v Emp 21 Cr L J 651 (Cal) The preventive jurisdiction of a Magistrate under this section must be exercised with caution Where its exercise may undoubtedly lead to the infringement of an undoubted civil right and where the breach of the peace apprehended by the Magistrate is a likely result of the enforcement of his legal right by a party in a legal way the Magistrate ought not to bind down the party who has the legal right in him—Din Dayal v Emp 34 Cal 935, Nga Ti v Maung Kyau, 11 Bur L J 59 18 Cr L J 512

Thus the right of protection of lawful possession is a lawful right which may properly be exercised not only to resist any unlawful attempt to interfere with the possession but also to defend oneself if it becomes necessary in the process Where therefore the lawful possession of the accused had more than once been threatened by a show of armed force, and he had collected a body of men armed with lathis and posted them on the property to resist any violence or interference with his possession, it was held that as the intention was to maintain an existing right, the accused was justified in adopting measures for the defence of his possession and that as there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace from his side, there was no reason either for punishing him or binding him over to security—Janki Prasad v Emp 18 A L J 157 21 Cr L J 337 Where a party has the right to take a procession along a particular road he cannot be bound down under this section because other persons object to his doing so and he insists on taking the procession along that road The proper course is to bind down the other persons—Feroze Ali v Emp, 12 C. W. N. 703 Where one of several co-sharer landlords sought to make a measure-

take action under Sec 107 first where it appears that a person is likely himself to commit a breach of the peace or to disturb the public tranquillity, that is to say by a direct act e g by committing an assault and secondly where a person may be the indirect cause of a breach of the peace or the disturbance of the public tranquillity by doing a certain act but in the latter case the Magistrate may only take action where the act anticipated is a wrongful act. This section does not authorise action against a person who is expected to do an act which may cause a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity unless that act is wrongful and the mere fact that the doing of a lawful act by certain persons may lead to the commission of a breach of the peace by other persons does not authorise the Magistrate to take action against the persons intending to do the lawful act unless they are themselves likely to commit a breach of the peace or to disturb the public tranquillity—Nga Ti v Maung Kyaw 11 Bur L T 59 18 Cr L J 512

(f) mere use of idle threats and bombast—In re Chinnathambi, 9 M L T. 271 12 Cr L J 104

The Magistrate should have tangible evidence that some definite wrongful act is contemplated which act if committed is likely to occasion a breach of the peace therefore the fact that the accused had attempted to get up false cases and that he would probably continue to do so is not a ground of action under this section—Emp v Badhawa 1887 P R 64 So also merely being on bad terms with others (Emp v Balajee 7 C P L R 9) or being a quarrelsome head strong and contumacious person (Emp v Shimbhu 1888 P R 21) is neither a definite wrongful act nor likely to cause a breach of the peace So also, the mere fact that enmity exists between two parties does not entitle the Magistrate to bind down either party—Sher Khan v Emp, 12 Cr L J 186 1911 P L R 126, Narendra v Emp, 1 A L J 418

233 Acts which amount to an exercise of lawful rights are not to be treated as wrongful acts necessitating an order under this section—Din Dayal v Emp, 34 Cal 935. In re Kashichandra 19 W R 47. Bepin v Emp, 21 Cr L J 651 (Cal) The preventive jurisdiction of a Magistrate under this section must be exercised with caution Where its exercise may undoubtedly lead to the infringement of an undoubted civil right and where the breach of the peace apprehended by the Magistrate is a likely result of the enforcement of his legal right by a party in a legal way, the Magistrate ought not to bind down the party who has the legal right in him—Din Dayal v Emp, 34 Cal 935. Nga Ti v Maung Kyaw, 11 Bur L T 59 18 Cr L J 512

Thus the right of protection of lawful possession is a lawful right which may properly be exercised not only to resist any unlawful attempt to interfere with the possession but also to defend oneself if it becomes necessary in the process Where, therefore, the lawful possession of the accused had more than once been threatened by a show of armed force, and he had collected a body of men armed with lathis and posted them on the property to resist any violence or interference with his possession it was held that as the intention was to maintain an existing right, the accused was justified in adopting measures for the defence of his possession, and that as there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace from his side, there was no reason either for punishing him or binding him over in security—Janki Prasad v Emp 18 A L J 157. 21 Cr L J 337 Where a party has the right to take a procession along a particular road he cannot be bound down under this section because other persons object to his doing so and he insists on taking the procession along that road The proper course is to bind down the other persons—Feroze Ali v Emp, 12 C. 703 Where one of several co-sharer landlords sought to make a

ment of lands contrary to the provisions of Secs 90 and 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the other co sharer landlords, would be justified in objecting to the survey and where no force was used by them they ought not to be bound down to keep the peace—Bhabataran v Banhutesh, 9 C W N 618 Where a Zemindar village was in the possession of the Mokhassadar and the tenants had been paying rents to him, and the Zemindar came to the village with the express purpose of ousting him and incited the tenants not to pay rents to the Mokhassadar, whereupon the Mokhassadar protested and asked the Zemindar in a threatening manner to leave the village, it was held that in as much as the Zemindar was acting illegally, the Mokhassadar protesting against such illegal act was acting within his rights and could not be bound down under this section—Chandrasekhara v Emp, 14 M L J 491 Where a Magistrate found that persons who attempted to do basti puja on a waste land were not entitled to perform it it was held that if the persons opposing it acted properly and within their rights there was no reason to suppose that any breach of the peace was likely to be committed—Bijoy Singha v Emp, 3 C W N 463. Where there was already a cattle market and certain persons intended to open another cattle market on their own land, not far from the old market, and the Magistrate apprehending that there would be a breach of the peace consequent thereon bound over those persons to keep the peace, the order of the Magistrate was illegal—Mahu v Emp, 16 A L J 279 19 Cr L J 437

But where there are doubts as to the existence of the respective rights and obligations of the parties (i.e. as to who is acting legally in the exercise of his rights and who is not) the proper procedure is to bind down both parties, so that the order of the Magistrate may not be detrimental to either. Where, however, no doubt exists, the party in the wrong should be bound down. An attempt to ascertain legal rights of parties should always be made by the Magistrate before he binds down one or the other party under this section—Din Dayal v. Emp, 34 Cal 935, Ghasi Ram v Emp, 20 Cr L J 194 (Pat)

234 Disputes relating to immoveable property —Proceedings under this section are only intended for the security of the public peace and not for the purpose of enabling one of two contending parties to help themselves in obtaining or retaining possession of immoveable property and having their adversaries' hands tied down by an order under this section. The proper procedure in such cases is to take proceedings under sec 145—Driver v Q E, 25 Cal 798 Where the apprehension of a breach of the peace arises out of a dispute regarding possession of immoveable property, the Magistrate can undoubtedly proceed under Sec. 145, but this fact will not preclude the Magistrate from taking proceedings under this section. In such cases the Magistrate is not bound to act only under Secs 144 and 145 but has a discretion to proceed either under those sections or under section 107—Shree Raj v Chatter 3 Cal 966 In re Muthia 36 Mad 315 Thakur Panday v K E 34 All 449 Emp v Abbas 39 Cal 150 16 C W N 83 (F B) Dhuna v Emp 23 Cr L J 567 (Nag) K E v Basiruddin 7 C W N 746 Amulya v Amrita Lal 24 C W N 1075 22 Cr L J 223 Abdus Sayeed v Emp 23 Cr L J 123 (Cal) Ramachariu v Emp 26 Mad 471 Sindama v Zemindar 2 Weir 50 Balmukund v Crown 1 S L R 50 8 Cr L J 170

Where parties are clearly in the wrong they can be bound down under Section 107 to prevent a breach of the peace or a party threatening to usurp the rights of another can be restrained by a temporary order under Section 144 but where the dispute relates to lands and there is an apprehension of a breach of the peace as both the contending parties urge their claim to possession the proceedings should be under Section 145 of the Code—Gaurinath v Gobind Singh 1 P L T 44 20 Cr L J 829

Sections 107 144 and 145 all give summary jurisdiction to Magistrates to take action in order to prevent a breach of the peace when such a breach is imminent There is a very thin line of demarcation between these sections When there is a bona fide dispute as to the right of possession between two rival parties the proper procedure is to take action under Sec 145 and not under Sec 107 because the former section is not only effective to prevent a breach of the peace but also is the one which causes the least prejudice to the contending parties—Himmat v Emp, 19 Cr L J 712 (Pat) Balajit v Bhoju 35 Cal 117, Mahadeo v Bishu 25 All 337 Baishnab Das v Emp 12 C W N 606 Emp v Debendra 1 C L J 632 Kals Pershad v Dhodhas 22 Cr L J 574 (Pat), Abdus Sayeed v Emp 23 Cr L J 123 (Cal) whereas the effect of an order under this section would have the effect of binding down one of the parties, leaving the other party free without any adjudication upon the question as to which of the parties is in possession—Dolegobint v Dahuu 25 Cal 559 Bidhubhusau v Annoda 6 C W N 883 Baishnab Das v Emp 12 C W N 606 Driver v Q E 25 Cal 793, Shama Churn v Emp 6 P L T 766 26 Cr L J 1562 It should be noted that while section 107 leaves it to the Magistrate to demand security or not in the exercise of his discretion section 145 makes it obligatory upon him to institute proceedings if he is satisfied as to the existence of a dispute relating to immoveable property—Balajit v Bhoju 35 Cal 117 Proceedings under section 107 are intended only for the security of the public peace and not for the purpose of enabling one of the two contending parties to help himself in recovering possession of immoveable property after having his adversary's hands tied down by an order under this section In such a case the necessary action must be taken under Section 145 of the Code—Jalal v Crown, 1917 P L R 144 15 Cr L J 446 Even if the Magi

trate proceeds at all under section 107, the proper order is to bind down both the parties—Baishnab Das v Emp, 12 C W N 606 as for instance where both parties are equally dangerous—Bindrabun v Emp, 22 Cr L J 701 (All)

But if the dispute is not bona fide : e if one party is clearly in possession of property and another party wrongfully and without any claim to possession seeks to eject him by force from the possession of the land and breach of the peace is imminent there cannot be said to be a bona fide dispute about possession within the meaning of Sec 145 and the Magistrate is justified in taking action under section 107—Emp v Rambaran, 28 All 406 Lachmi v Emp 1 P L T 681 22 Cr L J 86 Shama Churn v Emp 6 P L T 766 26 Cr L J 1562 If one of the parties threatens to use violence to the other party if the latter should go upon the land of which the latter is in possession an order under section 107 binding down the former would be proper—Jafar v Jaribulla, 9 C W N 551

Where the dispute between the parties is not one concerning land and does not involve any question of actual possession but concerns the rights of the respective parties to carry on boring operations for coal over a specified area, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to enter into the intricate questions of title and possession which arise between the parties. If in such a case there is any likelihood of a breach of the peace proceedings which are simpler in nature and which summarily and expediently dispose of the matter should be adopted That is proceedings under sec 107 would be more appropriate in such a case than proceedings under sec 145—Indian Iron and Steel Co v Bansa Gopal, 32 C L J 54 : 22 Cr L J 99

An order under sec 107 is no bar to a subsequent proceeding under Chapter XII—Baisnab v Gatinath 39 Cal 469 16 C W N 384, Ram Lochun v K E, 36 All 143 12 A L J 162, Nasiruddin v Gofuruddin, 21 C W N 160

Similarly an order under Sec 145 is no bar to the passing of an order under Sec 107, on the same facts if the Magistrate is satisfied that notwithstanding the order under Sec 145 one of the parties is likely to take the law into his own hands—In re Mulhia, 36 Mad 315. K E v Dandi, 24 O C 21 22 Cr L J 384

But it is illegal to institute proceedings under one section and to pass an order under another Thus where the Magistrate instituted proceedings under Sec 145 and apprehending a disturbance of the peace ordered a party to furnish security under Sec 107, it was held that the order was illegal and without jurisdiction—Emp v Sai Deo, 14 A L J 794 17 Cr L J 527 Similarly where a Magistrate proceeded under section 107 and concluded the proceedings thereunder but subsequently passed an order under Section 145 held that the order of the Magistrate was ultra vires as he failed to take written statements from the parties and receive evidence under the latter section—Sahdeb v Jumon 19 Cr L J 320 (Pat)

If, owing to a dispute relating to immoveable property proceedings are taken under sec 107 instead of under sec 145 the Magistrate cannot pass an order of attachment of property (which order can be passed only under sec 146)—Ram Sirup v A E v I R (1924) Oudh 345 25 Cr L J 350

235 Who can be bound down —Only the person who is himself likely to cause a breach of the peace (and no other) can be bound down under this section it is illegal and contrary to the provisions of this section to take recognisance from one person in order to prevent another from committing a breach of the peace—17 W R 47, 19 W R 54 Thus the mere fact that a dispute exists between two rival Zemindars would not justify proceedings being taken against all their officers and servants unless there are materials to show that they are all likely to commit a breach of the peace It may be that they are all interested in the dispute between their masters—and in one sense all the members of the Zemindar's family are interested in a dispute relating to a property comprised in the Zemindary—but that by itself would be no ground for taking proceedings against them all—Ainuddin v Emp, 24 Cr L J 230 (Cal) Where there were old standing feuds between the parties but the Magistrate finding no evidence against them, discharged them but bound down their servants held that the order was illegal and without jurisdiction—Din Dayal v Emp, 23 A L J 300 26 Cr L J 981

A non resident Zemindar cannot be bound over to keep the peace merely because his local agents are committing acts likely to cause a breach of the peace—10 C L R 430 The mere fact that the patwarl threatened to use violence does not justify the Magistrate in starting proceedings against the proprietor and manager on the presumption that the latter must have acquiesced in the action of the patwarl—Grant v Emp, 2 P L T 669 22 Cr L J 745 But the master would be liable if he actually acquiesced in the servant's acts. Thus, where the master, a panda of Gaya, used to send his servant always armed with a lathi to the Railway station for procuring pilgrims, and this led to a contest with a rival panda resulting in disturbance of the public peace, it was held that this was sufficient to make the master liable under this section The fact that the master himself did not go to the Railway station but always remained in his house was no bar to the application of this section—Balalal v A E, 1 P L J 361 18 Cr L J 374

So also, where it was found that the petitioner was not himself to commit a breach of the peace he should not be ordered under this section merely because his act of attaching the crops of his raiyats would lead to a riot resulting from the resistance of the cultivators to the attachment—In re Sheo Surn 3 C L R 280

Joint trial of several persons —See Note 290 under sec 117

236 Evidence —A Magistrate dealing with proceedings under this section must base his judgment upon evidence relevant to the case. He should not rely upon his knowledge of certain facts which he obtains from sources outside the record—Mathura v Emp 14 A L J 769 17 Cr L J 484. Where the order is passed against more persons than one there must be definite evidence in the case of any and every person that there is a danger of a breach of the peace by him. The mere fact that a collective body of persons are indulging in feelings of hostility against another body of persons is insufficient—Shambhu v Emp 38 All 468 14 A L J 656 17 Cr L J 400

Consent of accused to be bound down —The fact of likelihood of a breach of the peace must be established by independent evidence. In the absence of evidence to prove that the accused was likely to commit a breach of the peace the accused's own statement before the Magistrate that he is willing to give security would not justify an order being passed under this section—Jagdat v Emp 21 Cr L J 176 (All) Crown v Shrodan 1915 P R 24 16 Cr L J 784 1917 P R 27 Joti v Emp 25 Cr L J 710 (Lah) 20 Cr L J 105 21 Cr L J 656 (Nag) Karam v Emp 23 Cr L J 175 (Lah) Ram Chandra v Emp 35 Cal 674 Chandra Sekhar v Emp 21 Cr L J 59 (All). In a recent Allahabad case it has been held (dissenting from the above rulings) that where the persons called upon to furnish security appeared in Court and expressed their willingness to be bound over whereupon the trial Court took no evidence and passed an order against them the consent of the accused must be taken to be a plea of guilty and the order for security was rightly passed—Ghariba v K L 46 All 109 21 A L J 881 25 Cr L J 750 A J R (1924) All 269

237 Subsection (2) —In order to give the Magistrate jurisdiction over a person it is not necessary that such person should permanently or habitually live within his jurisdiction. It is sufficient if at the time when the Magistrate receives information and takes proceedings under this section the person temporarily resides within his jurisdiction—Shama Churn v Kals Mardal 24 Cal 344 22 Cr L J 109 (All). The terms of this subsection do not authorise a Magistrate to bind over a person residing outside the limits of his district concerning whom he has received information that such person is likely to commit a breach of the peace within his district—In re Jasprakash 6 All 26 (F B) In re Abdul Aziz 14 All 49 In re Rajendra 11 Cal 737 Dionath v Giriya 12 Cal 133

23 Bom 32 The proper course in such a case is to cause information to be given to the Magistrate within whose district that person resides in order that proceedings might be taken by that Magistrate—11 Cal 737

Special powers of Chief Presidency and District Magistrates Sub-section (2) gives special powers to Chief Presidency and District Magistrates to proceed against persons outside jurisdiction. Therefore where a District Magistrate is satisfied that a breach of the peace is apprehended within the local limits of his district the fact that the accused is living outside such limits in a Native State does not take away his jurisdiction to pass an order under this section—Sheo Baran v Emp, 20 A L J 523, 23 Cr L J 396. But the District Magistrate cannot delegate this special power to a subordinate Magistrate. Thus a Subdivisional Magistrate cannot, on the direction of a District Magistrate draw up proceedings under this section against a person residing in another jurisdiction in such a case the proceedings must take place and be brought to a conclusion before the District Magistrate himself—Nirbeekar v Emp, 13 C W N 580. A District Magistrate is not competent to make over the initiation of proceedings under this section to a first class Magistrate who has no local jurisdiction over the matter—Konda Reddy v. A E 41 Mad 246. But after proceedings have been initiated by a District Magistrate against persons residing outside jurisdiction he can transfer the proceedings to a subordinate Magistrate otherwise competent to deal with the matter. This section only restricts the initiation of the proceedings against persons living outside the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate, but does not prevent him from transferring such proceedings after initiation to a subordinate Magistrate, though such Magistrate had no jurisdiction to initiate the proceedings—Surja Kanta v Emp, 31 Cal 350. A F v Munna, 24 All 151. Rakhal Mandal v Emp 27 C L J 314. But the District Magistrate cannot make over the case to a Magistrate incompetent to try the case, e.g. a 2nd class Magistrate—Gobind v A F 37 All 20 12 A I J 1136.

238 Sub-section (3)—'Has reason to believe'—The use of this expression, as compared with as informed in subsection (1), shows that the Magistrate's discretion under this sub-section is very limited. The Magistrate should act when he has reason to believe, i.e., when he has reasonable grounds to believe and not merely to suspect. See Emp v Rango, 6 Bom 407.

239 Sub-section (4)—Power to detain in custody—Only in the special circumstances referred to in clauses (3) and (4) does the law empower the Magistrate to detain a person against whom proceedings have been instituted under this section—Raghunandin v Emp, 32 Cal 80. Therefore, where an accused was not sent before a District Magistrate by another Magistrate acting under clause (3) so as to bring the case under clause (4) such District Magistrate's order detaining the accused in custody was illegal—Chidambara v Emp, 31 Mad 315 (F B)

240 Bail —Even when the person has been arrested under clause (3), unless there are special circumstances, he should be admitted to bail. When a Magistrate on the report of the D S P directed the re-arrest of persons (whom he had previously admitted to bail on their appearance) and remanded them to custody, it was held that the re-arrest and remand were illegal as none of the special circumstances mentioned in clause (3) existed in the case and the Magistrate was bound under sec 496 to release them on bail—Raghunandan v Emp, 32 Cal 80. But the Madras High Court holds that the Magistrate may in his discretion detain such persons in custody according to the clear words of sub-section (4) these words cannot be qualified by sec 496 that section does not give an absolute right of bail but must be read along with any other provision giving to the Court a special power of detention, and sub-section (4) of this section gives such power—Narayanawami v Emp, 36 Mad 474

Further inquiry —See notes under sec 119

240A Revision —See note 294 under sec 118

An order of a Magistrate refusing to take action under sec 107 cannot be set aside by the superior Court in revision. The object of this section is rather administrative than judicial. If the Magistrate who is responsible for the administration of a subdivision is not satisfied that there is any need to take proceedings under this chapter, a superior judicial tribunal cannot interfere with the exercise of his discretion—Ram Lal v Bankateshar 28 O C 44 1 O W N 359 25 Cr L J 1149 Phani Bhusan v Kunja, 25 Cr L J 679 (Cal) A I R (1925) Cal 262

241 Nature of proceedings under this chapter —There is no unanimity of opinion among the various Courts as to whether proceedings under this Chapter are of a criminal nature, or as to whether the persons proceeded against under this Chapter are 'accused' persons. In Wajid Ali v H E, 41 Cal 719, In re Ramasami 27 Mad 510 Desikachari v Emp, 39 Mad 539 Lalit Mohan v Suryakanta 28 Cal 709 3 O C 247 and 41 All 503 it is held that proceedings under this chapter are of a criminal nature therefore a person who brings a proceeding under sec 107 from malicious motives is liable to an action for malicious prosecution if the proceeding terminates in favour of the person against whom the allegation is made—Md Niaz Khan v Jal Ram 41 All 503, Chiranjit v Dharam Singh 43 All 402, whereas in 1914 P R 5 and 1916 P L R 78 it has been held that proceedings under sec 110 are not criminal proceedings, and the Chief Court has no power to direct the transfer of such proceedings under sec 526 from one Magistrate & Court to another (But the word 'criminal' has now been omitted from sec 526)

In the following cases it has been held that persons proceeded against under this chapter are in the position of accused persons—Hopcroft v Emp 36 Cal 163 Q E v Mutsaddi 21 All 107 Golha Singh v Chetu 1905 P R 33 Crown v Ida 1900 P R 15 Nakhi Lal v Q E, 27 Cal 656 Jhokha Singh v Q E, 23 Cal 493 Q E v Mona Puna 16 Bom 661 4 C L R 454 In re Venkataswinnaya 43 Mad 511 (Γ B) and further inquiry can be ordered in case of such persons under Sec 437 (now Sec 436)—Q E v Mutsaddi, 21 All 107 K E v Fyazuddin 24 All 148 Gokha v Chetu, 1905 P R 33 (But see sec 436 as now amended in 1923)

But in K E v Rameshwar, 36 All 262, 5 Bom L R 27, Raghunandan v Emp, 32 Cal 80, it has been held that such persons are not accused persons within the meaning of Sec 167 nor are they accused persons within the meaning of sec 437 (now 436) of the Code—Md Akhan v Emp, 1905 P R 42 Q E v Iman Mandal, 27 Cal 662 33 Cal 8 Velu v Chidambara, 33 Mad 85 1911 P R 6 An application to take proceedings under this chapter is not an accusation of an offence—1905 P R 42 Natha Singh v Pala Singh, 1896 P R 4, and therefore compensation cannot be awarded under Sec 250 to the person against whom proceedings under this chapter have been dropped, such proceedings not being proceedings in a case in which a person is accused of an offence—In re Gound, 25 Bom 48, 1893 P R 16 Crown v Laura 1902 P R 33 15 All 365 Mannu Khan v Chandi 20 A L J 624 23 Cr L J 474 Ram Badan v Janki 45 All 363 21 A L J 207 24 Cr L J 228 Ram Sukh v Mahadeo, 7 A L J 743 Bindhachal v Lal Behari, 36 All 382 Natha Singh v Pala Singh, 1896 P R 4 Jay Singh v Kanhya, 1884 P R 37 A person called upon to give security is not an accused within the meaning of sec. 342 nor is he guilty of any offence, therefore omission to examine him under that section is not an illegality—Benode Behari v Emp, 50 Cal 985

There are certain indications to show that it is not the intention of the Legislature to treat the persons proceeded against under this chapter as accused persons or as persons guilty of an offence—First the Legislature has studiously avoided the use of the word 'accused' in sections 107 126, and has deliberately used such expressions as 'the person,' 'such person' 'the person informed against' (sec 107), 'the person called upon to show cause' (Sec 116) etc, whereas in the chapters relating to inquiries and trials (chapters XVIII, XX—XXIII) the word 'accused' has been used throughout And during the debate in the Legislative Assembly, the Law Member stated that the word 'accused' was really a misnomer in security cases (Leg Ass Debates, 18 & 23 p 1253) Secondly, in the similar case of a proceeding under chapter XXXVI, the word accused has now been replaced by the words any person' This is significant Thirdly, in Sec 340, the words against whom proceedings are instituted under this Code have now been added in order to make it clear that the words 'a person accused of an offence occurring in that section do not include a person proceeded against under Chapter VIII Fourthly, in section 436 the words person accused of an offence' have been substituted for the words accused person this shows that the person proceeded against under the present chapter is not a person accused of an offence, and that sec 436 does not apply to such person

108 Whenever a Chief Presidency or District Magistrate, Security for good or a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate behaviour from per- of the first class specially empowered by sons disseminating the Local Government in this behalf, has seditious matter information that there is within the limits of his jurisdiction any person who, within or without such limits, either orally or in writing or in any other manner, intentionally disseminates or attempts to disseminate, or in anywise abets the dissemination of,—

- (a) any seditious matter, that is to say, any matter the publication of which is punishable under section 124A of the Indian Penal Code, or
- (b) any matter the publication of which is punishable under section 153A of the Indian Penal Code, or
- (c) any matter concerning a Judge which amounts to criminal intimidation or defamation under the Indian Penal Code, such Magistrate, if in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding, may (in manner hereinafter provided) require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for his good behaviour for such period, not exceeding one year, as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix

No proceedings shall be taken under this section against the editor, proprietor, printer or publisher of any publication registered under, and edited, printed and published in conformity, with the rules laid down in the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867 [XXV of 1867] with reference to any matter contained in such publication except by the order or under the authority of the Governor General in Council or the Local Government or some officer empowered by the Governor General in Council in this behalf

Change —The italicised words have been added by Sec. 17 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1933)

Or in any other manner — This amendment is to provide for the contingency where the matters covered by section 108 have been disseminated by other means than either orally or in writing e.g. by gramophone records —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Intentionally —This word has been added during the debate in the Assembly on the motion of Mr Rangachariar so that innocent agents may not be proceeded against for instance, boys who handle newspapers without knowing the contents and such other persons who are merely ignorant tools in the hands of other persons should not be proceeded against —Legislative Assembly Debates, January 18, 1923 page 1279.

If proceeding —For reason of the addition of these words see notes to sec. 107, under heading Change

And edited — In view of the recent amendments made in the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, regulating the editing of newspapers, we have made a consequential amendment here. We also think that the protection given by the last clause of section 108 should only extend to newspapers which are edited, printed and published in conformity with that Act —Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

With reference publication — This amendment is merely designed to make the intention of the Legislature clearer as regards the proceedings which require sanction prior to their institution" —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

242 Essentials of the section —In a proceeding under this section it must be shown that the accused was connected with the dissemination of the seditious matter. Thus the mere writing of a seditious matter is not a sufficient ground for proceeding against the author under this section unless it is shown that he was connected with the publication or the subsequent dissemination thereof. So also in the case of a printer, although it must be assumed that by printing the seditious matter he abets the dissemination thereof, still in order to make him liable under this section it must be shown that he had a knowledge of the contents of the matter printed, especially in case of a big press which is managed by an independent staff such as manager, clerks and others, where it is not possible for the owner of the press to scrutinize personally every detail of the concern. As regards the publisher, he is liable under this section because as publisher he must be presumed to have knowledge of the contents of the matter and he therefore 'disseminated' or at least abetted the dissemination of the matter within the meaning of this section—Emp v Pitre 47 Bom 438 25 Bom L R 97

243 Seditious matter.—The test under this section is whether the person proceeded against has been disseminating seditious matter, and whether there is a fear of the repetition of such offence. In every case it is a question of fact which will have to be determined with reference to the antecedents of the person and other surrounding circumstances—Emp v Vaman 11 Bom L R 743 16 Cr L J 379. The preaching of swara, which means nothing more than Home-rule under the present Government by constitutional means, does not amount to dissemination of seditious matter and does not therefore justify an order under this section—Ven Bhushan v Emp, 34 Cal 991 Emp v Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 19 Bom L R 211 18 Cr L J 567. It is essential under clause (a) of this section that the matter disseminated must be seditious—19 Bom L R 211

244 Promoting enmity between classes.—To sustain an order under sec 108, it is not sufficient that the language used was highly offensive to one community; it must also be shown that the accused intended to provoke feelings of hatred or enmity between two communities. But it is not necessary that he should have succeeded in provoking such feelings if deliberate intention to do so can be inferred—Dharmaloka v Emp, 4 Bur L T 84. In Sital Prosad v Emperor, 43 Cal 591 20 C W N 199, on the other hand, it has been held that to justify an order under sec 108, one has only got to find that the words used in the leaflet or the matters complained of are likely to promote feelings of hatred or enmity, and there is no necessity under this section of finding intention, such as would be necessary if the person were placed on his trial under sec 153A, I P C. This decision seems to be no longer correct because the word intentionally has been newly added.

109 Whenever a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class receives information—
Security for good behaviour from vagrants and suspected persons

(a) that any person is taking precautions to conceal his presence within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction, and that there is reason to believe that such person is taking such precautions with a view to committing any offence or

- (b) that there is within such limits a person who has no ostensible means of subsistence or who cannot give a satisfactory account of himself

such Magistrate may in manner hereinafter provided require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with sureties for his good behaviour for such period not exceeding one year as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix

245 Scope and object —This section provides for taking security not from persons suspected of a particular offence but from persons lurking within the Magistrate's jurisdiction who have no ostensible means of subsistence or cannot give a satisfactory account of themselves Ratanlal 63

This section aims at summarily disposing of cases of vagabondism where sturdy rogues are found to be lurking about—1 O S C No 73

Magistrates are empowered to put in force the provisions of this section whenever they have credible information that the accused has no ostensible means of livelihood or is unable to give a satisfactory account of himself and is within the local limits of his jurisdiction—Emp v Madho Dhobi, 31 Cal 557 Mahadeo v R 6 A L J 253 Honorary Magistrate can act under this section—31 Cal 557

246 Within the Magistrate's jurisdiction —It is not necessary that the accused person should have a residence within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction—In re Narasimappa v Weir 53 The fact that the accused was arrested from a place outside the Magistrate's jurisdiction and that the arrest was illegal would not oust the Magistrate's jurisdiction to proceed under this section—31 Cal 557 (following Emp v Ravalu 26 Mad 124)

When a person gives a satisfactory account of his presence within the limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction he cannot be called upon by such Magistrate to give an account of his presence in any other jurisdiction—Satish Chandra v Emp 39 Cal 456 16 C W N 499 13 Cr L J 161

247 Concealing presence with a view to commit offence —Where a person's presence or residence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction was well known and there was no attempt to conceal the same his mere attempt to conceal his presence at a particular spot at a particular time or his inability to give a satisfactory explanation of what he was doing at a particular place at a particular time does not bring his case within Sec 109, and he cannot be ordered to give security for good behaviour. This section refers to a continuous act and does not apply to a case where there is a momentary effort at concealment to avoid detection or arrest—Reshu Kabiraj v Emp, 22 C W N 163 18 Cr L J 825 Sheikh Piru v Emp 41 C L J 142 26 Cr L J 842 See also Lattu v Emp, 17 A L J 891 10 Cr L J 572

The concealment referred to must be with a view to committing some offence. Therefore a person cannot be called upon to furnish security under this section in respect of an alleged temporary concealment in his father's house merely to avoid observation of police (owing to a warrant being issued against him) unconnected with any intent to commit an offence or with any previous concealment outside the Magistrate's jurisdiction—Satish Chandra v Emp 39 Cal 456 An old offender attempting, on seeing a constable to conceal himself to avoid observation does not bring himself within the mischief of sec 109—Sheikh Piru v Emp, 41 C L J 142 26 Cr L J 842

A person who gives a false name and delivers letters secretly containing incitement to commit crimes or demanding money for the means of committing crimes comes within the provisions of clause (a)—Preo Nath v Emp, 15 Cr L J 235 (Cal) But where a person on being asked by the police gives a false name and then corrects it, and there is nothing else to show that he was taking precautions to conceal his presence, an action under this section is not justified—Sheo Prosad v Emperor, 21 A I J 847

248 Want of ostensible means of subsistence—Mere proof of want of ostensible means of subsistence is not of itself a sufficient reason for passing an order for furnishing security. Otherwise jails would be quite full especially in times of famine and scarcity. A Magistrate is bound to consider whether the order is really necessary in order to secure good behaviour, which is a matter for the Magistrate's judicial discretion, and he ought not to send people to jail simply because the opinions of Police witnesses are unfavourable to them—Q I v Kala, Ratanlal 723

A young man, out of employment, staying in the house of his father who is a man of substance and able if necessary to support him, cannot be held to be without ostensible means of subsistence within the meaning of this section. Clause (b) is directed only against suspicious strangers lurking within the Magistrate's jurisdiction—39 Cal 456 Abdul Rashid v Emp, 22 Cr L J 749 (Lah) The accused's explanation that he came to Calcutta 2 months ago and that he worked as a cooly but had no fixed abode, is a satisfactory account of himself. If a cooly could not show any immediate work, it does not mean that he has no ostensible means of livelihood—Sheshk Piru v Emp 41 C L J 142 So also the mere fact that a man is doing no work at present and was previously convicted for bad livelihood (5 C W N 8 41 C L J 142 26 Cr L J 842) or the mere fact that he belongs to a wandering tribe (In re Yerukala v West 53) or to a gang which frequented melas and carried on illegal games (Mahadeo v A L 6 A I J 253) or the mere fact that he is a gambler or opium smoker (1 Bur S R 46) or has no other means of subsistence except through play of ring game which is a game of skill and not an offence under the Gaming Act (Bangoli v P 40 Cal 702 14 Cr I J 457) is not a sufficient ground for requiring him to give security.

249 Cannot give a satisfactory account of himself —Cl (b) of this section applies not only to vagrants or vagabonds but also covers suspected persons of any class who cannot give a satisfactory account of themselves—Narendra v Imp 13 C I J 239 (Cal) A person who gives a false name or address (Abdur Fashid v Imp, 22 Cr I J 749) or gives a false account or cannot give a satisfactory account of his association with persons who are dangerous political conspirators (13 Cr L J 239) is included in this section.

The words cannot give a satisfactory account of himself do not mean failure to satisfy the Magistrate that he spends his time or at least his leisure hours in a satisfactory manner and therefore the fact that a person (a Municipal peon) whose residence and occupation were well known was seen to prowling about at night in the company of scoundrels and was armed with a lathi and used the lathi was not a sufficient ground for calling upon him to furnish security—Sharif Ahmad v King Imp, 9 A I J 1097 12 Cr I J 536

Where it was proved that the accused were residents of another district where they had their houses that they had money with them that they were dealers in cattle and that they had money in deposit with bankers, it could not be said that they had not been able to give a satisfactory account of themselves. And the mere fact that they were camping in an open ground in a city while on their way home would not justify the Magistrate in passing an order under this section—Vanka v Imp, 18 A L J 325 11 Cr L J 366

With sureties —Compare this expression with the words with or without sureties in the preceding sections. The requirement of surety in this section is obligatory and not optional.

250 Evidence —Mere proof of want of a feasible means of livelihood is not a sufficient reason for passing an order under this section—Ratanlal, 3 the Magistrate should take evidence as to the general character of the person charged with bad livelihood and not convict him on the mere report of Police officers—5 W R 2

The fact that the accused had previously been connected with a criminal conspiracy or might still be in correspondence with criminals, is not relevant under this section though it might form the basis of a substantive proceeding under Sec 110—39 Cal 456

An order under this section passed more on suspicion than on any good basis of fact must be set aside Where three respectable residents of Delhi came to Meerut by a night train and were found on the road between the station and the city near to a place where a burglar's jemmy was found, an order calling upon them to furnish security for good behaviour was illegal—Ghulam Jilani v Emp 17 A L J 432 20 Cr L J 401

110 Whenever a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government receives information that any person within the local limits of his jurisdiction—

Security for good behaviour from habitual offenders

- (a) is by habit a robber, house-breaker, thief or forger or
- (b) is by habit a receiver of stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen or
- (c) habitually protects or harbours thieves or aids in the concealment or disposal of stolen property, or
- (d) habitually commits or attempts to commit, or abets the commission of, the offence of kidnapping abduction extortion or cheating or mischief or any offence punishable under Chapter XII of the Indian Penal Code or under Section 489A, Section 489B Section 489C or Section 489D of that Code or
- (e) habitually commits or attempts to commit, or abets the commission of, offences involving a breach of the peace, or
- (f) is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community

such Magistrate may in manner hereinafter provided require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with surties for his good behaviour for such period not exceeding three years as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix

Change—The amendment of this section as shown by the italicised words has been effected by sec 18 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923)

‘We agree that habitual kidnappers should be brought under this section but doubt the necessity of any reference to abduction. We think that it is desirable to include all offences under Chapter XII of the Indian Penal Code and also habitual forgers. We have included forger in section 110 (a) and have rearranged clause (d) in accordance with this note—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

251 Object and Scope of Section—The object of this section is to afford protection to the public against a repetition of crimes in which the safety of property is menaced as well as the security of person is jeopardised—Erip v Nawab 2 All 835 Mamundra v Emp, 46 Cal 215 Rajendra v K E, 17 C. W. N 238 14 Cr L J 5

Again, the object of this section is the prevention and not the punishment of offences and with that object it authorises the Magistrate to take security for good behaviour. But it is solely for the purpose of securing future good behaviour that the section can be used. Any attempt to use it for the purpose of punishing past offences is wrong and not sanctioned by law—In re Umbica, 1 C L R, 268 In re Juggat, 2 Cal 110 In re Raja Valad 10 Bom 174 Q E v Handhaya 7 All 67, Jagat Singh v Crown, 2 Lah L J 237. Therefore where the accused have committed definite acts of extortion for which they are liable to be prosecuted under the I P Code, an order for furnishing security under this section should not be passed, because such order would seriously prejudice them in their trial for those offences—Anookool v Q E, 27 Cal 781. So also, where a man is alleged to have habitually committed robbery with 4 or more others, it means that he is a member of a gang of dacoits, and thereby commits a definite and specific offence for which he ought to be punished under sec 400 of the I P Code, and no action should be taken under the preventive section of the Crim Pro Code. It is for this reason that section 110 deliberately omits dacoity out of its purview—Ram Prasad v Emp, 23 A L J 18 26 Cr L J 746 A I R (1925) All 250. But evidence going to show that a substantive offence has been committed or evidence which might possibly form the basis of a charge of substantive offence is not necessarily to be excluded from proceedings under sec 110, and can form the basis of an order for security—Budhan v Emp, 23 A I J 507 47 All 733 26 Cr L J 1130 (distinguishing 23 A L J 18)

Moreover, this section is not intended to afford the police a means of keeping a suspected person under detention until they are able to work out a case against him—King Emp v Paimal, 10 A L J 351

252 Application of Section—This section arms the Magistrate with a powerful means of securing the interest of the community from injury at the hands of hardened offenders of the most dangerous classes. Therefore the power given by this section should be exercised sparingly and with much discretion by the Magistrate and only in those cases where the evidence is very clear and precise—Rajendra v K E, 17 C W N 238 Jagat Singh v Crown, 21 Cal L J 237 Yaghi v Emp, 1892 P R 53 Mad 236 nor, on the other hand should its exercise be confined only to cases in which positive evidence is forthcoming of the commission of offences—In re Peddanna Reddi, 3 Mad 238

This section is preventive and not punitive. Its object is to protect society against persons who are so likely to commit offences that it is not advisable to leave them at large unchecked. It is very undesirable to proceed under this section against a person who is trying to reform himself and to live an honest life—In re Billa Appaya, 10 M I T 333 12 Cr 1 J 328

Moreover, Magistrates should be cautious in making sure that the provisions intended for securing the peace of the community are not utilized for taking private vengeance under the aegis of a Crown prosecution—38 Cal 156. It is to be feared that this section is often resorted to by the Magistrates for the purpose of ensuring the punishment of the persons suspected but not proved to have committed offences such as theft, etc. and it is notorious that accusations of bad livelihood are constantly made with the object of blackening an enemy's character, and satisfying feelings of spite and hatred. So it is incumbent on the Magistrates to see that this section is not resorted to unnecessarily and to annoy individuals—Sulha v Emp, 1898 P R 4. The Courts must not make use of this section in order to secure a conviction of persons against whom a substantive charge has broken down—23 O C 371 22 Cr L J 273 24 O C 317, Shiam Lal v K F, 6 A L J 487. When proceedings are taken under this section against a man soon after a discharge or acquittal from a charge of an offence of which he was suspected, it is always necessary to make it clear that the proceedings were not taken as a means of punishing in an indirect way a man whom the police suspected to be guilty—Shiam Lal v K F, 6 A L J 487 9 Cr L J 528

This section has been made applicable to Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act by section 4 of that Act and section 3 of that Act permits an order of restriction to be passed in any case in which security can be required under sec. 110 of this Code—San Dun v K L, 2 Rang 641 (642) A L R. (1925) Rang 112

253 Secs 108 and 110 —The mere fact that Sec 108 may have been applicable does not necessarily make Sec 110 inapplicable—Manindra v Emperor, 46 Cal 215 (234)

254 Secs 109 and 110 —The two sections overlap each other. They must be carefully worked and great care should be taken not to abuse them. The proceedings taken must clearly specify whether the accusation which the accused is to meet is one under section 109 or under sec 110—Mad Pol Man p 89. Therefore where the preliminary order passed by the Magistrate under sec 112 was not clear in that the accused did not know whether the accusation he had to meet was under section 109 or 110 the order was set aside—Q E v Iswari Chandra 11 Cr 13. An order under Sec 110 is not valid during the continuance of an order under Sec 109 the two sections having the same object and the evidence required to secure an order under either section being of the same nature—Ghulam Ali v Emp, 8 C W N 543. A person cannot be bound down under both the sections (109 and 110)—In re Rangaswami, 38 Mad 555 16 Cr I J 631. In re Kosakumaran, 38 Mad 556 16 Cr I J 626.

255 Secs 107 and 110 —When the information set forth in the order of the Magistrate refers to an apprehended breach of the peace, sec 110 is not applicable, but proceedings should be instituted under sec 107. A Magistrate has no authority whatever under the law, upon information that suggests the likelihood of an assault being committed and the peace endangered to resort to sec 110 and it is altogether ultra vires for him to proceed thereunder—Emp v Babua, 6 All 132. Emp v Kallu, 27 All 92. When a Magistrate at first issued notice with reference to sec 110 but subsequently found that the case was under sec 107, he ought not to deal with the case as one under sec 107, without issuing a fresh notice with reference to the altered view of the circumstances. The notice issued with reference to sec 110 cannot be held sufficient to comply with the requirements of law, because the facts necessary to be proved to make the accused liable under sec 110 are different from those under sec 107, and the accused should have notice of the facts on which the Magistrate proposes to proceed against him—Krishna Suman v Lanamamalai, 30 Mad 28.

Similarly, where notice was issued to show cause why the accused should not be bound down to keep the peace under sec 107, he cannot be directed in the final order to execute a bond for good behaviour under Sec 110—Driver v Q E, 25 Cr 798. But where the evidence was recorded at length and the parties had opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses and were not prejudiced, it was held that the irregularity was cured by sec 537—14 Cr L J 65 (Mad).

256 Magistrates empowered —This section only permits the par-

cular Magistrates mentioned herein to deal with the cases falling under it Orders in such cases made by other Magistrates are invalid and without jurisdiction—17 Cr L J 141 (All) In the Punjab, all first class Magistrates have been empowered to act under this section—Punjab Gazette, 32 1882, Part I, p 32 In Madras according to Madras Act III of 1888, Sec 7, the Commissioner of Police can act as a Magistrate under this section

The special power must be conferred by the Local Government only, it cannot be conferred by the District Magistrate—Q E v Khandu, Ratanlal 838 Therefore a first class Magistrate not specially empowered under this section cannot exercise jurisdiction in a case arising under it upon a transfer thereof to him by the District Magistrate—Ibid Satish v Rajendra, 22 Cal 898

257 Information —A Magistrate cannot proceed under this section unless he has the necessary information And there must be some information to work upon before a person can be arrested This section is not intended to empower the Police to arrest a person without any information and then to work out a case against him and give information to the Magistrate—K E v Paimal, 10 A L J 351 13 Cr L J 827 A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to act under this section until he has such information before him as will suffice for his making an order in writing setting forth its substance and the further particulars required by sec 112—K E v Ganesh, 12 A L J 336 15 Cr L J 696 Rajbansi v Emp, 18 A L J 673 42 All 646

Nature and source of information.—There is no limit to the nature and source of information on which a Magistrate may initiate proceedings under this section—27 All 172 But the information cannot be proceeded upon unless it comes from a trustworthy source—Punj Civ p 165

The Magistrate is not bound to reveal the source of the information to the person concerned, for the information is not any evidence against the accused, moreover, if a Magistrate is to set out before the accused the names of the persons from whom he receives information and the nature of the information given, very few well respecting persons would dream of placing any information at the disposal of the Magistrate—In re Mithu Khan, 27 All 171

The words 'receives information' in this section include information howsoever obtained The law does not limit the method in which the Magistrate who is empowered by the Local Government is to receive the information He may receive the information through some other Magistrate. Therefore where the police made a report to the senior Deputy Magistrate that certain persons were in the habit of committing mischief, extortion, and other offences, and that Magistrate forwarded the report to another Magistrate of the first class held that the latter had jurisdiction to institute a proceeding under this section on that report—Hiranand v Emp 1 Pat 621 A I R (1922) Pat 586

As to what is or is not credible information see notes under sec 107

The information to be required by a Magistrate may be to some extent of a hearsay and general description but when the party to whom the order is directed appears in Court in obedience to such order the inquiry must be conducted on the lines laid down in section 117 of the Code—Emp v Babua 6 All 132

Conversations out of Court with persons however respectable are not legal or proper materials upon which to adopt proceedings under this section—6 All 132 It is incumbent on Magistrates to exercise the greatest caution and impartiality and to be careful not to be influenced by outside gossip and vague rumours—1898 P R 4

But although the private information possessed by a Magistrate concerning the accused person cannot be used as if it was evidence in the case yet such information is a form of check which the trial Court may legitimately use in order to test the nature of the evidence with which it has to deal and negative for example, a suggestion that the police investigation has been unfair—Emp v Dattari Singh, 45 All 749 (751)

260 Clause (c)—Aid in concealment of stolen property—This clause is designed to meet only the case of professional receivers of stolen property who assist the thief by protecting him from discovery and arrest and by helping him to dispose of such property—(1910) U B R CR P C 4

Harbouring thief—The harbouring must be to screen the offender from punishment. A person giving food or shelter or medical assistance to a starving or invalid criminal, from mere motives of humanity and not with the intention of enabling him to escape justice does not come within the purview of this section—Ibid

261 Clause (d)—Habitually committing extortion—Sec 110 is not applicable to the case of persons who commit acts of extortion in a certain capacity (e.g. the burkundazes of Zemindars who commit acts of extortion on tenants) in the performance of their duties as it cannot be said that they are in the habit of committing extortion as individual members of the community because, if it so happens that they cease to be in the employ of the Zemindars they would no longer commit those acts of extortion. The proper course of dealing with the case is to prosecute them, or their masters under whose orders they act, for specific acts of oppression—Anookool v. Q. E., 27 Cal 781 /

It was formerly held that persons in the habit of bringing false claims by forged entries (1884 P R 25) or obtaining decrees by means of forged documents (1914 P R 21) did not come under this section as they could not be said to be habitually committing extortion. But these rulings are no longer good law in view of the word forger added to clause (a) by the Amendment Act of 1923.

A person who brings a claim in the Civil Court which he knows to be false commits an offence under sec 209 I P C., but he does not by so doing commit an offence of extortion, if he succeeds in the claim, or an offence of attempting to commit extortion, if he fails in his claim, and he cannot be bound down under this section—20 O C. 129, Bappuji v. Emp., 19 Cr L. J. 885 (Nag)

Committing mischief—This clause applies to persons who habitually commit mischief where the evidence shows the man to be of an excellent character one unsupported charge of mischief by fire does not bring him within the purview of this clause—4 W R. 37

262 Clause (e)—Offences involving breach of the peace—See Note 221 under sec 106

Where the accused, who was found by the Magistrate to be addicted to acts of immorality in attempting to seduce married women and behaving indecently and immodestly to them, was bound over to give security for good behaviour under clause (e) of section 110, held that although the actions of the accused were certainly offences under the law and it might be desirable to control them still the offences were not such as involved a breach of the peace within the meaning of this section and of section 106 and the order for security was illegal—Arun Samant v Emp, 30 Cal 366 The words offences peace in this clause are to bear the same interpretation as in section 106—Ibid (at p 368)

263 Clause (f) —Desperate and dangerous character —A man of desperate and dangerous character in clause (f) means a man who has a reckless disregard of the safety of the person and of the property of his neighbours—Manindra v K E, 46 Cal 215 Wahed Ali v Emp, 11 C W N 789 Evidence of acts of extortion committed by a person, unless those acts were accompanied by acts causing danger to life and property is not sufficient to bring the case under this clause—Wahid Ali v Emp, 11 C W N 789

But where it was found that the accused persons were associated for the purpose of spreading disloyal doctrines among school boys and besides being engaged in preparing the young for the future revolution, were connected with an organisation for the collection of money by dacoity, it was held that the facts were sufficient to bring the case within the clause—Manindra v K E, 46 Cal 215 23 C W N 193 19 Cr L J 696

The following persons though they are undoubtedly persons of bad character, do not come under this clause as they cannot be said to be men of desperate and dangerous character —

A person who had been arrested on suspicion of the commission of a dacoity and released—11 C W N 129 Gulab Chand v Emp, 17 Cr L J 184 (Oudh) 1 Bur S R 422 a person who is known to be a bad character and is earning his living by prostituting one of his wives—Yaghi v Emp, 189 P R 5 a person who had been annoying the neighbours in various ways by knocking at their doors at night or throwing brickbats over their roofs or who had been annoying respectable women—5 C W N 249 a person who attempts to seduce married women and behaves indecently and immodestly to them—Arun Samant v Emp, 30 Cal 366, a person who is a nuisance to his neighbours declines to pay debts, abuses his neighbours and makes indecent overtures to school boys who pass by his shop—Id Asghar v Emp, 16 Cr L J 382 (All.) a person of a violent or turbulent character—In re Narain 6 W R 6 a person who promotes litigation and is said to have had considerable influence with patris—Iskhar Dutt v Emp, 16 A L J 776 19 Cr L J 781

Where the evidence shows that there is an apprehension of the accused committing a breach of the peace by using violence towards a particular person or persons he ought not to be bound over under this section. He may be hazardous to the particular person or persons, but cannot be said to be hazardous to the community. He may be proceeded against under section 107 but not under sec 110.—Emp v Kallu 27 All 92 Emp v Babua 6 All 132

Evidence which was regarded as unreliable and insufficient to convict a person of the charge of dacoity should not be treated as reliable evidence to show that such person is a dangerous and desperate character who ought to be called upon to furnish security for good behaviour.—17 Cr I J 184 (Oulh)

It is not advisable to take proceedings under this section against several persons jointly unless such persons are confederates or partners as against whom all the evidence is equally applicable.—Emp v Angnu Singh 45 All 109 20 A L J 881 Ordinarily under this section every person has to be tried separately for the offences enumerated herein. A joint trial is only permissible when two or more persons have been associated for the purpose of committing the offences mentioned in clauses (a) to (f) of this section. Unless this circumstance is established, a joint trial is illegal and the conviction would be set aside.—Jai Kuo v Emp 3 P I T 538 23 Cr I J 100 But if in a joint trial the evidence against each is separated and considered distinctly there is no prejudice and the order will not be upset.—Shamsuddin v Emp 26 Cr I J 1114 (Nag)

The joint trial of several persons who were habitually associating together for committing the offences mentioned in this section is not illegal merely because they did not belong to the same village.—Rahim Bux v Emp 23 Cr I J 58 (Cal)

271 Evidence under this section.—The evidence that is required to justify an order under this section is not necessarily evidence that the accused has committed definite criminal offences but it must be proved by evidence of general repute or otherwise that he comes within the category of one of the clauses (a) to (f)—Shir Zamrin v Emp 1899 P R 10 The mere fact that a man has a bad character does not necessarily make him liable to be called upon to furnish security for good behaviour. There must be satisfactory evidence that he answers to one of the descriptions mentioned in the section.—6 All 132, 4 A W P 117, 6 Cal 14 14 All 45, In re Karuppanan 8 W I T 246 11 Cr L J 638 Haku v Emp 1891 P R 12 Sohan v Emp 26 Cr I J 1377 The mere fact that a person has a record of several previous convictions does not satisfy the requirements of this section and he cannot be ordered to give security on that fact alone.—In re Raja 10 Bom 174 (175), 13 C W N 318 The evidence must be of such a character that it will reasonably support the inference that it is necessary in the interests of public security to send the man to prison or to bind him down—Ahmuddi v Emp 22 A L J 678 25 Cr L J 117. The evidence that a certain person is of bad character is not sufficient to put him on security under this section. There should be clear evidence on the record to show what exactly he had been doing and how he had been living. Where there is strong evidence of apparently respectable men on the record to show that a person has not in recent times lived a disreputable life, and such evidence has not been rebutted security under this section ought not to be demanded—1916 P L R 30 Siam Lal v K L 6 A L J 487 9 Cr L J 528. The mere fact that sixteen years ago the accused had on three occasions been bound over is no ground for considering that he is still a bad character and has not reformed himself, and is not a ground of action under this section against him—Jagat Singh v Emp 23 Cr L J 507. A Magistrate should not pass an order under this section where the witnesses for the prosecution are mostly enemies of the accused—Shakur v Emp 24 Cr L J 565 26 O C 242 Wali Md v Emp 25 Cr L J 808 (Lah) Gur Datt v Emp 26 Cr L J 99 (Oudh).

In a trial under this section the Magistrate must act on evidence duly recorded in the presence of the accused and it is not open to him to take into consideration any information obtained otherwise than from such evidence. He must not act on anything extraneous to the evidence on the record e.g. an information obtained from local inquiries—San Dun v A L 2 Rang 641 (612).

Police evidence—In proceedings under this section the evidence of official and Police witnesses should as far as possible be eschewed. Though there is no rule of law which prohibits a Magistrate from admitting Police evidence it should if not wholly discarded influence his judgment as little as possible. Where the evidence of the police witnesses consists only of rumours and hearsay which they have recorded in their note books and diaries it is wholly inadmissible—In re Panga Reddi 35 M L J 97 43 Mad 450. Entries in the Thana Village Crime Note Book are in themselves no evidence to support an order under this section—22 Cr L J 486 (Cal). A Magistrate should not act on information not given in evidence but obtained from a perusal of the police-diary—Jhanda v A L 25 Cr L J 45 (All).

The history sheets kept by the Police of persons proceeded against under this section cannot be taken into consideration by the Court. Mere suspicion is not evidence —The powers under this section are to be exercised very sparingly and only in those cases where the evidence is very clear and precise Where, beyond the mere suspicion that the accused are habitual thieves nothing substantial has been established an action under this section is not justified—Jagat Singh v Emp 13 Cr L J 507 Amjad Ali v Emp 5 P L T 129 Where the only evidence against the accused was that he was a man of bad character and was suspected on many occasions by the Police an order under this section could not be sustained—Emp v Husain Ahmed 1905 A W N 34 A person ought not to be bound down on the mere statement of witnesses that they suspect the accused to be a thief or a dacoit—11 C W N 413 11 C W N 129 The fact that he was once convicted of theft and his house was searched on several occasions (but no stolen property was found) and he was said to have associated with two or three persons of bad character does not justify an order under this section—Kashim v Crown 1907 P L R 23 5 Cr L J 24

Where the only thing appearing against the accused was that he was on a previous occasion arrested in connection with a dacoity, but the police considered the evidence against him of so little value that he was released under sec 169 without even being placed before the Court held that this fact was insufficient for binding over the accused under this section—Jhandoo v A E 15 Cr L J 45 A I R (1924) All 124 Sital Din v Emp 15 Cr L J 366 (Oudh) A I R (1925) Oudh 49 But if the evidence in support of the charge under section 110 is antecedent to the charge for the substantive offence (dacoity) and is wholly independent of it the proceedings under section 110 are not illegal—Sital Din v Emp (supra)

The burden of proving the bad character of an accused is on the prosecution and therefore when the evidence on both sides is of an indifferent and interested character the prosecution must fail—1903 P R 27 Sukha v Empress 1898 P R 4

Evidence of habit—The persons mentioned in this section are those who are habitual criminals and the habit is to be proved by an aggregate of acts—6 M H C R 120 The word habitually must be taken to mean repeatedly or persistently The word habit means persistence in doing an act a fact which is capable of proof by adducing evidence of the commission of a number of similar acts—Government v Hanman Rao 25 Cr L J 60 (Nag) The fact that a person was on only one occasion suspected of theft is no evidence that he is a habitual thief—Ishay Singh v Emp 1880 P R 32 The fact that a person has been convicted on a former occasion is not sufficient to justify the finding that he is an habitual offender unless there is some additional evidence to show that he has again done some acts that indicate an intention on his part to return to his former course of life—2 All 835 Oudh S C No 70 and to constitute as habitual offender it is necessary that the subsequent offences charged should have been committed by the accused after his previous conviction—Q E v Appa Ratanlal 143

Evidence of acts of misconduct committed by a person years ago is admissible as indicating formation of habit But such evidence unless supplemented by evidence of misconduct committed by such person within a year or so, cannot justify the making of an order under Sec 118—Haid Ali v Emp 11 C W N 789 6 Cr L J 1

Proof of previous convictions —Whenever it is required to prove previous convictions against a man in a proceeding under this chapter such previous convictions must be proved strictly and in accordance with law, unless they are so proved no Court can properly take such previous convictions into consideration against an accused person—K E v Sheikh Abdul 43 Cal 1128 20 C W N 725 17 Cr L J 185 See sec 311

272 Evidence of general repute —Under Sec 117 (4) the fact that a person is a habitual offender or a desperate and dangerous character may be proved by evidence of general repute

A man's general reputation is the reputation which he bears in the place in which he lives amongst all the townsmen, and if it is proved that a man who lives in a particular place is looked upon by his fellow townsmen whether they happen to know him or not as a man of good repute, that is strong evidence that he is a man of good character On the other hand if the state of things is that the body of his fellow townsmen who know him look upon him as a dangerous man and a man of bad habits that is strong evidence that he is a man of bad character—3 Cal 621 Jogendra v A E 25 C W N 334 22 Cr L J 377, 1 L B R 90, Raghubir v A E 10 O C 168 5 O C 203, 10 O C 132, Emp v Jagar Nath 1903 A W N 181 Kewal Kishore v Emp, 12 O L J 413 26 Cr L J 1283

Where in a proceeding under this section the accused person is able to produce witnesses on his behalf to speak of his good character the Court ought to pay particular attention to such evidence and to give substantial reason for not believing such evidence before it makes an order under section 118—Kamilagan v Emp 5 P L T 166 25 Cr

J 985 Amjad Ali v Emp 5 P L T 129 25 Cr L J 35, Halim Singh v Emp, 13 A L J 1055 Where the accused who was a Zenundar and money lender produced a large number of witnesses consisting of his own caste fellows and tenants to depose to his good character, but the Magistrate disbelieved the evidence simply on the ground that the accused by virtue of his position could produce a large number of witnesses, and assigned no other legitimate reason held that the case had not been approached from a proper point of view, and the High Court could interfere in revision—Miharban v Emp 13 A L J 1046 16 Cr L J 805

Nature of the evidence—Evidence of general repute may be either the evidence as to the general opinion of the community or neighbourhood or the personal opinion of the witnesses who are examined But the opinion need not necessarily be the opinion of the entire community but at least the opinion of a considerable number of persons—Bechan v A I 12 A L J 937 15 Cr L J 705 43 Mad 450 Hewil Hishore v Emp 12 O L J 413 26 Cr L J 1283 Duma Singh v A I, 5 O C 703

The persons who testify to the character of the accused must be respectable persons who are acquainted with the accused (43 Mad 450) and should not ordinarily be officials—Nga Han v K I, 8 Bar L T 53 16 Cr L J 353 Thus when a large body of respectable persons testified to the character of the accused against the evidence of Police officers the opinion of the former should be accepted, and an order under this section should not be made—1910 P W R 37

Evidence of accused's own caste fellows and neighbours is certainly the best sort of evidence available—Gur Balsh v Emp 12 Cr L J 542 (Oudh) Where witnesses voluntarily come forward as friends or relatives or caste-fellows of the accused to give evidence about the good character of the accused they must not be brushed aside unless they are discredited as regards their good faith and honesty—Emp v Angnu Singh 45 All 109 (113) 24 Cr L J 257, Emp v Rahu 43 All 186 (190) 18 A L J 1114 Hawal Hishore v A I, 12 O L J 413 26 Cr L J 1283 In fact when the caste-fellows of the accused voluntarily come forward and say that they regard the accused as the head of their brotherhood and they consider it a slur upon their community that the accused should be treated as a habitual robber or dacoit it shows the good faith of the witnesses and their honest and emphatic belief that the accused is a respectable person enjoying the confidence of his community The Magistrate ought not to discredit the evidence of these witnesses—Emp v Rahu 43 All 186 (190) 18 A L J 1114 22 Cr L J 115

But it is not always necessary that the persons who testify to the character of the accused should live in the immediate neighbourhood of the accused—11 C W N 789 Thus a series of dacoities having taken place in a certain village the evidence of general reputation of the accused coming from the people of the village where the dacoities took place is certainly to be treated as evidence of general repute although the accused did not live among those people—35 Cal 243 It is not right to discard the evidence of witnesses who speak to the reputation of the accused merely because they are not his immediate neighbours A man's general reputation in the place in which he lives among the inhabitants of that place is not always conclusive because it is quite possible for a cunning rogue to conceal his real character from his immediate neighbours What the Court has to do is to satisfy itself that the evidence of the witnesses is true, and if it is satisfied on this point then it is entitled to accept the evidence Where a witness lives at a considerable distance from the person of whose reputation he speaks the Court should of course inquire how he came by that knowledge and should take his answer into consideration in framing its estimate of the value of the evidence—A L v Po Yan 2 Rang 686 4 Bur L J 6 26 Cr L J 528

Moreover the persons testifying to the character of the accused must speak from their personal knowledge A vague and general statement that a man is a habitual offender is not sufficient Evidence of repute in respect of an accused person must be evidence of persons who are speaking to matters within their own personal knowledge and not from mere hearsay—Rup Singh v A F 1 A L J 616 Kallu v Emp 19 A L J 39 22 Cr L J 314 Lmp v Angnu Singh 45 All 109 (113) San Dun v A 1 2 Rang 641 (643) Deodhar v Emp 6 P L T 810 26 Cr L J 738

Mere rumour is not repute evidence of rumour is mere hearsay evidence of a particular fact evidence of repute is a totally different thing Rumours in a particular place that a man had done particular acts or his characteristics of a certain kind are not evidence of general repute—3 Cal 61 Rajendra v A L 1 A L J 611 1918 M W N 731 Ramlogan v Lmp 5 P L T 166 Evidence of a association with bad characters is evidence of reputation but such reputation can only be based upon association with proved bad characters and not with reputed bad characters—13 C W N 318

The witnesses must give their own opinion and their statements must not be mere repetitions of what other persons said to them about the accused and when they give their own opinion they may be asked to give the grounds of their opinion and to give names of the persons whom they have heard speak against the character of the accused—Tetlat v A L 12 A L J 937 15 Cr L J 705 Hewel Kashore v Lmp 12 O L J 413 Mere repetitions unaccompanied by direct evidence personally affecting each accused is insufficient in a case under this section—Lmp

v Angnu Singh 45 All 109 24 Cr L J 257 The evidence must relate to particular instances which have come to the knowledge of the witness and must be specific Evidence relating to mere beliefs and opinions without reference to acts or instances which have induced the witnesses to form an opinion cannot be regarded as evidence of repute The test of the admissibility of the evidence of general opinion is whether it shows the general reputation of the accused and it should at least be the opinion of a considerable number of persons It must not be the repetition of what certain persons have said to the witnesses It should be the evidence of respectable persons acquainted with the accused who live in the neighbourhood and are aware of his reputation—43 Mad 450 Ramlagan v Emp 5 P L T 166

The repute must be universal and there should be no doubt about it—Jhandu Ram v Crown 1915 P L R 15 16 Cr L J 106 Masti Khan v Emp 1897 P R 2 1898 P R 2 Wali Muhammad v Emp 25 Cr L J 808 (Lah) i.e. the evidence must be so general and overwhelming as to leave no doubt that the accused has been in the habit of committing the offences imputed—Ratanlal 639 Where as many good witnesses come forward to state that the man's reputation is good as those who state the contrary it can hardly be held safely that the man's general reputation is bad unless there is something to corroborate the evidence of witnesses against him—Ajmal Shah v Emp 1898 P R 2 Rajendra Prasad v A C 1 A L J 611

Mere suspicion against the accused is not evidence of general repute Statements of witnesses each of whom says that he suspected the accused to be implicated in this or that isolated offence do not amount to evidence of general repute—Dechar v A C, 12 A L J 937 15 Cr L J 705, Amyad Ali v Emp 5 P L T 179 So also, evidence of cases in which the accused was suspected is not evidence of general repute—Raham Ali v A C 11 A L J 461 14 Cr L J 407 12 A L J 937 20 Cr L J 689 (All) Where in a proceeding under this section the prosecution witnesses giving evidence of general repute say that they suspect the accused to be a thief or dacoit because his house was searched and he was arrested on several occasions such a suspicion is not sufficient evidence against the accused Where there is positive evidence for the defence that the accused is a good man it is not a sufficient reason for casting it a file to say that proof of malice against the accused on the part of the prosecution is wanting—21 Cr L J 170 (Cal)

But an evidence that a person had been suspected and named in a large number of cases extending over a considerable interval may be very useful corroboration of general evidence against him Conversely in a doubtful case the fact that a person has never been suspected of any offence may weaken the general evidence of reputation that is given against him—22 Cr L J 273 (Oudh)

The fact that an accused person has been acquitted of a particular charge may diminish and will diminish in many cases and many even destroy wholly, the value of the evidence* but does not render it inadmissible—Budhan v Emp 23 A L J 507 47 All 733 26 Cr L J 1130

In order to establish general repute for the purposes of section 117, the evidence of the investigating police officer is inadmissible and irrelevant—Rameshwar v Emp 1 P L T 632 21 Cr L J 321

273 Duty of Court to test the evidence —The fact that a man is a habitual offender may not always be proved by actual previous convictions and it is necessary to prove it by evidence of general repute. But the Magistrate should take great care where no previous conviction is proved to test the evidence for the prosecution and assure himself beyond reasonable doubt that the accused is really a habitual offender of the class named. The Magistrate cannot convict a person on mere vague evidence of bad repute—Q E v Talakchand 2 Bom L R 57 1 Bur S R 542. Where the evidence for the prosecution is of a vague character, and when a case has to be established merely upon evidence of bad repute the Court should take into consideration the value and weight of evidence tendered on behalf of the prosecution as compared with that for the defence—Gur Baksh v Emp 12 Cr L J 542 (Oudh)

The Court (whether original or appellate) must show by its judgment that it has duly weighed and examined the evidence for and against the accused in the case. Where therefore in a proceeding started under Sec 110 Crim Pro Code the judgment ran. It is obvious that if one quarter of the evidence for the prosecution is true—and I see no reason to doubt that it is—the appellant is a most proper person to be bound over under S 110 Crim Pro Code. held that the judgment was bad and must be set aside and the case sent back for retrial—18 Cr L J 649 (Oudh). Where the Appellate Court in a case under this section wrote a judgment of four lines without giving even an indication of the fact that he had weighed the evidence for and against the accused held that there had not been a proper trial of the case and that it should be retried—Sarwan v Emp 14 A L J 279 17 Cr L J 167

Evidence should be tested by its quality rather than by its quantity. When the evidence on the side of the prosecution and the defence is found to be of an indifferent character the prosecution must fail. If the quality of evidence is good on both sides the case must also fail if the evidence for the defence over balances that for the prosecution—Sulka v Emp, 158 P R 4 27 Cal 751 11 A L J 461. Where as many as 10 reliable persons come forward and testify to the good character of the accused the

Magistrate should not reject their evidence and pass an order under this section merely because the prosecution produces a larger number of witnesses—Bahadur v Emp 27 O C 377 26 Cr L J 530 Gur Dayal v Emp 26 Cr L J 99 (Oudh) On the other hand the accused is not entitled to be acquitted merely because the defence witnesses are as numerous as or more numerous than the prosecution witnesses but it is the weight of the evidence and not the number of the witnesses which the Court has to consider—Kamal Kishore v Emp 12 O L J 413 26 Cr L J 1283 A I R (1935) Oudh 473 Gur Din v A E 24 O C 225 22 Cr L J 647

274. Examination of witnesses.—In a proceeding under this section the Magistrate is bound to examine all the witnesses produced by the accused. Where the trying Magistrate declined to examine on behalf of the defence more than the same number of witnesses as were examined for the prosecution held that it was not open to the trying Magistrate to put such an arbitrary limit on the witnesses whose evidence the defence desired to adduce—Azurulla v King Emp 22 C W N 408 Where witnesses are cited for the defence in proceedings under this section time and opportunity should be given to have them produced and then only should order be passed—Pauliram v Emp 38 C L J 285

Magistrates should be careful not to allow an unnecessarily large number of witnesses to be examined which would amount to a scandalous waste of public time and Magisterial energy—Emp v Angun Singh 45 All 109 (112) 20 A I J 881 In this case the Police produced as many as 76 witnesses to prove the bad character of the accused (which took more than two months to examine them) and the total number of witnesses produced in the case was 40 the examination of which occupied 6 months. The High Court severely condemned the procedure observing It seems to me monstrous and to amount to something like persecution that each individual (accused) should be condemned to submit to and to employ counsel for the examination and cross examination of a number like 76 witnesses during a proceeding lasting over two months. If the police cannot satisfy an experienced Magistrate with less than 76 witnesses or in less than two months that a man is a badmash the sooner they surrender the task at its inception, the better for the interests of public justice. It is the duty of the District Magistrate if he thinks that 10 or 12 witnesses are as a rule sufficient for a case of this kind and he finds one of his subordinate officers permitting 76 to lay down some rule of common sense to guide his subordinates in the exercise of their discretion not a cast iron rule like the section of a Code but something to enable them to guide their own proceedings within reasonable limits—per Walsh J (at p. 111)

Further Inquiry.—See Note 295 under sec 110. Section 436 as now amended does not apply to cases under this chapter and therefore further inquiry cannot be directed in a case of discharge under sec 110.

275 Order for security.—The provision of law which requires sureties for the bond is made not with a view to obtain money for the Crown by the forfeiture of recognizances but to ensure that the particular accused person shall be of good behaviour for the time mentioned in the order—Q. E. v Rahim Baksh 20 All 206 10 Bom 174 Therefore, an order under this section requiring persons to deposit cash in lieu of entering into a bond for their future good behaviour is bad in law—Emp v Kala Chand 6 Cal 14

Under this section, the Magistrate can pass an order directing the person to give security. But an order directing that the person must leave the town at once or he will be prosecuted as a bad character" is illegal and ultra vires—Ram Prasad v Emp, 19 A L J 951 23 Cr L J 122

An order should not be made under this section, where a previous proceeding against the same accused had resulted in his discharge and only a short interval had elapsed between the previous proceeding and the institution of the present proceedings—Shakur v Emp, 26 O C 242

It is illegal for a Magistrate to call upon a person to furnish security soon after the expiry of the term of imprisonment to which he was sentenced for past offences. Before passing such an order the accused should be questioned as to his means and intention of earning an honest livelihood, and he should not be subjected to penalties unless it is shown that there is no reasonable prospect of his future good behaviour—In re Raja, 10 Bom 174 (175)

Fresh security after expiry of term of bond,—Where a bond for good behaviour expired on the 13th of June 1905, and on the 20th June fresh proceedings were started against him, it was held that the order was illegal in as much as the accused was not given a sufficient opportunity of showing that he was willing to adopt an honest livelihood, and the interval was not long enough to see whether the accused has reformed his course of life or not—28 All 306

A person who was previously bound over to be of good behaviour under this section cannot soon after his release, be handed up again on vague evidence of suspicion without any tangible evidence to show that he has been leading a life of crime. A convict should be given sufficient opportunity to reform himself before he is handed up again—Ikkara v Emperor, 18 Cr L J 710 (Oudh). Where the accused was imprisoned for one year for failure to furnish security, and several months afterwards fresh proceedings were instituted against him as a result of which he was ordered to execute a bond for good behaviour, it was held that the order was bad, that the accused has not had a sufficient locus penitentie, and that the evil reputation which he had before his imprisonment still followed him and permeated the evidence of many of the witnesses—31 Cal.

111 [Repealed]

This section has been repealed by section 8 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XII of 1913) It ran as follows —

‘111 The provisions of sections 109 and 110 do not apply to European British subjects in cases where they may be dealt with under the European Vagrancy Act 1874

We consider that section 111 should be repealed and that sections 109 and 110 should apply equally to Europeans and Indians —Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee para 16

112 When a Magistrate acting under section 107, section 108, section 109 or section 110 deems it necessary to require any person to show cause under such section he shall make an order in writing, setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed the term for which it is to be in force, and the number character and class of sureties (if any) required

278 Scope —The provisions of this section must be complied with by a Magistrate passing a preliminary order under the Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act (II of 1919) and if that order does not set forth the substance of the information received and the term during which the order of restriction shall be in force the entire proceeding is irregular and orders passed therein must be set aside—Parsodan v A C 2 Rang 524

279 Order in writing —A Magistrate acting under this Chapter has no power to act until he has recorded an order in writing under this section —Rameshwar v A C 36 All 262 12 A L J 365 The issue of a warrant under Sec 115 without recording an order under this section is illegal—2 Weir 55 So also where the accused persons were arrested as suspected habitual thieves and the Magistrate fixed a date for the production of evidence with the object of issuing a notice under section 112 but on the date fixed after hearing the prosecution evidence he at once called upon the accused to enter upon his defence to a charge under section 110 held that the procedure was illegal and the proceeding must be set aside It is only after the Magistrate has recorded an order under sec 112 that the actual hearing can by law take place at all—Rajbansi v Emp 42 All 646 22 Cr L J 228 In 10 O C 365 however it has been held that the provisions of this section are purely directory and a failure to record the order is a mere irregularity In In re Kavallam 26 M L T 385 20 Cr L J 763 it was held that the omission to draw up a proceeding under this section or to serve a copy of the order on the accused under section 115 did not vitiate the proceedings if the order was drawn up later and read out and explained to the accused who appeared in Court in pursuance of a summons

280 Contents of the order —The Magistrate should be very careful in drawing up the preliminary order bearing in mind the provisions of Sec 118 which lays down that the final order shall not be at variance with the preliminary order passed under section 112

(a) Substance of the information—This should be stated with sufficient fulness for the accused person to have a clear understanding of the matter that he has to meet in his defence—Punj Cir Chap XLIV p 166 Under this section the substance of the report made to the Magistrate should be clearly disclosed to the accused so that he may be informed of the charges or of the nature of the evidence which he is to rebut Thus a notice under section 110 must contain something more than a mere reproduction of the clauses of the section There should be sufficient indication of the time and place of the acts charged and sufficient details which enable the accused to know what facts he is to meet—43 Mad 450 Aripa-mudhu v Emp 19 Cr L J 905 1918 M W N 751 The parties are entitled to something more than a mere assertion in writing by the Magistrate that he has been informed that an offence (e.g a breach of the peace) is likely to be committed in order to enable them to bring evidence to rebut the truth of such information—6 All 114 11 Cal 13 The parties are entitled to know the nature of the accusation they have to meet and to a reasonable opportunity within which to prepare themselves to meet the accusation and to cite witnesses—11 Cal 13 6 All 214, 43 Mad 450 The accused is entitled to be told the nature and extent of the information on which the Magistrate intends to base the action against him It is that communication which is expected to enable the accused to summon witnesses on his side Therefore if the substance of the report made to the Magistrate is not clearly disclosed and the accused is not informed of the charges and of the nature of the evidence that he is to rebut the proceedings cannot be regarded as legal—Punga Pradhi v K E 43 Mad 450 38 M L J 97 21 Cr L J 3541 Maung Tun v Emp 4 Bur L J 17 Where a notice under sec 107 did not at all state when the threats complained of were uttered who were the persons who were threatened and when the apprehension of a breach of the peace arose held that the notice was vague and bad in law—Konda Reddi v K E, 41 Mad 246 18 Cr L J 878 A notice which is very meagre and does not contain sufficient details regarding the charges brought against the persons must be held not to comply with the provisions of the Code and this defect cannot be remedied by any explanation given by the Prosecuting Inspector at the commencement of the trial—In re Kuthi Goundan, 47 M L J 689 A I R (1915) Mad 189 26 Cr L J 673

Merely informing an accused person that he is suspected to be a habitual thief is not a sufficient notice There must be something in the nature of an indictment or charge containing substantial particulars indicating the grounds upon which the police have given information to the Magistrate—Rajbansi v Emp 18 A L J 678 42 All 646

In a proceeding under section 107 the Magistrate may give only the substance of the information received and it is not necessary to specify the definite acts which the accused intends to commit—16 A L J 567 In proceedings under sect on 110 an order by the Magistrate stating that he has received some reliable information (though not definite) that the accused is a habitual cattle thief and a receiver of stolen goods is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of this section—In re Kala 1896 A W N 73

But a Magistrate is not bound to give the source of the information —In re Mithu 27 All 172 29 Cal 392 It is also not necessary to give a list of the prosecution witnesses in the order—35 Cal 243

The omission to set forth the substance of the information will not of itself be sufficient to render the proceeding and the final order null and void unless the accused has been prejudiced by the omission and a failure of justice has been occasioned—15 W R 43 3 All 545 8 Cal 724 1891 A W N 140 Tanwar v Emp 26 Cr L J 1398 (Sind) the omission in the notice to give detailed information as to the nature of the evidence for the prosecution is not an irregularity sufficient to vitiate the proceedings especially if the accused had cross examined at great length the witnesses for the prosecution—20 Cr L J 436 (Pat) or if as a matter of fact the accused had clear notice of the case made against them and had ample time and opportunity to let in evidence—Jai Singh v Emp 23 Cr L J 42 (Pat)

(b) The amount of bond —The summons (i.e. the order in writing which is to accompany the summons under section 115) should strictly specify the amount and nature of the security required and the time for which the security is to run—20 W R 36 Omission to specify the amount of the recognizance and the surety is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate further proceedings—8 Cal 724

(c) The term of the bond —The order should set forth a definite period for which security is to be demanded—3 Mad 238 But this term should not be unnecessarily lengthy Thus where a disturbance of the peace was apprehended in a fair which was to last for a fortnight an order demanding security for a period of one year is unnecessary and excessive—6 All 214

(d) Number character and class of sureties —The Magistrate in setting forth the number, character and class of sureties should not place undue and unnecessary difficulties in the way of finding them—Rahmatulla v Emp. 22 Cr L J 395 (All) The Magistrate should not impose impossible restrictions, as the provisions of this chapter are preventive and not penal—1 S L R 46

But of course it is reasonable to expect and require that the sureties must not live at such a distance as would make it unlikely for them to exercise any control over the accused—20 All 206, and so where the sureties lived at a distance of 13 miles, they were rejected—Emp v Babu 1898 A. W. N. 199, 1895 A. W. N. 143 A condition requiring that the sureties should be neighbours of the accused is reasonable—Id Ibrahim v Crown 8 S L R 322 16 Cr L J 479, Allahdad v Emp. 17 S I R 160 See Note 302 under Sec 122

Lastly, as regards the class of sureties Since section 112 gives the Magistrate power to define the character and class of sureties, it is open to him to require that they must be landholders or persons having a certain pecuniary status—20 All 206, 16 Bom I R 138, Allahdad v Emp. 17 S I R 460, 8 S L R 229. (but see Wasa v Emp. 1901 P R 28); or that they should be of respectable character and should not be of inferior standing to suspects—8 S I R 173 But a condition that the sureties must not be landbaridars, namdars and Chowkidars (1906 P R 18) or that they must not come from Kakrahi and must not be kunbi by caste (Q F v Bawa 1 Bom L R 520) is too restrictive and illegal

As regards inquiry into the fitness of sureties and the grounds for the rejection see section 122

113 If the person in respect of whom such order is made is present in Court it shall be read over to him or if he so desires the substance thereof shall be explained to him

Procedure in respect of person present in Court

Is present in Court —Even if persons are illegally arrested and brought into Court the Magistrate is justified in treating the persons as present in Court and may proceed to initiate proceedings—Emp v Ghulam Husain 12 Cr L J 533 (Bom)

114 If such person is not present in Court the Magistrate shall issue a summons requiring him to appear or when such person is in custody a warrant directing the officer in whose custody he is to bring him before the Court

Summons or warrant in case of person not so present

Provided that whenever it appears to such Magistrate, upon the report of a police-officer or upon other information (the substance of which report or information shall be recorded by the Magistrate) that there is reason to fear the commission of a breach of the peace and that such breach of the peace cannot be prevented otherwise than by the immediate arrest of such person the Magistrate may at any time issue a warrant for his arrest

281 Issue of summons —Where a charge of criminal trespass and mischief was dismissed and thereupon the Magistrate recorded an order in the presence of both parties calling on them to show cause on a day fixed why they should not furnish security for keeping the peace it was held that it was not necessary to issue a summons to them—2 B L R App 26

Where a Magistrate issued a notice with reference to section 110 but at the time of inquiry passed an order demanding security under section 107 it was held that the Magistrate ought to have issued a fresh notice with reference to section 107 to enable the party to know the facts on which the Magistrate intended to proceed against him—30 Mad 282

The notice issued to the accused to appear and show cause must give him sufficient time to produce his evidence So where notice was served on the 7th requiring the accused to appear on the 9th it was held that sufficient time was not given and the order for security was set aside—

22 W R 70

282 Issue of Warrant—Section 114 contains two stringent elements obviously directed against all considered precipitancy on the part of the Magistrate in making an order for immediate arrest. He must be of opinion that the only way of preventing a breach of the peace is to commit the person to custody and he must put on record the substance of the Police report or other information by which he is influenced—Mamruddin v Emp 5 P L T 95 24 Cr L J 829

To justify an arrest under this section the Magistrate must act upon information that has been recorded. It is not enough for him to merely express a belief that such a course is necessary. Not only must he have reason to fear the commission of a breach of the peace but it must also be shown that such breach of the peace cannot be prevented otherwise than by the immediate arrest of such person—Emp v Babua 6 All 132

284 Person outside jurisdiction—A Magistrate cannot legally issue a warrant under this section for the arrest of a person who has already left the local limits of his jurisdiction. The person proceeded against must be actually and physically present in the district in which the Magistrate exercises jurisdiction—In re Ramjiban 14 Bom L R 889 13 Cr L J 706. But see Manindra v Emp 16 Cal 215 (236) where it is held that section 114 is not limited to arrest within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction but applies to an accused arrested outside the jurisdiction and brought in custody within the jurisdiction for the purpose of proceeding under this chapter. See Note 259 under section 110.

115. Every summons or warrant issued under Section 114 shall be accompanied by a copy of the order made under Section 112 and such copy shall be delivered by the officer serving or executing such summons or warrant to the person served with, or arrested under, the same.

116. The Magistrate may if he sees sufficient cause, dispense with the personal attendance of any person called upon to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond for keeping the peace and may permit him to appear by a pleader

Where the person against whom proceedings were taken lived at a distance and there was no special circumstance making his personal attendance necessary it would be a very unwise exercise of jurisdiction to require him to appear personally, since the Magistrate could under this section allow him to appear by a pleader—12 Cal 133

117. (1) When the order under Section 112 has been read or explained under Section 113 to a person present in Court or when any person appears or is brought before a Magistrate in compliance with, or in execution of, a summons or warrant issued under section 114, the Magistrate shall proceed to inquire into the truth of the information upon which action has been taken, and to take such further evidence as may appear necessary

The Magistrate trying a case is bound by law to hear those witnesses only whose list is sent up by the Police along with the case, and as soon as the witnesses produced in support of the case have been heard, the Magistrate is then to ascertain the names of the persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case, and shall summon to give evidence only such of them as he thinks necessary. Sub-section (3) —“This sub-section has been added¹ to enable the Magistrate in emergent cases to take immediate steps to preserve the public peace or for the public safety by taking security pending the detailed inquiry”—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

289 Sub-section (4)—Evidence of general repute —See this subject fully discussed in Note 272 under section 110

Prior to the amendment of this sub section, evidence of general repute was admissible only in those cases where the person was a habitual offender within the meaning of clauses (a) to (e) of section 110. It could not be adduced to prove under clause (f) of that section that a man was a desperate and dangerous character—Emp v Indar 40 All 372, 19 Cr L J 871 (Nag), In re Ranga Reddi 43 Mad 450, 29 Cal 779, Babu Murfaza v K L 9 O C 69, 1905 A W N 41, Wahid Ali v Emp, 11 C W N 789, 5 C W N 249, Nur Muhammad v Crown, 1917 P W R 8. These rulings are no longer good law in view of the amendment of sub section (4) of the present section.

But the evidence of general repute is not admissible in a case where a person is called upon to furnish security under section 107 of the Code—Emp v Bidyapati, 25 All 273, Banarasi Das v Emp, 1888 P R 16.

‘Or otherwise’;—According to the general rule of interpretation the word ‘otherwise’ must be read as meaning something ejusdem generis with the particular or particulars alleged above it e.g. hearsay evidence. It is clear that the intention of the Legislature is that the Magistrate should use very large discretion as to the evidence which he may admit in the proceedings—Emp v Kallu Mal 1904 A W N 140.

The expression ‘or otherwise’ would include statements made by some of the co accused amounting to a confession of the actual commission of the offence and incriminating the other accused—Sarju v Emperor, 41 All 231.

290 Sub-section (5)—Joint trial —Under this section, the persons who had been associated together may be tried jointly. But there must be clear evidence to prove the association—Deodhari v Emp, 6 P L T 810 : 26 Cr L J 738. Where it was clearly established that the accused (who were father and his three sons) were associated together and formed a gang, and the evidence against them was all the same, held that the case was one in which the accused could be rightly dealt with together and that any minute inquiry into the complicity of each of the accused individually was not necessary—Parasulla v K L, 13 C W N 244. If a gang of disorderly persons join together in jointly committing acts of violence or criminal intimidation, proceedings against the whole gang in the same case are proper, and it suffices in such cases that some members of the gang committed various acts. It is not necessary that the evidence should establish that on every occasion the whole gang were together. It is sufficient if the evidence establishes that there is a gang of persons joining together to commit such acts as the security section exists to prevent—Bakaram v Imp 3 Cr I J 741 (Nag). Where certain persons serving under a common master were found to have committed certain acts of extortion for the benefit of their master held that although each of the acts alleged was not done by all of them together yet they were so associated together as to justify a joint inquiry—Srikant v Imp J C W N 898.

The fact that persons are members of an undivided family would not by itself render each member liable for the misconduct of any other member. The test to be applied is whether there has been habitual association between the persons charged in respect of the misconduct alleged in the complaint—Kripasindhu v Imp 1918 M W L 751 19 Cr I J 905. Where no such association is proved a joint inquiry is improper but the trial need not be set aside unless it is shown that the accused was actually prejudiced or that the trial led to an improper order being passed—Babu Murlara v A E 9 O C 69 Q E v Abdul Kadir 9 All 452.

Even where the association of the several accused is established satisfactorily the Magistrate has a discretion to try the accused jointly or separately—Hari Telang v Q L 27 Cal 781 6 Cal 96 Jai Gound v K E 15 O C 263. Although there is no legal prohibition in jointly trying a number of persons proceeded against under sec 107 still it is highly unjust and unfair to proceed against them jointly unless it is apparent that they formed a gang. The case of each has to be considered separately and this is not likely to be effected if the trial is joint—Muhammed Ismail v Imp 1 A L J 841 25 Cr I J 957.

Association what is not—In the absence of any evidence to prove that the persons constituted a gang the mere fact that they belonged to one tribe and village with a bad name is not sufficient evidence of association and therefore they cannot be tried jointly in one and the same proceeding—1895 P R 1. Thus the fact that the accused persons are close neighbours and had been previously implicated in good many cases together, does not lead to the inference that they were associated together in the particular offence under inquiry, and does not justify a joint trial of them all—Jogendra v Imp 21 Cr L J 700 (Cal).

The word association cannot apply to such cases where the offence is purely personal to the offender. For instance the question whether the person is a habitual thief or not is personal to himself and forms a separate matter by itself. So where four persons were charged under Sec 110 (a) as being thieves by habit it was held that there was an error in law in trying them all together—4 L B R 46. So also the fact that the accused are desperate and dangerous persons hazardous to the community, is a fact which pertains to each accused separately, and there is no such connection between them in regard to their character which may be deemed as habitual association. Consequently, proceedings should be taken separately against each of the accused persons—Hari Telang v Q E, 27 Cal 781. In re Kullu Gounden, 47 M L J. 689. A I. R. (1925) Mad 189.

Again sub section (5) does not authorise a Magistrate to deal with persons charged under separate sections in one and the same inquiry. Thus, a person called upon to give security under section 109 and another person called upon to give security under sec 110 cannot be tried together in the same proceeding—A E v Mchen, 8 O C 91. 2 Cr L J 224.

And lastly two contending parties opposed to one another and inclined to commit an offence involving a breach of the peace, cannot be said to have been associated together, and a joint trial of such contending parties is illegal—Fran Krishna v Emp, 8 C W N 180, 31 Mad 276. Kamal v Emp, 11 C W N 472, 14 A L J 268. Kishore v Emp, 6 P L T 768. 26 Cr L J 1248. But in 9 All 452 it has been held that such a joint trial is not ipso facto null and void, except where the accused has been prejudiced thereby.

Separate finding and evidence—Where proceedings are taken jointly against more persons than one under this sub section, the Magistrate must come to a separate finding as regards each of them individually—35 Cal 929. Kalu v Emp 37 Cal 91, 1895 P R 1. Brijnandan v Emp, 37 All 33. 16 Cr L J 46, and the judgment must show that the Magistrate has considered the case of each individual accused—Kahu Mirza v Emp, 37 Cal 91. The case of each person is to be considered on its own merits and it should not be allowed to be mixed up or prejudiced by that of the others—6 All 214. Md Ismail v Emp, 21 A L J 841. 25 Cr L J 952. Upon general principles every accused person is entitled to insist that his case shall be tried separately from the case of other persons similarly circumstanced—Q E v Abdul Kadir, 9 All 452. 1909 P. W R 25.

The Magistrate must insist upon definite evidence being given against each person charged—Jai Goring v A E, 15 O C 263. 13 Cr L J 760. What is evidence against one cannot be treated as evidence against all others without discriminating between the cases of the various persons implicated—9 All 452. Emp v Angnu Singh 45 All 109 (111). Thus where the evidence recorded by the Magistrate has bearing only on 11 out of 26 persons called upon to show cause his order binding down all the 26 persons is not valid, it is valid only as regards those against whom the evidence is relevant—10 C L R 335.

118 (1) If, upon such inquiry, it is proved that it is necessary for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour as the case may be, that the person in respect of whom the inquiry is made should execute a bond, with or without sureties, the Magistrate shall make an order accordingly.

the accused are desperate and dangerous persons hazardous to the community is a fact which pertains to each accused separately and there is no such connection between them in regard to their character which may be deemed as habitual association. Consequently proceedings should be taken separately against each of the accused persons—Hari Telang v Q E 27 Cal 781 In re Kutti Gounden 47 M L J 689 A I R (1925) Mad 189

Again sub section (5) does not authorise a Magistrate to deal with persons charged under separate sections in one and the same inquiry. Thus a person called upon to give security under section 109 and another person called upon to give security under sec 110 cannot be tried together in the same proceeding—A E v Mehen 8 O C 91 2 Cr L J 224

And lastly two contending parties opposed to one another and inclined to commit an offence involving a breach of the peace, cannot be said to have been associated together and a joint trial of such contending parties is illegal—Pran Krishna v Emp 8 C W N 180 31 Mad 276 Kamal v Emp 11 C W N 47 14 A L J 268 Kishore v Emp 6 P L T 768 26 Cr L J 1248. But in 9 All 452 it has been held that such a joint trial is not ipso facto null and void except where the accused has been prejudiced thereby.

Separate finding and evidence—Where proceedings are taken jointly against more persons than one under this sub-section the Magistrate must come to a separate finding as regards each of them individually—35 Cal 929 Kalu v Emp 37 Cal 91 1895 P R 1 Brijnandan v Emp, 37 All 33 16 Cr L J 46 and the judgment must show that the Magistrate has considered the case of each individual accused—Kalu Mirza v Emp 37 Cal 91. The case of each person is to be considered on its own merits and it should not be allowed to be mixed up or prejudiced by that of the others—6 All 214 Mid Ismail v Emp 21 A L J 841 25 Cr L J 95. Upon general principles every accused person is entitled to insist that his case shall be tried separately from the case of other persons similarly circumstanced—Q E v Abdul Kadir, 9 All 452 1909 P W R 25

The Magistrate must insist upon definite evidence being given against each person charged—Jai Gound v A F 15 O C 263 13 Cr L J 760. What is evidence against one cannot be treated as evidence against all others without discriminating between the cases of the various persons implicated—9 All 452 Emp v Angnu Singh 45 All 109 (111). Thus where the evidence recorded by the Magistrate has bearing only on 11 out of 26 persons called upon to show cause his order bringing down all the 26 persons is not valid. It is valid only as regards those against whom the evidence is relevant—10 C L R 335

118 (1) If upon such inquiry it is proved that it is necessary for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour as the case may be that the person in respect of whom the inquiry is made should execute a bond with or without sureties the Magistrate shall make an order accordingly

first that no person shall be ordered to give security of a nature different from or of an amount larger than, or for a period longer than that specified in the order made under section 112, secondly, that the amount of every bond shall be fixed with due regard to the circumstances of the case and shall not be excessive, thirdly, that, when the person in respect of whom the inquiry is made is a minor, the bond shall be executed only by his sureties

291 If it is proved etc.—Evidence—These words show that an order under this section cannot be made without inquiry and proof—Ratanlal 385 The Magistrate must give his reasons for finding it proved that security is necessary—In re Raja 10 Bom 174 (175) The finding of the Magistrate must be based on clear and full evidence As much detail as possible should be required before making an order under this section—Emp v Hamidulla 1889 A W N 114 A finding in general terms that it is for the interest of the community at large that the accused should be bound down for good behaviour is not sufficient—Nakhi Lal v Q E 27 Cal 656

The mere fact that the accused person says that he is willing to give security to keep the peace is not the kind of proof required by this section as a condition precedent to the taking of security—Prem Singh v Crown 1917 P R 27 18 Cr I J 847 Crown v Sheodan 1915 P R 24 See Note 236 under sec 107 When the accused denied the allegations but expressed his willingness to execute a bond whereupon he was ordered to execute a bond the order was held to be illegal in as much as the accused denied every allegation on the basis of which he was considered liable to furnish security, and no evidence was taken to prove those allegations—Emp v Rai Singh 20 Cr L J 105

As to the nature of evidence see notes under Secs 107 110

292 Order for security—The object of this section is the prevention and not the punishment of offences and consequently a Magistrate when passing an order in terms of this section ought not to have any direct intention of inflicting punishment—Q E v Kaudhata 7 All 67 There fore a Magistrate ought not to impose arbitrary conditions not essential for the object in view which it would be impossible for the accused to fulfil still less impossible conditions The order must not be tantamount to saying that the prisoner shall not furnish any security at all but must go to jail It is not in the power of the Magistrate to pass such order The object of the law is that the person charged shall furnish if he can good and sufficient security—22 W R 37

According to the first proviso to this section the final order must not be at variance with the preliminary order Thus the Magistrate cannot vary the conditional order passed under Sec 117 by imposing further conditions in the final order—Ramanand v A E, 11 O C 267 8 Cr I J 344 1906 A W N 276 So also it is illegal to require a bond for good behaviour when the notice was to show cause with respect to keeping the peace—Driver v Q E 25 Cal 798 Similarly the Magistrate is not competent to demand security with reference to Sec 110 when the preliminary order was with reference to sec 109—U B R (1897—1901) 24 (In such a case the proper course is to institute fresh proceedings—Ibid) So again the Magistrate is not justified in demanding security for a larger amount than what was communicated to the accused in the preliminary order—1907 P W R 11 18 W R 61 Emp v Debi 1885 A W N 30 nor is he justified in demanding sureties when the summons made no mention of sureties at all—18 W R 61 In cases where heavier security is deemed necessary the Magistrate ought to issue fresh summons setting forth the amount intended to be taken—18 W R 61 Emp v Md Ismail 1881 A W N 152

Moreover the Magistrate cannot in the final order direct the accused to give security for a longer period than what was mentioned in the notice under section 117—Ramchandrar v Emp 26 Mad 471

Supplementary order for larger security—A Magistrate passed a final order directing certain persons to furnish security in certain amounts A month later he passed another order directing one of the accused to furnish security in a much bigger sum and stating that he had overlooked that this accused had been called upon in the preliminary order to furnish a larger security It was held that the second order was ultra vires After the Magistrate had finished his case, it was beyond his power to alter the order—Rajkumar v Emp 17 A I J 335

293 Amount of security—Under proviso (2) in fixing the amount of security the Magistrate should have due regard to the circumstances of the case and the security should not be disproportionate to the ability of the accused to furnish it with reference to his means and station in life—Q E v Rama 11 Bom 37 Q E v Nathu 1 All 14 In re Umbica 1 C L R 18 In re Jugut Cal 110 Ah v Fimp 1900 P R 17 1890 P R 30 Firal v Fimp 12 Cr L J 110 5 S L R 10 In re Nil madhub 19 W R 1 Q v Gholam Mahomed 2 W R 17 4 M H C R App 46 2 Weir 5 The amount should be such as to give the accused a fair chance of complying with the conditions of the security and the Magistrate should not fix an amount for which there is a probability of the accused being unable to find security—Ah v Fimp 1900 P R 17 Wasia v Fimp 1901 P R 28 Barkat v Crown 1900 P R 24 2 Weir 52 4 M H C R App 46 Fimp v Dedar 1 Cal 384 When the accused is unable to give security for the amount required and remains in jail it is an index that the Magistrate has not exercised a proper discretion in fixing the amount—13 All 80

There is no warrant in law for taking separate bonds from the accused and his sureties individually and severally exceeding in the aggregate the amount for which the accused is liable—Jawara v Empress 1890 P R 30

Magistrate to state grounds—On a requisition from the High Court the Magistrate is bound to state the grounds upon which he fixed the amount of security Where the amount of security is prima facie unreasonable the High Court can call upon the Magistrate to state the grounds for fixing that amount—In re Jugut 2 Cal 110 Ram Singh v Emp, 1883 P R 1

House property as security—The accused was ordered under this section to furnish a bond for Rs 200 and a respectable surety Such a surety came forward and offered security in the shape of house property worth Rs 500 The Magistrate rejected the surety It was held that the surety being respectable and the house being worth Rs 500 should have been accepted though it was true that under sec 514 only moveable property could be attached and sold during the surety's lifetime for the recovery of the penalty—Nanke v Emp 16 A L J 503 19 Cr L J 711

294 Revision by High Court—The power to demand security from suspected persons is a power that is almost as much of an executive as of a judicial nature and the jurisdiction with which the Magistrate is invested with regard to suspected persons is a very large one It would be going counter to the spirit of the Code to give persons ordered to furnish security a remedy in the nature of an appeal to the High Court w

When the accused is unable to give security for the amount required and remains in jail, it is an index that the Magistrate has not exercised a proper discretion in fixing the amount—23 All 80.

There is no warrant in law for taking separate bonds from the accused and his sureties individually and severally exceeding in the aggregate the amount for which the accused is liable—Jawaya v Empress 1890 P R 30.

Magistrate to state grounds—On a requisition from the High Court the Magistrate is bound to state the grounds upon which he fixed the amount of security. Where the amount of security is prima facie unreasonable the High Court can call upon the Magistrate to state the grounds for fixing that amount—In re Juggut 2 Cal 110 Ram Singh v Emp, 1883 P R 1.

House property as security—The accused was ordered under this section to furnish a bond for Rs 200 and a respectable surety. Such a surety came forward and offered security in the shape of house property worth Rs 500. The Magistrate rejected the surety. It was held that the surety being respectable and the house being worth Rs 500 should have been accepted though it was true that under sec 514 only moveable property could be attached and sold during the surety's lifetime for the recovery of the penalty—Nanhe v Emp, 16 A L J 503 19 Cr L J 711.

294 Revision by High Court—The power to demand security from suspected persons is a power that is almost as much of an executive as of a judicial nature and the jurisdiction with which the Magistrate is invested with regard to suspected persons is a very large one. It would be going counter to the spirit of the Code to give persons ordered to furnish security a remedy in the nature of an appeal to the High Court which has not been granted to them by the Legislature. Therefore the High Court will interfere with the orders passed by a Magistrate only on the very clearest and strongest grounds which demonstrate that there has been in the particular case a gross miscarriage of justice—Balmukand v Emp. 1889 P R 23

The High Court will interfere in revision where the order is based on no evidence on the record—Sher Singh v Hari Singh 1912 P L R 195 13 Cr L J 720 Emp v Sukhdeo, 14 A L J 215 17 Cr L J 157 or where the materials on which the order was passed are clearly insufficient to support the order—Nasar Chandra v Emp 38 C L J. 198 or where there is nothing on the record to show that an inquiry as required by sec 117 was held—Mul Chand v K E 12 A L J 1262 37 All 30, Emp v Sukhdeo 14 A L J 215 It will also interfere where the judgment of the District Judge deciding in appeal under section 110 is a very short one and does not show that evidence was all examined and carefully weighed—Sarwan v Emp, 14 A L J 279 17 Cr L J 167, Babu Pershad v Emp, 13 Cr L J 9 (All) or where the Magistrate disbelieved the evidence produced by the accused without any substantial reason—Mishar ban v Emp, 16 Cr L J 805 13 A L J 1046, Hakim Singh v Emp 13 A L J 1055 16 Cr L J 810 or where the Magistrate has not given due effect to the evidence for the defence—Gayani v Emp 17 Cr L J. 461 (All) or where the Lower Appellate Court in hearing the appeal has not taken the trouble to rehear the case—Ibid

The High Court has the power to interfere in revision where the exercise of discretion being required by law, the lower Court exercised no discretion at all or exercised its discretion in a wholly unreasonable and improper manner e.g. where the Magistrate ordered security to be furnished in an unreasonably large sum out of all proportion to the means of the accused—2 Cal 110 The High Court may interfere in revision if there is a material error in any judicial proceeding i.e. an error resulting in an unjust order for security—Ibid

Appeal.—See sec. 406

110 If, on an inquiry under section 117, it is not proved that it is necessary for keeping the peace or maintaining good behaviour, as the case may be, that the person in respect of whom the inquiry is made, should execute a bond, the Magistrate shall make an entry on the record to that effect, and if such person is in custody only for the purposes of the inquiry, shall release him, or, if such person is not in custody, shall discharge him.

295 Further inquiry —The word discharge means merely a permission to depart. It does not mean the discharge of an accused person as contemplated by Sec 437 (now 436) so as to enable further proceedings being instituted under that section against the person discharged under this section—33 Mad 85. Section 437 (now 436) does not enable a Court to direct further inquiry in a case of discharge of a person against whom security proceedings were instituted under Chapter VIII because such a person is not an 'accused' within the meaning of that section—Q E v Iman Mandal 27 Cal 662 Dayanath v Emp 33 Cal 8 1905 P R 47 Emp v Roskan Singh 22 A L J 129 46 All 235 Narain v Durga 1911 P R 6 12 Cr L J 237 1914 U B R 1st Qr 3 (But the contrary view has been taken in 24 All 148 36 All 147 1899 A W 203 1903 P R 24 16 Bom 661 35 Bom 401 and 21 All 107 where it is held that the person proceeded against under this chapter may be said to be an accused person and further inquiry may therefore be directed)

Section 436 as now amended in 1923 clearly applies only to the case of a person accused of an offence; further inquiry cannot therefore be directed against a person discharged under sec 119 because the person proceeded against under this chapter is not accused of an offence. The rulings cited above within brackets are no longer good law. See Note 1180 under sec. 436.

C—Proceedings in all Cases subsequent to Order to furnish Security

120 (1) If any person, in respect of whom an order requiring security is made under section 106 or section 118 is at the time such order is made, sentenced to or undergoing a sentence of, imprisonment the period for which such security is required shall commence on the expiration of such sentence

(2) In other cases such period shall commence on the date of such order, unless the Magistrate for sufficient reason fixes a later date

296 On the expiration of the sentence —Under this section a convict undergoing a sentence of imprisonment cannot be obliged to give security until the imprisonment ends nor can an order for imprisonment (under Sec 123) in default be made till then—Q E v Appa Ratanlal 765 Emp v Rangya 4 Bom L R 934 Q E v Pandu Ratanlal 774 Kya Wa v K E 10 Cr L J 69 3 L B R 34; 22 Cr L J 95 (All),

If in the meantime he is convicted of another offence, and sentenced to a fresh term of imprisonment the order for security should not be passed until after the expiry of both imprisonments. If before such expiry the prisoner gives the required security, the Magistrate cannot pass an order of imprisonment under sec 123—Q E v Pandu Ratanlal 774

The accused was convicted under sec 147 I P C but was released on bail pending an appeal against the conviction. While he was on bail proceedings were taken against him under sec 110 of this Code and he was ordered to furnish security or in default to undergo imprisonment. His appeal was afterwards dismissed and the Magistrate ordered that as he was undergoing imprisonment in default of furnishing security, the sentence under sec 147 I P C would commence after the expiry of the sentence under sec 110 Cr P C. Held that the order was illegal, being in contravention of subsection (1) of this section—Emp v Jhabder, 22 Cr I J 95 (All)

Subsection (2) — Fixing later date — The object of this sub section is to allow a Magistrate to grant time to the accused instead of at once proceeding to order imprisonment as if in default. This is shown by Sec 123 which provides that the security may be given on or before the date on which the period for such security commences—Mad Abdul Bari v Emp 4 C W N 121

Fresh security — A second order requiring further security from the same person to commence on the expiration of the term of security already given passed during the continuance of the first one, is not a proper order. If at the end of the period the act involving a breach of the peace is still continued, a further security can be demanded on fresh proceedings being properly taken—Mad Abdul Bari v Emp 4 C W N 121

121 The bond to be executed by any such person shall bind him to keep the peace or to be of good behaviour, as the case may be, and in the latter case the commission or attempt to commit, or the abetment of, any offence punishable with imprisonment, wherever it may be committed, is a breach of the bond

Contents of bond

297 Breach of bond for keeping peace — A bond for keeping the peace will not be forfeited by the commission of any offence. It can be forfeited only by the commission of offences likely in their consequences to cause a breach of the peace. Thus a conviction for theft (In re Haren Chunder 18 W R 63), wrongful confinement or extortion (In re Zearuddin 19 W R 48) or for abduction (1906 P R 6) or for a secret attempt to poison a person (Ahmad Gul v Crown 1914 P R 22 15 Cr I. J 605) will not entail a forfeiture of the bond

In Ananthachari v. Ananthachari 7 Mad 169 however it has been held that it is not necessary that some actually punishable offence should be committed. All that is necessary to show is that some act was done which was likely in its consequence to provoke a breach of the peace.

A bond to keep the peace may be forfeited on the commission of any act involving a breach of the peace no matter whether the act is committed against the person at whose charge the original order was framed or against any other person—15 W. R. 14. It is also immaterial whether the accused committed the act with his own hands or instigated other persons to do it. In either case the bond is forfeited—7 Mad 169 11 W. R. 5.

If some persons (Hindus) are bound down under section 107 owing to an apprehension of a breach of the peace on account of their interference with the slaughter of cows by the Mahomedans at a particular place such persons are not debarred from instituting a civil suit to prevent the Mahomedans from slaughtering cows at that place and the institution of the suit will not amount to a breach of the bond which they were required to furnish. The filing of the civil suit may be extremely provocative to the Mahomedans and may lead to further quarrel and breach of the peace but it cannot by any stretch of language be called a wrongful act which would entail forfeiture of the bond. The bringing of the civil suit is a perfectly legal action and the Hindus were acting within their rights in doing so. It is clearly not the intention of the legislature to prevent persons even though bound down by a security bond from seeking to enforce their rights in Civil Courts otherwise, the result will be that no person so bound over would be able to institute a civil or criminal proceeding without endangering the forfeiture of his bond—Sital v. Crown 1 Lah 310 21 Cr L J 702.

298 Breach of bond for good behaviour.—A bond for good behaviour will be forfeited by the commission of any offence. Thus a conviction for causing grievous hurt (1915 P. R. 10) or a conviction under Sec. 13 of the Gambling Act III of 1867 (1906 A. W. N. 13) would amount to a breach of the bond.

But an actual commission of the offence is necessary for the forfeiture of the bond. Where a person bound down under Sec. 109 was found to be in possession of costly clothes for which he could not satisfactorily account, it was held that the bond should not be forfeited, since there was no proof that he had actually stolen those clothes—In re Venkata ratnam, 2 Weir 57. The bond is forfeited by the commission of any offence no matter wherever the offence may be committed. If the bond is entered into in one district and the accused is convicted of an assault in another district, the bond is forfeited and the

the former district can proceed against the accused under this section—
2 B L R App 11

The words commission of an offence do not necessarily imply a conviction for an offence. Although it is true that a conviction is considered necessary to establish that an offence has been committed but there is no authority for the extreme view that the commission of an offence cannot be proved otherwise than by a conviction—Mansur v Emp 24 Cr L J 588

An offence committed in a Native State would amount to a breach of the bond—Crown v Deua Singh 1910 P R 28 but see contra—Bahadur Singh v Crown 1918 P R 26

299 Procedure on breach of bond —When a person forfeits a bond by being convicted of an offence the amount of the forfeited bond may be recovered but he cannot be forthwith imprisoned for the unexpired portion of the term for which security was taken. The Magistrate's remedy is to take fresh proceedings under this Chapter—Emperor v Jag Deo 28 All 629

A Magistrate is not justified in forfeiting a recognisance under this section without giving the party charged with the breach an opportunity to cross examine the witnesses upon whose evidence the rule to show cause has been issued—Emp v Nobin 4 Cal 865

It should be noted that in order to make the surety liable the conviction of the principal must be for an offence similar to that for which security was given. When men stand sureties in respect of sec 110 it is to be understood that they undertake liability for only such good conduct on the part of the principal as is indicated by the circumstances under which the security was demanded; it is unjust to hold that they should be compelled to undergo liability for any conceivable form of offence committed by the person for whom they stood as sureties. Thus where a person was required to give security for being suspected as a thief and a habitual receiver of stolen property and a resident of another village was accepted as his surety and the principal offender was subsequently convicted under sec 326 I P C it was held that the surety should always be treated in a considerate manner and he should not be held liable for sudden acts of violence committed by the principal especially when the surety was a resident of another village and had no possible opportunity of controlling the everyday life of the offender—Udham Singh v A F 1913 P R 15 14 Cr I J 575. In Crown v Sher Singh 1915 P R 10 16 Cr I J 549 under similar circumstances the sureties were not altogether exempted but were ordered to pay a reduced penalty viz Rs 500 instead of Rs 1000.

A person was put on security for Rs 1000 for one year, and two other persons stood sureties for him. The person was afterwards convicted under sec 331 P C in which offence he was found to have taken only a minor part. Held under the circumstances that the order of forfeiture of a reasonable sum of Rs 50 against the sureties was sufficient and that they need not be burdened—Fatta v Crown 1915 P R 6 16 Cr L J 37

122 A Magistrate may refuse to accept any surety offered under this Chapter, on the ground that, for reasons to be recorded by the Magistrate, such surety is an unfit person

122 (1) A Magistrate may refuse to accept any surety offered or may reject any surety previously accepted by him or his predecessor under this Chapter on the ground that such surety is an unfit person for the purposes of the bond
Provided that before so refusing to accept or rejecting any such surety he shall either himself hold an inquiry on oath into the fitness of the surety or cause such inquiry to be held and a report to be made thereon by a Magistrate subordinate to him

(2) Such Magistrate shall before holding the inquiry give reasonable notice to the surety and to the person by whom the surety was offered and shall in making the inquiry record the substance of the evidence adduced before him

(3) If the Magistrate is satisfied after considering the evidence so adduced either before him or before a Magistrate deputed under subsection (1) and the report of such Magistrate (if any) that the surety is an unfit person for the purposes of the bond, he shall make an order refusing to accept or rejecting as the case may be such surety and recording his reasons for so doing

Provided that before making an order rejecting any surety who has previously accepted the Magistrate shall issue his summons or warrant as he thinks fit and cause the person for whom the surety is bound to appear or to be brought before him

Change—The whole section has been newly drafted by Sec. 20 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923)

The main changes introduced by this new section are—(1) rejection of a surety previously accepted (2) inquiry into the fitness of a surety and (3) delegation of such inquiry to a subordinate Magistrate. The reasons have been stated below in their proper places

30r Rejection of sureties—The question as to whether a particular person is fit to stand as surety or not is a matter for the decision of the Magistrate. The question in every case is one of discretion and the Magistrate's discretion in this matter is not fettered in any way—In re Jahl 13 C W N 80 Bhawant v K E 12 A L J 1004 16 Cr L J 54 Abdul Karim v King Emp 44 Cal 737 21 C W N 95. But this discretion to accept or reject a surety must be exercised only after a satisfactory inquiry in accordance with law—Bhawant v K E 12 A L J 1004 Akbar Ali v Emp 42 Cal 706 19 C W N 220 Rajan v Emperor 43 Cal 104 20 C W N 1133. The Magistrate can refuse or accept any surety only on valid and reasonable grounds and not on mere conjectures and surmises—10 C W N 1027 41 Cal 764 22 W R 37. So long as the sureties are of a satisfactory class and the security offered is good and sufficient the Magistrate is not justified in rejecting them—Q v Ganai 7 N W P H C R 749.

After an order is passed under section 118 demanding sureties the Magistrate cannot introduce any new qualifications while deciding on the suitability of the sureties and cannot reject them because they do not answer to those qualifications—Allahtlo v Lmp 26 Cr L J 1041 A I R (1925) Sind 371.

Sureties ought not to be rejected merely on the strength of reports of the Police (Jai Govind v K L 15 O C 463 13 Cr L J 760 10 C W N 107 Lmp v Tota 15 All 272 23 Cal 455 Munshi v Lmp 18 A L J 34 71 Cr L J 365 Gopi v Emperor 20 A L J 760 1906 P R 18 Zorawar v Lmp 13 A L J 469 16 Cr L J 445 12 A I J 1001 2 S L R 11 2 S I R 15 Abd Ibrahim v Crown 16 Cr L J 100 8 S I R 173) without giving them an opportunity of meeting any allegations that may be made against them—15 Cr L J 77 (All). The implicit acceptance of the opinions expressed in police reports without considering the facts upon which such opinions are based would place all persons ordered to furnish security at the mercy of the police—In re

Abdul Khan, 10 C W N 1027 When a Magistrate bases his orders on a police report, he abrogates the functions imposed on him by law, and allows the decision of the case to rest with the police. If he asks the police to report, it should be with a view merely of enabling them to collect and call evidence. But in every case his order must proceed on a consideration of the evidence and not of the police report—Imp v Mahro, 2 S L R 11. Jai Gouind v K L, 15 O C 263. 13 Cr L J 760 The practice of calling in a police officer for a report on the character of the surety is illegal, and the police officer should, if his evidence is necessary, be examined as a witness—K L v Hakim Khan, 1906 P R 18 Where a surety tendered by the accused is reported by the police to be an unreliable person, it is not for the surety to prove that he is of good character, but for the Magistrate, if he doubts it, to decide the matter upon evidence—Munshi Singh v Emp, 18 A L J 324 Even a Magistrate cannot rely on his own personal knowledge in rejecting a surety and dispense with an inquiry—Crown v Piru, 7 S L R 94. 15 Cr L J 378 When a Magistrate receives private information that the sureties are bad characters, he ought not to reject them on that information alone. He should bring the information to the notice of the sureties and give them an opportunity of controverting it—Ela Buksh v Imp, 14 C W. N 709

Before the amendment of this section, it was held that when a person had been once accepted as a surety, he could not be rejected subsequently as an unfit person—1 C W N 394. 1905 P R 16 But these decisions are now rendered obsolete by reason of the addition of the words "may reject any surety previously accepted" "We have adopted the suggestion that the provisions of the new section 122 should be elaborated so as to enable a Magistrate to reject a surety previously accepted by him or his predecessor"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922) The proviso to subsection (3) prescribes a procedure to be followed in such a case

302. Test as to fitness.—According to the Allahabad High Court the primary test is whether the surety can exercise proper control over the person who has been bound over—Sheikh Zikri v King Emp 8 A L J. 785. Mere pecuniary fitness is not the only test of his fitness. The object of requiring security for good behaviour is not to obtain money for the Crown by the forfeiture of recognisances, but to ensure that the accused should be of good behaviour. It is therefore reasonable to expect that the sureties should not be men residing at such a distance as would make it unlikely that they could exercise any control over the accused—Q E v Rahim Baksh, 20 All 206; Emp v Tori, 1895 A W N 143, Emp v Babu, 1898 A W N 199. Mauna v Emp, 15 A L J 848. 18 Cr. Change—The whole section has been newly drafted by Sec. 20 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923)

The main changes introduced by this new section are—(1) rejection of a surety previously accepted (2) inquiry into the fitness of a surety and (3) delegation of such inquiry to a subordinate Magistrate. The reasons have been stated below in their proper places

301 Rejection of sureties—The question as to whether a particular person is fit to stand as surety or not is a matter for the decision of the Magistrate. The question in every case is one of discretion and the Magistrate's discretion in this matter is not fettered in any way—In re Jafil 13 C W N 80 Bhawani v A E 12 A L J 1004 16 Cr L J 54 Abdul Karim v King Emp 44 Cal 737 21 C W N 95. But this discretion to accept or reject a surety must be exercised only after a satisfactory inquiry in accordance with law—Bhawani v A E 12 A L J 1004 Akbar Ali v Emp 42 Cal 706 19 C W N 720 Rajan v Emperor 43 Cal 1024 20 C W N 1133. The Magistrate can refuse or accept any surety only on valid and reasonable grounds and not on mere conjectures and surmises—10 C W N 1017 41 Cal 764 2 W R 37. So long as the sureties are of a satisfactory class and the security offered is good and sufficient the Magistrate is not justified in rejecting them—Q v Ganni 7 N W P H C R 249.

After an order is passed under section 118 demanding sureties the Magistrate cannot introduce any new qualifications while deciding on the suitability of the sureties and cannot reject them because they do not answer to those qualifications—Allalitto v Emp 26 Cr L J 1041 A I R (1925) Sind 321.

Sureties ought not to be rejected merely on the strength of reports of the Police (Jai Gokind v A L 15 O C 213 13 Cr I J 760 10 C W N 107 Emp v Tola 25 All 272 23 Cal 455 Munshi v Emp 18 A L J 324 11 Cr I J 315 Gopi v Emperor 20 A L J 760 1906 P R 18 Zorawar v Emp 13 A I J 469 16 Cr I J 445 1 A I J 1004 2 S L R 11 2 S I R 15 Abd Ibrahim v Crown 16 Cr I J 100 8 S I R 173) without giving them an opportunity of meeting any allegations that may be made against them—15 Cr I J 77 (All). The implicit acceptance of the opinions expressed in police reports without considering the facts upon which such opinions are based would place all persons ordered to furnish security at the mercy of the police—In re cannot supervise or control the person bound down or that he is not a resident of the same village (Suresh v Emp 3 C L J 575) is not material. So also in Kalu Mirra v Emp 37 Cal 91 and Rayau v Emp 43 Cal 1024 a failure by the sureties to show that they could exercise proper control over the accused was held to be not a proper ground for their rejection. In Jafar Ali v Emperor 37 Cal 446, it has been held that the pecuniary test is the primary test but there may be other objections to be considered, and any such objection must be dealt with in each case as it arises. But in Asiraddi v Emp 41 Cal 764 and Abdul Karim v Emp 44 Cal 737 the fact that the sureties would not be able to exercise proper control over the accused (who was a notorious dacoit) was held to be a proper ground of unfitness of the sureties.

[In the Amendment Bill of 1914 it was expressly provided that the Magistrate would be able to reject a surety on any one of the following grounds viz (a) that he was not of good moral character or (b) that he was not of sufficient means to enable him to fulfil his pecuniary liability under the bond or (c) that he was unable to control the movements or actions of the person by whom the bond was executed. But the Select Committee of 1916 did not accept this amendment, and observed: "We think that it would be a mistake to attempt any definition of unfitness for the purpose of acceptance of a surety and we recommend that sec 172 should be left unaffected." The Joint Committee of 1922 however again added those clauses but during the debate in the Legislative Assembly (23rd January 1923) they were again deleted.]

What are not disqualifications—The fact that the sureties offered are the relations of the accused far from being a disqualification is a circumstance which would be an additional qualification if the sureties are in other respects suitable. A relation is more likely than any other person to keep an eye on the accused—Emp v Shib Singh 25 All 131. In re Abdul Khan 10 C W N 1027. Makala v Crown 1914 P R 6. Suresh v Emp 3 C L J 575. Emp v Miro 1 S L R 3 22 Cr L J 22 (All).

A Magistrate should not refuse to accept a surety on the ground that he has already stood surety for another man—Ghisa v Emp 24 Cr L J 517 A F R (1924) Oudh 132. So also a Magistrate cannot reject a surety simply because he is a Wanthanu member. As long as the security is ample, the Court is bound to accept the same without inquiring into the politics of the person standing surety—Mannig Tnu v Emp 4 Bur L J 172.

Previous conviction not a disqualification—The proposed surety is not to be considered as unfit by reason of the fact that he was on one occasion convicted of offences—22 Cr L J 483 (Cal), Emp v Raghunath,

In Burma it is laid down that the sureties must be persons who are in a position to influence the accused and likely to be able to restrain him—Nga Hein v King Emp, 8 Bur L T 53

In Sind, it has been held that it is not in itself a disqualification that a person cannot exercise active physical control over the accused, it is no doubt an advantage in a surety to be in a position to send for the accused from time to time to question and warn him and to put physical restraint on him but a man may be a satisfactory surety if he is in a position to watch the movements of the accused and to ascertain from time to time how he is behaving—Mahomed Ibrahim v Crown, 8 S L R 173 16 Cr L J 100 But mere solvency of the surety is not the only test of his fitness The Magistrate has also to consider the question of the ability of the surety to enforce the good conduct of the accused, as relevant to his fitness—Imp v Mahomed Pahor, 1 S L R 46 In another Sind case however it is held that sureties cannot be rejected on the ground that they will not be able to influence the accused The most that a Magistrate can reasonably demand is that they should be respectable men, neighbours of the accused, and solvent up to the amount of the security required—Crown v Ahmed, 1 S L R 14

In Oudh it has been held that a surety should not be rejected on the mere ground that he lives at a distance from the accused, but inability to control is a good ground—Emp v Muhammad Baksh, 26 O C 284 If the sureties undertake to keep the accused within the area of their observation or to adopt other suitable measures for securing the supervision and control needed to keep him in good behaviour, there can be no inherent objection to their being accepted as sufficient, though they reside at a place 18 miles distant from that of the accused—King Emp v Ram eshwar, 10 O L J 299 24 Cr L J 795

According to the Bombay High Court, the condition attached to a surety for good behaviour, demanded under sec 112 that he should be able to control the accused is not a desirable condition—Emp. v Jiva Natha, 16 Bom L R 138 15 Cr L J 268 It is sufficient if the sureties are solvent and respectable Therefore, where the sureties offered were solvent and respectable, the mere fact that they lived at some distance from the persons bound over and were not in a position to exercise control over those persons was not a good ground for their non acceptance—In re Jeshu Bhatta, 44 Bom 385 21 Cr L J 377 22 Bom L R 100

In Calcutta, however, there is a conflict of decisions as to whether the pecuniary or moral fitness is the primary test In Ram Pershad v K. I, 6 C. W. N. 593, Adam Sheikh v Emperor, 35 Cal 400 and 13 C W N cliv, it has been held that the primary test is whether the surety is a person of sufficient substance to warrant his being accepted, and the fact that he cannot supervise or control the person bound down or that he is not a resident of the same village (Suresh v Emp 3 C L J 575) is not material. So also in Kalu Mir v Emp 37 Cal 91 and Rajan v Emp 43 Cal 104 a failure by the sureties to show that they could exercise proper control over the accused was held to be not a proper ground for their rejection. In Jafar Ali v Emperor 37 Cal 446, it has been held that the pecuniary test is the primary test, but there may be other objections to be considered and any such objection must be dealt with in each case as it arises. But in Asiraddi v Emp 41 Cal 764 and Abdul Karim v Emp 44 Cal 737 the fact that the sureties would not be able to exercise proper control over the accused (who was a notorious dacoit) was held to be a proper ground of unfitness of the sureties.

But the Select Committee of 1916 did not accept this amendment, and observed: "We think that it would be a mistake to attempt any definition of unfitness for the purpose of acceptance of a surety and we recommend that sec 122 should be left unaffected." See also Note 280 (d) under sec 112

303 Inquiry into the fitness of sureties—Before the amendment of 1923 this section did not expressly provide for holding an inquiry into the fitness of a surety before accepting or rejecting him. But still in a large number of cases such an inquiry was considered as essential. See 42 Cal 706 Rajai v Emp 43 Cal 1024 Bhawani v K E, 12 A I J 1004 Crown v Piru 7 S I R 94 Manna v Emp 15 A L J 848

Under the present section the Magistrate can delegate the inquiry to a subordinate Magistrate. But under the old law, it was consistently held in a number of decisions that the Magistrate ought himself to make the inquiry into the sufficiency or otherwise of the sureties. he could not delegate the task to a subordinate officer—Emp v Balwant 27 All 293 Emp v Tola 25 All 272, A I v Hakim Khan 1906 P R 18 Mahali v Crown 1114 P R 6 Emp v Prithi Pal 1898 A W N 154. These cases should no longer be taken as authoritative. But the Magistrate cannot delegate this task to a Police Officer and act upon the report of that officer. see Note 301 ante; and Kanwal v Emp 25 Cr. I J 91 A I R (1) 4 Lah 672

A Magistrate of one district has no jurisdiction to make an inquiry into the sufficiency of a surety taken under sec 109 from a vagrant by a Magistrate of another district even if the latter authorises the former to do so as a Magistrate of one district has no power to delegate his powers to a Magistrate of another district—1916 P W R 52

Evidence—The Magistrate can refuse or accept any surety only on tangible evidence recorded and considered by him—Munshi v Emp 18 A L J 324. He should examine the sureties as to their fitness and take such evidence as the accused may give and base his decision on the evidence so recorded—Crown v Piru 7 S I R 94 Emp v Mahto 2 S I R 11. The inquiry is to be conducted judicially and the Magistrate has power to call for and record evidence upon oath or affirmation—Emp v Ghulam Mustafa 26 All 371 Emp v Allahdino 3 S L R 87. This is now expressly provided in the proviso to subsection (1)

304 Recording reasons.—The Magistrate in rejecting a surety must record his reasons for doing so in his own writing—Ela Buksh v Emperor 14 C W N 709 Kalu Maru v Emp 37 Cal 91 44 Bom 385 The intention of the Legislature in insisting that a Magistrate should record his reasons in refusing to accept a surety on the ground of unfitness is that the Magistrate should exercise his independent judgment and should not be guided by the opinions expressed in Police reports without considering the facts upon which such opinions are based—In re Abdul Khan 10 C W N 1077 When a Magistrate failed to record the reasons and in his explanation to the High Court stated that he did not remember the exact circumstances the order rejecting the sureties was set aside—13 C W N xxvii

305 Interference by High Court.—The question whether a particular person is or is not a fit person to stand as surety is one for the decision of the Magistrate and is left to his discretion which is not fettered in any way—13 C W N 80 and the High Court will not lightly interfere—12 A J J 1004 Bairagi v Emp 15 Cr L J 747 (All) But if the discretion has not been judicially exercised as for instance where no reasons are given why a surety was rejected (13 C W N xxvii) the High Court will interfere

123 (1) If any person ordered to give security under section 106 or section 118 does not give such security on or before the date on which the period for which such security is to be given commences, he shall, except in the case next hereinafter mentioned be committed to prison or if he is already in prison be detained in prison until such period expires or until within such period he gives the security to the Court or Magistrate who made the order requiring it

(2) When such person has been ordered by a Magistrate to give security for a period exceeding one year, such Magistrate shall if such person does not give such security as aforesaid issue a warrant directing him to be detained in prison pending the orders of the Sessions Judge or if such Magistrate is a Presidency Magistrate pending the orders of the High Court, and the proceedings shall be laid as soon as conveniently may be, before such Court

Imprisonment in default of security
Proceedings when to be laid before High Court or Court of Session

(3) Such Court, after examining such proceedings and requiring from the Magistrate any further information or evidence which it thinks necessary, may pass such order on the case as it thinks fit

Provided that the period (if any) for which any person is imprisoned for failure to give security shall not exceed three years

(3A) If security has been required in the course of the same proceedings from two or more persons in respect of any one of whom the proceedings are referred to the Sessions Judge or the High Court under sub section (2) such reference shall also include the case of any other of such persons who has been ordered to give security, and the provisions of sub-sections (2) and (3) shall, in that event, apply to the case of such other person also except that the period (if any) for which he may be imprisoned shall not exceed the period for which he was ordered to give security

(3B) 1 Sessions Judge may in his discretion transfer any proceedings laid before him under sub section (2) or sub section (3A) to an Additional Sessions Judge or Assistant Sessions Judge, and upon such transfer such Additional Sessions Judge or Assistant Sessions Judge may exercise the powers of a Sessions Judge under this section in respect of such proceedings

(4) If the security is tendered to the officer in charge of the jail, he shall forthwith refer the matter to the Court or Magistrate who made the order, and shall await the orders of such Court or Magistrate

(5) Imprisonment for failure to give security for keeping the peace shall be simple

(6) Imprisonment for failure to give security for good behaviour may be rigorous or simple as the Court or Magistrate in each case directs

(6) Imprisonment for failure to give security for good behaviour shall, where the proceedings have been taken under Section 108, be simple and, where the proceedings have been taken under Section 109 or Section 110 be rigorous or simple as the Court or Magistrate in each case directs Change —Subsections (3A) and (3B) and the italicised words in subsection (6) have been added by sec 21 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (VIII of 1923). Subsection (6) has been further amended by the Cr P C Second Amendment Act X of 1926. The reasons are stated below.

306 Imprisonment in default of security —There must be actual failure to give security in order to enable the Magistrate to pass an order under this section. So, an order for imprisonment passed in anticipation of default in giving security was bad—Q F v Lala, Ratanlal 408. High Court Registrar's Letter Ratanlal 511. Q F v Shivraya Ratanlal 395. Imprisonment should follow the failure to furnish adequate security and should not precede a finding that the security is inadequate. It is illegal for the Magistrate to send a person to jail pending the receipt of the report from the Revenue and police officers as regards the adequacy of the security—King Emp v Kaim Khan 1906 P R 18.

Where a Magistrate passes an order under sec 123 no discretion is allowed to him under Sec 123 and he is bound to imprison forthwith a person who cannot give security on the date the order is made. If from any cause the accused has not had a reasonable opportunity of furnishing sureties the only legal method of giving him time is to postpone for such period as may be deemed necessary the making of the order under section 123 awarding imprisonment in default of security—Punj Circ Ch XLIV p 168.

A person was ordered to execute a bond for good behaviour for one year and find sureties on 17-12-07 but when he failed to do so he was instead of being committed to prison at once given time to find sureties and finally on 24-2-09 he was sentenced to imprisonment for his failure to find sureties. held that as the one year had already elapsed from the date of the first order, the order for imprisonment under sec 123 was illegal—In re Muthu Gounden 6 M L T 308 10 Cr I J 481.

Person already under imprisonment —If the person against whom an order under this section is passed is already under imprisonment as a substantive punishment for some offence the order under this section should not be passed until after the expiry of the term of imprisonment—Q F v Appa Ratanlal 765. Emp v Rangya 4 Bom L R 934. A sentence under this section cannot run concurrently with any other sentence.

(3) Such Court after examining such proceedings and requiring from the Magistrate any further information or evidence which it thinks necessary, may pass such order on the case as it thinks fit

Provided that the period (if any) for which any person is imprisoned for failure to give security shall not exceed three years

(3A) If security has been required in the course of the same proceedings from two or more persons in respect of any one of whom the proceedings are referred to the Sessions Judge or the High Court under sub-section (2) such reference shall also include the case of any other of such persons who has been ordered to give security and the provisions of sub-sections (2) and (3) shall, in that event apply to the case of such other person also except that the period (if any) for which he may be imprisoned shall not exceed the period for which he was ordered to give security

(3B) A Sessions Judge may in his discretion transfer any proceedings laid before him under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3A) to an Additional Sessions Judge or Assistant Sessions Judge, and upon such transfer such Additional Sessions Judge or Assistant Sessions Judge may exercise the powers of a Sessions Judge under this section in respect of such proceedings

(4) If the security is tendered to the officer in charge of the jail he shall forthwith refer the matter to the Court or Magistrate who made the order, and shall await the orders of such Court or Magistrate

306 Imprisonment in default of security —There must be actual failure to give security in order to enable the Magistrate to pass an order under this section So an order for imprisonment passed in anticipation of default in giving security was bad—Q F v Lahu, Ratanlal 408 High Court Registrar's Letter Ratanlal 511 Q F v Shivraya Ratanlal 395 Imprisonment should follow the failure to furnish adequate security and should not precede a finding that the security is inadequate It is illegal for the Magistrate to send a person to jail pending the receipt of the report from the Revenue and police officers as regards the adequacy of the security —King Emp v Kaim Khan 1906 P R 18

Period of imprisonment—The person failing to give security shall be committed to prison until such period expires i.e. the period of imprisonment in default of security should be the same as the period for which security was demanded under sec 118. It should be neither for a longer nor for a shorter term. Thus, an order requiring security for good behaviour for a period of six months, and in default awarding rigorous imprisonment for illegis months is wrong and bad in form—Q E v Ganoo Ratanlal 584 23 All 422. If the Magistrate thinks that the term of imprisonment should be shorter the proper course is to report the matter to the District Magistrate for taking action under section 124 (2)—Q E v Mohi Ratanlal 668. So also an order awarding imprisonment in default of security for a period longer than that for which the accused was called upon to give security is illegal—2 Weir 57

The period of imprisonment must be definite. an order directing the accused to be imprisoned until he gives security is bad—8 Cal 44

307 Sub section (2)—This sub section has reference only to the case where default is made in finding security. If the security is given the section does not apply and no reference to the Court of Session is necessary even though the term of security exceeds one year—Rai Ishri Pershad v Q E 23 Cal 621 (627) Ram Kishen v Emp 15 A L J 872 40 All 39 19 Cr I J 2

When a Magistrate passes an order for furnishing security for a period exceeding one year and default is made imprisonment for default cannot be awarded by the Magistrate. All that he is empowered to do is to detain the accused pending the order of the Sessions Judge—A F v Myat Aung, 4 L B R 135 7 Cr I J 412 U B R (1897 1901) 28 Mahala

v Crown 1914 P R 6 21 Cr L J 623 (Lah) If the Magistrate passes an order for imprisonment, it will be bad and will not be cured by the District Magistrate reducing on appeal the period of security as well as the term of imprisonment to one year—2 Weir 57. Even a Magistrate cannot pass an order of imprisonment, and then send his order for confirmation to the Sessions Judge—Emp v Jafar, 1899 A W N 151 because the proceedings are sent to the Sessions Judge under this section not for the purpose of confirming the order of the Magistrate but for passing his own order—Q E v Mat Jung, 4 L B R 135, 6 C P L R 27.

'Exceeding one year'.—A Magistrate cannot legally amalgamate secs 109 and 110, and require the execution of two bonds for good behaviour for an aggregate period of 18 months and in default of the same being furnished, commit the accused to prison for 18 months' rigorous imprisonment. At any rate, in such case the proceedings should be referred to the Sessions Judge under the provisions of sec 123 (2)—Q E v Balya, Ratanlal 946.

Reference by Magistrate to High Court.—If the Sessions Judge, on a reference made under this section, refuses to confirm the order of the District Magistrate passed under sec 118, and discharges the person called upon to furnish security, the Magistrate cannot refer the case to the High Court under sec 438. It would be contrary to every principle to allow the District Magistrate to report against an order of the Sessions Court to which he is subordinate. If the Magistrate, as the officer responsible for the peace of his district, is dissatisfied with the order of the Sessions Judge, his proper course is to ask the Public Prosecutor to move the High Court for revision—23 Cal 249, Emp v Jamna Bai, 28 All 91.

308 Sub-section (3) —Procedure on reference —On a reference made to him under sub-section (2) the Sessions Judge should give notice to the accused—Emp v Girand, 25 All 375, Nakhi Lal v Q E, 27 Cal 656, and allow him to be defended by a pleader—Jhojha v Q E, 23 Cal 493, 27 Cal 656 4 C W N 797, Emp v Girand, 25 All 375. Although the Code has made no provision for giving notice to the accused before disposing of references under this section, still it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to give such notice, where it was not given, the High Court condemned the procedure as amounting to a denial of justice—Emp v Girand 25 All 375.

This section gives power to the Sessions Judge to deal with the case on the merits and to pass such orders as the circumstances of the case may require—E v Amir Bala 35 Bom 271 13 Bom L R 203 12 Cr L J 257. Sub-section (3A).—"We think that where security has been demanded from two or more persons, some or one of whom may be ordered to give security for more than a year all the parties from whom security is demanded should be dealt with by the Sessions Judge"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

"The object of the new sub-section (3A) is to avoid differences of opinion in a single case between the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge—in as much as in a single case one accused person may appeal to the District Magistrate, while the case of another accused person will be referred to the Sessions Judge. The Bombay Government have suggested that where the case of one accused has to be referred to the Sessions Judge under section 123 the case of all should be referred, whether they have given security or not. We have adopted this suggestion"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

It should be noted in this connection that the provisions of section 406 (which provides for appeals against orders requiring security) have been made inapplicable to a case where proceedings have been laid before a Sessions Judge under this sub-section. See section 406, 2nd proviso, newly enacted in 1923

309 Sub-section (3B).—"This sub-section definitely provides for the exercise of powers under sec 123 by an Additional Sessions Judge in proceedings transferred to him"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

It was held in the case of Q. E. v. Dayaram Ranchhod, Ratanlal 830 (see this case cited under sec 193) that where a reference was made under sec 123 (2) the Sessions Judge had no power to transfer the proceedings to the Additional Sessions Judge and that even sec 193 (2) did not confer on him that power because the word 'cases' in that section did not include a reference under section 123 (2). The Calcutta High Court however held that sec 193 must be interpreted in a liberal sense and that the word 'cases' would include a reference under sec 193 (2)—Benode Behari v. Emperor, 50 Cal 229 39 C L J 75 25 Cr L J 573. This conflict has now been set at rest by the present amendment, which empowers the Sessions Judges to make over references under this section to the Additional and Assistant Sessions Judges

he has considered the case of each individual prisoner. Though the order need not contain all the details required by sec 367, still each prisoner has a right to have his case considered on its own merits and the order must show that this has not been lost sight of—Kalu Mirza v Emperor, 37 Cal 91. The Judge must pass his own order (i.e. a definite order binding over the accused) and not merely confirm the order passed by the Magistrate—1899 A W N 151. Bahadur v Emp, 1 O W N 773. 26 Cr L J 656. Where the order is in reference to section 110, the Sessions Judge, before he confirms the order of the Magistrate is bound to find a special ground on which the order is passed, and it is not sufficient if he merely finds in general terms that it is for the interests of the community at large that the accused should be bound over to be of good behaviour—Nakhi Lal v Q E 27 Cal 656.

This section does not authorise a Sessions Judge to order the rehearing of a case. He can call for further information if he desires it or he can consider the evidence on the record and pass such order as he thinks fit—Narayan v Emp, 25 Cr L J 1112. A I R (1925) Cal 191.

An order under this subsection is an original order and not an order confirming the order of the Magistrate. Therefore the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to decide on the fitness of sureties on a bond ordered by the Sessions Court. When the order is of the latter Court the adequacy of the security should be decided by that Court—Imp v Allahdino 5 S L R 87.

Bail.—The Sessions Judge can admit the accused to bail. The provisions of section 498 regarding admission to bail are particularly wide, and the Court of Session may in any case direct any person to be admitted to bail. There are no words in section 123 (2) controlling the very wide provisions of section 498. The Sessions Judge has under sec 123 (2) power to revise the order of the Magistrate passed under sec 119, and he may grant bail, just as in the analogous case of an appeal the Appellate Court can release the accused on bail—Ahmed Ali Sardar v Imp, 50 Cal 969. 37 C L J 592. 24 Cr L J 953.

Remand.—In 24 Cal 155 (which was decided when the 1892 Code was in force) it was held that the Sessions Judge was not competent to remand a case to the Magistrate to take further evidence. But now the words 'requiring from the Magistrate' (newly added in the 1898 Code) show that the Sessions Judge is competent to do so.

Imprisonment.—Although a Sessions Judge is competent to direct under subsection (3) that the person be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years yet it is advisable that the term should always be the same as the period for which security was ordered to be given—23 All 422. 4 L B R 135.

The imprisonment ordered by the Sessions Judge should begin from the date of the Magistrate's order. Where the Sessions Judge directed that the period of imprisonment ordered by him should commence from the date of his order and not from the date of the Magistrate's order held that the order in fact amounted to an enhancement of sentence and that it was undesirable that the Court should do so without special reasons though it had the power—*Allahdad v. Sub-section (3A) — We think that where security has been demanded from two or more persons some or one of whom may be ordered to give security for more than a year all the parties from whom security is demanded should be dealt with by the Sessions Judge — Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

We have adopted this suggestion' — Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

It should be noted in this connection that the provisions of section 406 (which provides for appeals against orders requiring security) have been made inapplicable to a case where proceedings have been laid before a Sessions Judge under this sub-section. See section 406 2nd proviso, newly enacted in 1923.

309 Sub-section (3B) — This sub-section definitely provides for the exercise of powers under sec. 123 by an Additional Sessions Judge in proceedings transferred to him — Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

It was held in the case of Q. E. v. Dayaram Ranchhod Ratanlal 830 (see this case cited under sec. 193) that where a reference was made under sec. 123 (2) the Sessions Judge had no power to transfer the proceedings to the Additional Sessions Judge and that even sec. 193 (2) did not confer on him that power because the word 'cases' in that section did not include a reference under section 123 (2). The Calcutta High Court however held that sec. 193 must be interpreted in a liberal sense and that the word 'cases' would include a reference under sec. 193 (2) — *Benode Behari v. This conflict has now been set at rest by the present amendment, which empowers the Sessions Judges to make over references under this section to the Additional and Assistant Sessions Judges.

he has considered the case of each individual prisoner. This section does not authorise a Sessions Judge to order the rehearing of a case. He can call for further information if he desires it, or he can consider the evidence on the record and pass such order as he thinks fit—Narayan v Emp, 25 Cr L J 1112 A I R (1925) Cal 191.

An order under this subsection is an original order and not an order confirming the order of the Magistrate. Therefore the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to decide on the fitness of sureties on a bond ordered by the Sessions Court. When the order is of the latter Court the adequacy of the security should be decided by that Court—Imp v Allahdino 5 S L R 87.

Bail—The Sessions Judge can admit the accused to bail. The provisions of section 498 regarding admission to bail are particularly wide, and the Court of Session may in any case direct any person to be admitted to bail. There are no words in section 123 (2) controlling the very wide provisions of section 498. Remand.—In 24 Cal 155 (which was decided when the 1882 Code was in force) it was held that the Sessions Judge was not competent to remand a case to the Magistrate to take further evidence. But now the words "requiring from the Magistrate" (newly added in the 1898 Code) show that the Sessions Judge is competent to do so.

Imprisonment.—Although a Sessions Judge is competent to direct under subsection (3) that the person be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years yet it is advisable that the term should always be the same as the period for which security was ordered to be given—23 All 422, 4 L B R 135.

to give security under this Chapter the Chief Presidency or District Magistrate may (unless the order has been made by some Court superior to his own) make an order reducing the amount of the security or the number of sureties or the time for which security has been required

(3) Whenever the District Magistrate or a Chief Presidency Magistrate is of opinion that any person imprisoned for failing to give security under this Chapter as ordered by the Court of Session or High Court may be released without hazard to the community such Magistrate shall make an immediate report of the case for the orders of the Court of Session or High Court as the case may be and such Court may, if it thinks fit, order such person to be discharged

(3) In order under sub section (1) may direct the discharge of such person either without conditions or upon any conditions which such person accepts

Provided that any condition imposed shall cease to be operative when the period for which such person was ordered to give security has expired

(4) The Local Government may prescribe the conditions upon which a conditional discharge may be made

(5) If any condition upon which any such person has been discharged is in the opinion of the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate by whom the order of discharge was made or of his successor not fulfilled he may cancel the same

(6) When a conditional order of discharge has been cancelled under sub section (5) such person may be arrested by any police officer without warrant and shall thereupon be produced before the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate

Unless such person then gives security in accordance with the terms of the original order for the unexpired portion of the term for which he was in the first instance committed or ordered to be

310 Sub section (6)—Kind of imprisonment—Before the amendment of this sub section in 1923 imprisonment under all good behaviour cases could be simple or rigorous according to the discretion of the Magistrate. The Amendment Act of 1923 had made a slight alteration by drawing a distinction between cases under sections 108 and 109 on the one side (under which the sentence should always be simple), and cases under sec 110 on the other (under which it may be simple or rigorous)

This clause has been further amended by the Cr P C Second Amendment Act X of 1926 the effect of which is to give a discretion to Magistrates to award either simple or rigorous imprisonment in the case of proceedings under sec 109. Several Local Governments have represented that the change (i.e. the amendment made by Act XVIII of 1923) has worked injuriously as most of the persons against whom proceedings are taken under sec 109 are men for whom simple imprisonment is quite unsuitable.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India 1923 Part V p 214)

Although the imprisonment in default of furnishing security under sec 110 may be simple or rigorous still as that section is essentially a preventive rather than a punitive provision the imprisonment awarded in ordinary cases should be simple. Imprisonment of a rigorous character should not be awarded automatically as a general practice but the Magistrate has to exercise his discretion and to decide whether on the facts of each case the imprisonment should be simple or rigorous.—Gandharp Singh v Emp 42 All 363. In passing a sentence of rigorous imprisonment the Magistrate should give reason why the imprisonment should be of the severer kind. In the case of a man who has never been convicted of any offence an order of rigorous imprisonment is unreasonable.—1 C L R 268

Where a person who has been asked to furnish security for good behaviour fails to do so the Magistrate has no power to order solitary confinement.—Hundan v Emp 36 All 495 12 A L J 823 15 Cr L J 616

It is illegal for a Magistrate to pass a sentence of rigorous imprisonment in a case under sec 107.—Ullam Chand v A G 26 Cr I J 430 (All)

124 (1) Whenever the District Magistrate or a Chief
 Power to release persons imprisoned for failing to give security
 Presidency Magistrate is of opinion that any person imprisoned for failing to give security under this Chapter, * * * may be released without hazard to the community or to any other person, he may order such person to be discharged

(2) Whenever any person has been imprisoned for failing to give security under this Chapter the Chief Presidency or District Magistrate may (unless the order has been made by some Court superior to his own) make an order reducing the amount of the security or the number of sureties or the time for which security has been required.

(3) Whenever the District Magistrate or a Chief Presidency Magistrate is of opinion that any person imprisoned for failing to give security under this Chapter as ordered by the Court of Session or High Court may be released without hazard to the community, such Magistrate shall make an immediate report of the case for the orders of the Court of Session or High Court as the case may be, and such Court may, if it thinks fit order such person to be discharged

(3) In order under sub-section (1) may direct the discharge of such person "either without conditions or upon any conditions which such person accepts

Provided that any condition imposed shall cease to be operative when the period for which such person was ordered to give security has expired

(4) The Local Government may prescribe the conditions upon which a conditional discharge may be made

(5) If any condition upon which any such person has been discharged is, in the opinion of the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate by whom the order of discharge was made or of his successor not fulfilled he may cancel the same

(6) When a conditional order of discharge has been cancelled under sub-section (5) such person may be arrested by any police officer without warrant and shall thereupon be produced before the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate

Unless such person then gives security in accordance with the terms of the original order for the unexpired portion of the term for which he was in the first instance committed or ordered to be detained (such portion being deemed to be a period equal to the period between the date of the breach of the conditions of discharge and the date on which, except for such conditional discharge he would have been entitled to release) the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate may remand such person to prison to undergo such unexpired portion

A person remanded to prison under this sub section shall, subject to the provisions of section 122, be released at any time on giving security in accordance with the terms of the original order for the unexpired portion aforesaid to the Court or Magistrate by whom such order was made, or to its or his successor

Change —In sub-section (1) the words whether by the order of such Magistrate or that of his predecessor in office or of some subordinate Magistrate which occurred after the words under this chapter have been omitted, sub section (3) has been omitted and replaced by a new sub-section and sub-sections (4) to (6) have been newly added, by sec 22 of the Cr P C Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923)

This amendment is mainly intended to enable persons committed to prison under Chapter VIII of the Code to be sent to Industrial Homes and Settlements of the Salvation Army or to other similar Homes or Settlements where it may be possible to reform them and make them accustomed to regular work of a kind which may be useful to them after the expiry of their period of detention. It is proposed to give a District Magistrate or a Chief Presidency Magistrate absolute power to release with or without conditions a person imprisoned for failure to give security, without the intervention of the Court of Session or High Court '—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921)

311 It is entirely within the discretion of the District Magistrate who as the head of the district is responsible for the peace thereof to determine when and under what circumstances he should act under this section—1893 A W N 183

The order passed by a District Magistrate under this section may be of an original or of a revisional character, that is the Magistrate may release a person either on the ground that by reason of something occurring after the order for security, there is no longer any apprehension of a breach of the peace and the person may be safely released or on the ground that on the evidence taken by the Subordinate Magistrate there was no apprehension of a breach of the peace, and no order for security should have been made—Re Mars Gould 37 Mad 125 (141) F B 25 V L J 459 14 Cr L J 546

125 The Chief Presidency or District Magistrate may at any time for sufficient reasons to be recorded in writing cancel any bond for keeping the peace or for good behaviour executed under this Chapter by order of any Court in his district not superior to his Court

312 Scope—This section empowers the District Magistrate to cancel a bond but does not authorise him to order that the person whose bond is so cancelled should be imprisoned until a fresh security bond is given—Baldeo Singh v Jugal Kishore 33 All 624 Panchu v Emp 29 Cal 455

313 Cancellation of bond—Ground of cancellation—The Allahabad High Court (as well as the Oudh Court) has held that a bond can be cancelled only on the ground that it is no longer necessary—Banarsi v Partab Singh 35 All 103 Emp v Shankar 41 All 651 and that the District Magistrate in cancelling a bond is entitled to look only to the circumstances subsequent to the execution of a bond. He can cancel a bond only on the ground that something has supervened since the date of the first Court's order which satisfies the District Magistrate that in view of the facts since come to light there is no longer any necessity to keep the accused person under bond—Nizamuddin v Md Ziaul 44 All 614 20 A L J 521 he can cancel a bond for keeping the peace on the ground that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace—1905 A W N 143. But the District Magistrate is not entitled to look to the circumstances existing at the time of the bond thus the fitness or unfitness of the sureties is a matter which can be decided in reference to the circumstances existing at the time of execution of the bond and the District Magistrate has no power to look to those circumstances and cannot therefore cancel a bond on the ground of unfitness of sureties—8 O C 245. In other words the power conferred by this section to cancel a bond is not to be exercised as in appeal against an order of security to keep the peace—Sita Ram v Emp 39 All 466 Nizamuddin v Md Ziaul 44 All 614 23 Cr L J 398 24 Cr L J 204 (Oudh) Emp v Balwant 24 Cr L J 616 (Oudh). This section cannot be used by the Magistrate as if he were sitting in appeal and going into the merits of the case. If he thinks that the order is not maintainable on the evidence on record his duty is not to pass an order under section 125 but to refer the case to the High Court in its revisional side—Nizamuddin v Md Ziaul, 44 All 614 Banarsi v Partab 35 All 103 Emp v Shankar 41 All 651. Two other Allahabad cases however do not support this view. Thus in Baldeo Singh v Jugal Kishore 33 All 624 (625) it has been held that a District Magistrate cancel a bond of the accused on the ground that the surety who stood for him was an unfit person. In another Allahabad case Emperor v Lalji 40 All 140 (virtually dissenting from 35 All 103) it is laid down that there is nothing in the words of sec 125 to prevent the District Magistrate from cancelling the bond for reasons other than that it is no longer necessary to keep the accused under their bonds, that the District Magistrate can cancel a bond under sec 125 on the ground that the accused should not have been bound over and that the District Magistrate can deal with a case under section 125 as in revision and no reference to the High Court is necessary.

The Patna High Court holds that the only order which a District Magistrate can pass under this section is an order cancelling the bond directed to be executed by a subordinate Magistrate, on the ground that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace. The District Magistrate is not an appellate or revisional authority, and he has no power to vacate the order of the subordinate Magistrate as ultra vires or to quash the proceedings—Durga Singh v Amar Dayal 3 P L T 103 23 Cr L J 281.

But the Calcutta High Court is of opinion that the District Magistrate can cancel the bond on any sufficient ground and he is not restricted to the grounds which may have arisen subsequent to the date of execution of the bond. The jurisdiction of the District Magistrate under this section is not merely an original jurisdiction but may be exercised as in appeal or revision. He can cancel the bond on the ground that it should never have been required—Nabu Sardar v Emp 34 Cal 1 F B (overruling 31 Cal 948). This decision has been followed by the Punjab Madras and C P Courts. Thus, in Audita v Crown 1908 P W R 12 7 Cr L J 348 it has been held that the District Magistrate has full discretion to consider the evidence and can set aside the order of security on the merits. The Madras High Court also holds that the order under sec 125 may be either of an original or of a revisional character and the District Magistrate may cancel a bond on any sufficient grounds. There is no reason to qualify or restrict the ordinary meaning of the words used. This section was intended to give the District Magistrate the right to review the evidence, and the District Magistrate can cancel a bond on the ground that the evidence before the Subordinate Magistrate was not sufficient to justify the passing of the order for security. The words at any time show that the District Magistrate can cancel the bond at any time however early; if the District Magistrate may, within a few minutes of a Subordinate Magistrate exacting the execution of a bond cancel it. It could hardly be in consequence of anything that occurred after the execution of the bond that is the District Magistrate is not bound to look only to the events that have happened subsequent to the execution of the bond but is entitled to cancel it on the ground that on the evidence before the Subordinate Magistrate the bond ought never to have been required—Re Mare Goud 37 Mad 125 (F L) The same view has been taken in C P—Emp v Dalli 11 N L R 98 16 Cr L J 555

The words at any time show that the District Magistrate may cancel the bond at any time however late even when there is only one day left for the expiration of the period for which the bond has been executed, the delay in obtaining the material on which the bond is cancelled does not invalidate the order of cancellation—Re Mare Goud 37 Mad 125 (145 146) F B But an order for the cancellation of the bond cannot be passed before it has been executed—3 Cal 948

Right of applicant to be heard.—When a Magistrate is moved to exercise his powers under this section to cancel a bond the applicant or his pleader should as a matter of general practice be heard before the application is rejected—Sita Ram v Emp, 39 All 466 18 Cr L J 630 15 A L J 469

Effect of cancellation.—Where a bond is cancelled on the ground that it is no longer necessary or that it has been wrongly taken both the accused and the surety will be discharged from all liability—1905 1 W N 143

314 Transfer of proceedings.—Where the proceedings under sec 107 instituted in one district were transferred by the order of the High Court to another district, and a 1st class Magistrate of the latter district ordered security to keep the peace held that it was the District Magistrate of the latter district who had jurisdiction to pass an order under this section for the cancellation of the bond—Guru Prasanna v Hari Aumar 23 C W N 958 20 Cr L J 337

128 (1) Any surety for the peaceable conduct or good behaviour of another person may at any time apply to a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class to cancel any bond executed under this Chapter within the local limits of his jurisdiction

(2) On such application being made, the Magistrate shall issue his summons or warrant, as he thinks fit, requiring the person, for whom such surety is bound, to appear or to be brought before him

Sub section (3) of this section has been renumbered as section 166A with certain alterations by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) See notes under the next section

315. This section deals with cases in which the surety wishes to withdraw and to have the bond cancelled and it lays down the procedure which is to be adopted when such security becomes useless owing to the withdrawal of the surety—Mahabir v A E 8 O C 245 2 Cr L J 507

When the effect of an order discharging a surety is to remit the accused to prison for a term exceeding one year, the Magistrate is bound to refer the case to the Sessions Judge (Sec 123)—Imp v Alladino, 5 S L R 87 12 Cr L J 410

CHAPTER IX

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLIES

127 (1) Any Magistrate or officer in charge of a police station may command any unlawful assembly, or any assembly of five or more persons likely to cause a disturbance of the public peace, to disperse; and it shall thereupon be the duty of the members of such assembly to disperse accordingly.

(2) This section applies also to the police in the town of Calcutta

316 'Officer in charge' —An order directing the dispersal of an assembly passed by an officer (e.g. Deputy Commissioner of Police) superior in rank to the Police Officer is an order by a lawful authority within the meaning of this section—Emp v Tucker, 7 Bom 42

In all cases of an unlawful assembly, a riot or a disturbance of the peace having occurred or being apprehended, the police will take the initiative, but if they find themselves not strong enough for the occasion, immediate application is to be made to the nearest Magistrate, which under the terms of Act V of 1861, means all persons within the Police District exercising all or any of the powers of a Magistrate, and therefore includes the Tahsildars who are bound on requisition from the Police Inspector to appoint from the residents of the neighbourhood as many Police officers as the said Inspector may deem necessary. All revenue chaprasis and messengers of all kinds may legally be appointed special Police officers. Thus, the whole resources of the Civil Government are at once on a special occasion brought to the assistance of the Police for the purpose of restoring public order—Punj Pol Cir, Ch XXVII, p 318. See Punj Cir, 320

317. Unlawful assembly —An assembly may be for lawful purposes, e.g. a religious procession, but it may excite such opposition as to be likely to cause a breach of the peace. If so it may be called upon to disperse—Emp v Tucker, 7 Bom 42, Murlikhar v Emp, 1887 P R 22

Punishment —See Secs 145, 151 I P C

128 If upon being so commanded, any such assembly does not disperse, or if without being so commanded, it conducts itself in such a manner as to be likely to cause a breach of the peace, the members of the assembly shall be liable to be punished with imprisonment for not more than six months, or with fine, or with both, for each day on which the assembly is so conducted.

a manner as to show a determination not to disperse, any Magistrate or officer in charge of a police station, whether within or without the presidency-towns, may proceed to disperse such assembly by force and may require the assistance of any male person not being an officer or soldier in Her Majesty's Army or a volunteer enrolled under the Indian Volunteers Act, 1869 and acting as such for the purpose of dispersing such assembly, and if necessary arresting and confining the persons who form part of it, in order to disperse such assembly or that they may be punished according to law

318 Use of fire arms — Where a Magistrate or officer in charge of a Police station engaged in dispersing an unlawful assembly is compelled in the last resort to direct the Police to use fire arms he shall give the rioters the fullest warning of his intention warning them beforehand that the fire will be effective that the ball or buckshot will be used at the first round and that blank cartridges will not be used Firing shall cease the instant it is not necessary Care should be taken not to fire upon persons separated from the crowd nor to fire over the heads of crowds as thereby innocent persons may be injured Blank cartridges should never be served out to Police employed to suppress a riot' — Dom Pol Man p 70

On being requisitioned a squad of Police properly armed and accoutred and carrying ten rounds of buckshot ammunition per man in command of a responsible officer will proceed with all despatch to the scene The Magistrate or superior Police Officer or other subordinate officer as circumstances may permit supported by a file (who will duly come to the charge on being halted) will proceed to within speaking distance of the mob and command it to disperse and distinctly warn it that the fire will be effective and that blank cartridges will not be used If the mob shows itself aggressive and determined not to disperse the officer and file aforesaid will fall back and the squad will on due command to that effect load after which another warning to the rioters to disperse will be given, and if not obeyed within a reasonable time, fire will be opened on distinct word of command by the officer in charge of the squad either by specified number of files or by ranks of subsections or sections or he may order a volley according to the requirements of the situation The fire should be so directed as to inflict as little bodily harm as possible aim in the first instance being taken at the feet of the nearest rioters and due care being observed to avoid firing on persons separated from the rioters Firing must cease the moment it is no longer necessary i.e. on the mob showing the slightest indication of retiring or dispersing * * * After the order cease fire and should no further apprehension exist the wounded would be sent to the nearest hospital and the senior Police officer will take account of the ammunition used and if no Magistrate is present will draw up an accurate account of all that transpired —C P Pol Man page 16

The power of using fire arms to disperse an unlawful assembly cannot be exercised by any person below the rank of an officer in charge of a police station. An officer in charge of a patrol boat whose powers are no higher than those of an officer in-charge of an outpost cannot use fire-arms under this section—Muhammad Yunus v Emperor 50 Cal 318 (33) A I R (19 3) Cal 517

129 If any such assembly cannot be otherwise dispersed, and if it is necessary for the public security that it should be dispersed the Magistrate of the highest rank who is present may cause it to be dispersed by military force

130 (1) When a Magistrate determines to disperse any such assembly by military force, he may require any commissioned or non commissioned officer in command of any soldiers in Her Majesty's Army or of any volunteers enrolled under the Indian Volunteers Act, 1869 to disperse such assembly by military force, and to arrest and confine such persons forming part of it as the Magistrate may direct, or as it may be necessary to arrest and confine in order to disperse the assembly or to have them punished according to law

(2) Every such officer shall obey such requisition in such manner as he thinks fit, but in so doing he shall use as little force, and do as little injury to person and property, as may be consistent with dispersing the assembly and arresting and detaining such persons

131 When the public security is manifestly endangered by any such assembly and when no Magistrate can be communicated with any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's Army ... disperse such assembly by military force, and may arrest

Duty of officer commanding troops required by Magistrate to disperse assembly

Power of commissioned military officers to disperse assembly confine any persons forming part of it, in order to disperse such assembly or that they may be punished according to law, but if while he is acting under this section, it becomes practicable for him to communicate with a Magistrate, he shall do so, and shall thenceforward obey the instructions of the Magistrate as to whether he shall or shall not continue such action except with the sanction of the Local

(a) no Magistrate or police officer acting under this Chapter in good faith,

(b) no officer acting under Section 131 in good faith,

(c) no person doing any act in good faith in compliance with a requisition under Section 128 or Section 130, and,

(d) no inferior officer, or soldier, or volunteer doing any act in obedience to any order which he was bound to obey, shall be deemed to have thereby committed an offence

Provided that no such prosecution shall be instituted in any criminal Court against any officer or soldier in His Majesty's army except with the sanction of the Governor General in Council.

* The rules for calling out and employing the military in aid of the civil power were first enacted in the Code of 1872 and embody (according to Sir James Stephen) the principles laid down in the charge of Tindal C J to the Grand Jury of Bristol in 1832 as to the duty of soldiers in dispersing rioters. The rules in India carry the law somewhat further than it has yet been carried in England as they expressly indemnify all persons acting in good faith in compliance with the requisitions under Secs 128 and 130 and forbid prosecutions of Magistrates soldiers and Police-officers except with the sanction of the Governor General in Council —Whitely Stokes Anglo Indian Codes Vol II Introduction, p 11

319 Sanction —Want of sanction under this section will not be cured by sec 537—In re Perumal 31 Mad 80 17 M L J 533

The power to disperse an unlawful assembly by force is not given by this Code to any police-officer below the rank of an officer in charge of a police station. The powers of an officer in charge of a patrol boat are no higher than those of an officer in charge of an outpost therefore he has no power to act under this chapter if he so acts (e.g. fires on an unlawful assembly) his action is illegal and does not fall under sec 128 and no sanction of the Local Government is necessary for his prosecution for such act—Muhammad Yunus v Emp 50 Cal 318 324 (Bhawaf Shooting case) 25 Cr I J 467 A I R (1923) Cal 517

PUBLIC NUISANCES

133 (1) Whenever a District Magistrate, a Sub divisional Magistrate or * * * a Magistrate of the first class considers on receiving a police report or other information and on taking such evidence (if any) as he thinks fit, that any unlawful obstruction or nuisance should be removed from any way, river or channel which is or may be lawfully used by the public, or from any public place, or that the conduct of any trade or occupation or the keeping of any goods or merchandise, is injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community, and that in consequence such trade or occupation should be prohibited or regulated or such goods or merchandise should be removed or the keeping thereof regulated or that the construction of any building or the disposal of any substance, as likely to occasion conflagration or explosion, should be prevented or stopped, or that any building, tent or structure or any tree is in such a condition that it is likely to fall and thereby cause injury persons living or carrying on business in the neighbourhood or passing by, and that in consequence the removal or support of such building tent or structure, or the removal or support of such tree, is necessary, or that any tank well or excavation adjacent to any such way or public place should be fenced in such manner as to prevent danger arising to the public or that any dangerous animal should be destroyed confined or otherwise disposed of such Magistrate may make a conditional order requiring the person causing such obstruction or nuisance, or carrying on such trade or occupation or keeping any such goods or merchandise or owning possessing or controlling such building, tent structure substance tank, well or excavation, or owning or possessing such animal or tree within a time to be fixed in the order, to remove such obstruction or nuisance, or to desist from carrying on, or to remove or regulate in such manner as may be directed, such trade or occupation, or to remove such goods or merchandise, or to regulate the keeping thereof in such manner as may be directed, or to prevent or stop the erection of, or to remove, repair or support, such building, tent or structure, or to alter the disposal of such substance, or to fence such tank, well or excavation, as the case may be, or to destroy, confine or dispose of such dangerous animal in the manner provided in the said order, or, if he objects so to do, to appear before himself or some other Magistrate of the first or second class, at a time and place to be fixed by the order, and move to have the order set aside or modified in the manner hereinafter provided

(2) No order duly made by a Magistrate under this section shall be called in question in any Civil Court

Explanation—A “public place” includes also property belonging to the State camping grounds and grounds left unoccupied for sanitary or recreative purposes

Change—The entire section has been newly drafted by sec 24 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). But the actual changes introduced by the re drafting are the following—(a) In subsection (1) the words 'when empowered by the Local Government in this behalf' have been omitted. Under the previous law an ordinary Magistrate of the first class could take proceedings under this section only when he was specially empowered by the Local Government. Under the present law all Magistrates of the first class are competent to deal with the case and no special empowering is necessary, (b) the words 'regulated and the keeping of goods should be regulated' have been newly added in para 3. (c) the words 'tent or structure or any tree' have been added in para 3 and (d) para 7 (relating to the disposal of dangerous animals) has been newly added. Certain consequential changes have also been made in the subsequent paras of this section.

320 Application of this Chapter—The provisions of this Chapter should be so worked as not to become themselves a nuisance to the community at large. Although every person is bound to so use his property that it may not work legal damage or harm to his neighbour yet on the other hand no one has a right to interfere with the free and full enjoyment by such person of his property except on clear and absolute proof that such use of it by him is producing such legal damage or harm and therefore a lawful and necessary trade (e.g. tanning) ought not to be interfered with unless it is proved to be injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community—Shadi v Emp 1888 P R 17

This section deals with the condition of things at the time when the order is made. It is not meant to apply to what may happen at some indefinite time in the future or under quite abnormal circumstances. Therefore, a Magistrate is not competent to order an occupation to be prohibited or a tree to be cut down or a building to be demolished merely because at some future time the occupation may become injurious to the health of the neighbourhood or the tree may cause an obstruction to public thoroughfare or the building may become dangerous to passers by—Gokal Chand v Emp 1 Lah 163 21 Cr L J 46. Gokul v Emp 22 A L J. 436 26 Cr L J 104. Rajawan v Emp 1890 P R 5

In all criminal proceedings initiated under this section the Magistrate should bear in mind that he is supposed to be acting purely in the interests of the public and should be on his guard against any tendency to use the section as a substitute for litigation in the Civil Courts in order to obtain settlement of private disputes—Tarzand Ali v Hakim Ali 37 All 26 (28)

321 Secs 133 and 144—Sec 144 is more general and sec 133 is more specific therefore nuisances specially provided for in this section are taken out of the general provisions of section 144 of the Code—Anonymous 2 Weir 58 10 W R 53 But where an order prohibiting a nuisance cannot be made under this section e.g. an order prohibiting burial in certain places on sanitary grounds it should be made under the more general sections (143 or 144)—Anonymous 2 Weir 64 If proceedings are taken under sec 133 the procedure laid down in the present chapter must be obeyed and the matter cannot be disposed of summarily under Sec 144 of the Code—8 W R 37

But the essential difference between the two sections is that Sec 133 expressly directs that the injunctive order should be an order nisi i.e., it is an order accompanied by a condition that it is not to operate if the party shows cause while Sec 144 speaks only of an absolute order—10 W R 53

322 Secs 133 and 147 —Sec 133 is not a bar to a proceeding under Sec 147 The fact that Sec 133 expressly provides for an order by the Magistrate directing the removal of an obstruction to a pathway does not necessarily imply that a similar order cannot be passed under Sec 47 of the Code—arupanna v Kandasami 26 M L J 223 15 Cr L J 362 But when proceedings have been taken under section 133, no order can be passed under Sec 147—Abdool Rachman v Safar Ali, 15 C W N 667 12 Cr L J 43

323 Nature of proceedings —Proceedings under this section are more of the nature of civil than of criminal proceedings and the person against whom proceedings are taken under this section is not an 'accused' person within the meaning of Sec. 342 He can give evidence on his own behalf and may be examined on oath—Hirananda v Emp, 9 C W N 983 Proceedings under this chapter are not proceedings in respect of offences, and further inquiry cannot be ordered under Sec 436 if the proceedings are dropped by the Magistrate—Srinath v Ainaddi 24 Cal 395 But orders passed on proceedings under this chapter are orders passed in 'a criminal trial' for the purpose of section 15 of the Letters Patent, and no appeal lies against an order passed by a single Judge of the High Court under sec 439 revising an order of the Magistrate—Subbaya v Ramayya, 39 Mad 533 16 Cr L J 349

Magistrates empowered —It has already been pointed out above (under heading 'Change' supra) that all first class Magistrates are now authorised to take action under this section, and it is no longer necessary that they should be specially empowered by the Local Government In the United Provinces and in C. P., the Local Government may invest Municipal Boards with the powers of a District Magistrate to institute proceedings under this section See Sec 57 of N. W. P. Municipalities Act XV of 1883, and sec 86 of the C. P. Municipal Act XVIII of 1889

In Presidency towns the Presidency Magistrates are not empowered to act under this chapter. In nuisance cases they act under the Penal Code the Police Acts the Municipal Acts and other Local enactments dealing with special kinds of nuisances.

324 Unlawful obstruction.—Obstruction to a public road is a nuisance though no practical inconvenience is caused—23 All 4 And it is absolutely irrelevant with what motive an obstruction upon the public highway is caused—13 All 150

A dam constructed across a public river which amounts to an obstruction to the river and causes damage to the lower riparian owners may be ordered to be removed under this section—Jagannath v Claudiha 6 O L J 616 21 Cr L J 55

Where a cattle market is situated in a congested part of the town so that owing to the cattle having to be driven through narrow and congested lanes, obstruction and inconvenience are caused to the public it may be suppressed by an order under this section—Mahendra v Emp 22 Cr L J 582 (Cal)

The obstruction must be permanent and not temporary—Emp v Devras 6 Bom L R 359 and it must be an existing obstruction a Magistrate cannot make any order as to what should be done in case of future obstructions—21 W R 10 Thus where a solid and vigorous branch of a tree is 15 feet above the level of a road in a village it cannot be said that at such a height it causes an obstruction having regard to the normal traffic and it cannot be ordered to be cut down merely because it is likely at some future time and under abnormal circumstances to prove an obstruction—Golul v Emp 22 A L J 436 26 Cr L J 104

Where a proceeding under this section is instituted against a number of persons for various acts of unlawful obstructions to a public way it is essential that the order should state accurately with regard to each person the specific obstruction made by him which he is required to remove unless it is alleged that all the persons are jointly responsible for all the obstructions complained of—Raimohan v Emp 44 Cal 61 (65) 70 C W N 1171 17 Cr L J 409

Where on a complaint being made to a Magistrate that a certain person had erected a platform on a public thoroughfare and had thereby obstructed it the Magistrate ordered that such portion of the platform as might be obstructing the highway should be removed held that the order was vague the Magistrate ought to have definitely pointed out and marked off how much of the platform should be removed—Jhau Lal v Emp 73 A L J 43 26 Cr L J 731 A I R (1925) All 310

Under this section it is only the power to order the removal of an obstruction (e.g. a bund) which is given to a Magistrate. There is no provision for the reconstruction of a bund which has once been removed.

under this section—Rajmuddi v Sher Ali 40 C L J 597 26 Cr L J 517

The word channel is not defined in the Code but it is quite wide enough to include a water course carrying water to a public urani. Where there was a catchment area in the centre of which there was a watercourse which was obstructed and the water which flowed into the watercourse was attempted to be carried away by the petitioners to their own village tank by building a bund and cutting a new channel and by cutting down a new portion of the old bund of the catchment area thus making the water run away in a direction different to that of the watercourse and preventing it from falling into the urani held that this was an obstruction to the watercourse—Ramasami v Ramanathan 22 L W 470 A I R (1926) Mad 165

325 Public — Public place —The provisions of this section apply to those cases where the obstruction is caused to a public thoroughfare—25 W R 4 In re Chundernath 5 Cal 875 36 All 709 In re Maharana 22 Bom 988 15 W R 67 It is not necessary that the way should be one which is generally used by the public it is sufficient if the way is one which is or may be lawfully used by the public—10 Cr L J 210 (Cal) Churaman v Emp 1 A L J 1074 Teni Prasad v Sarjoo 70 Cr L J 536 (Pat) Rang v B N H Ry 4 P L T 402 But the fact that the residents of a particular village have a right to take cattle across a field is not sufficient to constitute a public right of way—Junnu v Emp 1906 A W 190 A railway land is not necessarily a public place—Rang v B N H Ry, 4 P L T 40.

An obstruction to a private path (In re Dalaji 4 Bom L R 88 Gouri Shankar v Bhagalu 11 O L J 659 25 Cr L J 1118 Q v Janoke Nath 2 W R 36) or to a private drain (5 W R 59) or to a private channel (Jagannath v Parameshwar 36 All 209) does not come within the purview of this section In such cases the parties must go to a Civil Court

If a private right is set up by the defendant the procedure of the new section 139A will apply

326 Nuisance —As to nuisances under the Penal Code see Sects 268 to 294A, I P C

Keeping a gaming house is a nuisance if crowds of disorderly persons flock there and cause annoyance to the public—Q E v Thandalarayudu 14 Mad 361 but if no annoyance is caused it is not a nuisance—7 B H C R 74 So also a burning ghat may not itself be a nuisance but if the ghat or ground is in such an offensive state or if cremation is performed upon it in such a way as to be a source of injury annoyance or danger to the neighbouring people it will become a nuisance—Indra Nath v Q E, 25 Cal 425 So also if a privy is allowed to remain in such a condition as to be a nuisance to passers by lawfully using a public place or way proceedings to cause the nuisance to be abated may be instituted under this section—In re Balaji 4 Bom L R 88. But this section does not empower a Magistrate to order a privy to be removed merely because it has been only recently made in any locality—Ibid

Slaughtering cattle though it might be offensive to the prejudice and sentiments of a community is not a nuisance—5 W R 7

Selling fish on the roadside is not a public nuisance unless annoyance has been caused to the public—1 Bur L T 94

The act of a manager of a bonemill in permitting a large stock of bones to remain uncovered in the open air for a long time so as to become rotten and to emit a smell noxious to the people living in or passing by the vicinity constitutes a public nuisance—Emp v Berkefield 34 Cal 73

A noise which is injurious to the physical comfort of the community is a nuisance—Krishna Mohan v A K Guha 32 C I J 42 21 Cr L J 669

A private owner may be guilty of acts done on his private property if it gives rise to a public nuisance to those living in the neighbourhood. Therefore the owner of a cremation ground may fairly be held to create a nuisance, if he allows the cremation of bodies upon that ground to be so performed as to annoy or endanger the lives and properties of persons living in the vicinity—Indra Nath v Q E 25 Cal 425

A nuisance is not legalised by long enjoyment. No prescriptive right can be acquired to commit maintain or continue a public nuisance involving actual danger to the health of the community—In re Sheikh Mohidin 2 W R 59, 16 W R 6, 7 B I R 499. In re Balaji 4 Bom L R 88. Thus an old slaughter house can be removed if it becomes offensive to the health of the neighbourhood—Municipal Commissioners v Mahomed Ali 7 B L R 499

But although no length of enjoyment can legalise a public nuisance yet such fact may tend to show that the dispute was a bona fide dispute of title such as would have the effect of ousting the Magistrate of his jurisdiction (under section 139 A). Therefore, the Magistrate is bound to see whether the fact of such long possession and enjoyment of the nuisance has not given to the objection of the person so enjoying it the character of a bona fide dispute as to title—Premnath v Gobordhane 25 Cal 278

'Should be removed'.—These words show that the nuisance must be something which is capable of being removed. If it is not capable of being removed (e.g. some objectionable accompaniments to a religious ceremony practised by the members of a religious sect) this section does not apply—K. E v Faizal Hussain 1901 A W N 126

ground who puts his land at the disposal of any one who wishes to cremate a dead body, cannot be said to be carrying on any trade or occupation merely because he makes his profit by charging a high rent from a tenant who sells wood to the persons coming to cremate a dead body—Indra Nath v Q F 25 Cal 425

Para 3 deals only with trades which are in themselves injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community and not with those which are in themselves innocent but in the course of which the manager or plicar commits a public nuisance—1888 P R 47 Thus keeping a house of public entertainment is not by itself an offensive trade—Ibid

This section relates to an existing state of affairs and not to the possibility of future results. Where an occupation is perfectly innocent at present the mere fact that it may in future become offensive to the neighbours is no ground for issuing an order under this section. Where there is no evidence that the occupation of manufacturing bricks is in itself injurious to the health or that the petitioners were so working it that the health of any one was being injured no order under this section can be made in anticipation of the occupation being injurious to the health of the community in future—Gopal Chand v Emp 1 Lah 163 21 Cr L J 462

In order to bring a trade or occupation within the operation of this section it must be shown that the interference with the public comfort was considerable and a large section of the public was affected injuriously—Fazal Din v Crown 1911 P I R 117 12 Cr L J 146 The working of rice husking machines throughout the whole night in a residential quarter is a public nuisance being injurious to the comfort of the whole neighbourhood—1904 P R 9

A lawful and necessary occupation such as tanning ought not to be interfered with unless it is proved that it is injurious to the health of the community—Shadi v Emp 1883 P R 17 Cultivation of maize jowars or bigree within a short distance from the town is not an injurious occupation—1889 P R 39

A person who opens a new market close to an existing market in the village cannot be held to be carrying on a trade or occupation that is injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community, nor does the fact that the people in one market are sometimes forcibly dragged from it to the rival one, giving rise to mutual recrimination and abuse justify an order under this section—In re Moidin, 2 Weir 62, Moidin v Abdulla, 14 M L J 207

A prostitute who behaves orderly and quietly and creates no open scandal by riotous living and causes no actual discomfort to the neighbourhood cannot be removed from her house merely on the ground of her bad character—24 W. R 68 So also the mere existence of houses of prostitutes by the roadside or the fact that they ply their trade in their houses cannot affect the physical comfort of the passers by—5 C W N 560 But where they are on the public road soliciting passers by their occupation is certainly injurious to the comfort of the community and may be stopped by an order this section—Nur Jan v Emp 1900 P R 2 though for the purposes of the Penal Code such an act does not amount to a public nuisance within the meaning of Sec 268 of that Code—Q E v Vanni 22 All 113

A person who inoculates children upon an outbreak of small pox can not be said to be carrying on an offensive occupation—(1903) U B R 1st Qr 205

Under the old law if a trade or occupation was found to be offensive, the Magistrate had to pass an order totally prohibiting it under the present law it may be ordered to be regulated instead of being totally suppressed

328 Building likely to fall —There must be proof that the state of the building is dangerous in præsenti and not in futuro That the building might become dangerous by another man altering the adjoining premises in future or undermining the building in question is not a ground of action under this section—Rajawan v Empress 1890 P R 3

Persons living etc in the neighbourhood —This section is limited to injuries likely to be caused to passers by or to persons living or carrying on business in the neighbourhood These words do not refer to the persons who are living actually in the alleged dangerous building or in the servant's houses in the compound belonging to it but those unascertained members of the public whose ordinary avocations may take them to the neighbourhood of the building complained of Therefore, a Magistrate cannot under this section order the owner to repair his house which is standing in its own compound at a distance from the public road—Q E v Jasodanand 20 All 501

329 Filling up excavations —In order to fill up and bring in to one level with the adjacent land excavations made for taking mud for the manufacture of bricks is illegal as the Magistrate can only order them to be fenced even if they are by the side of a public way—22 Bom 714

Fencing a tank —Where a tank is used as a reservoir for water the Magistrate can order to have it fenced to prevent accidents, but where it is proved to be injurious to the health and comfort of the community he may treat it as a public nuisance and cause it to be filled up—In re B sloo 10 W R 27

330 Procedure to be strictly followed —Where a Magistrate commences proceedings under sec 133 he is not at liberty to proceed otherwise than in conformity with the rules laid down in this chapter—Q v Ilti Singh 8 W R 37 Cases have come before the Judicial C

missioner in which proceedings under Chapter X have been instituted on a vernacular order merely initialed by the Magistrate. In proceedings thus laxly instituted, other irregularities have naturally followed. The accused has not received proper notice of what he was required to do, and has not been given an opportunity of appearing to show cause against the conditional order made by the Magistrate. The Judicial Commissioner would impress upon every Magistrate exercising powers under Chapter X the necessity of recording in each case a formal order in his own hand, stating the information he has received and the order he proposes to issue, and of seeing that a proper notice is issued to the accused giving him full information of what he is required to do and an opportunity of appearing to show cause against the order if he wishes to do so"—C P Cr Cir, Part II No 8.

Taking evidence—Before passing a conditional order under this section a Magistrate is not bound to take evidence. Because the proceedings under this section are entirely ex parte, but he should do so before making the order absolute under sec 137—Srinath v Annadai, 24 Cal 395.

331. Nature of order—An order under this section is ex parte—24 Cal 395.

The order should be a written one. If no written order is passed, the procedure is faulty and a person cannot be convicted of disobeying such an order—Gout v Choonce 1st 2 Agra 1.

The order should be directed to particular individuals and not be general except in cases of emergency to which Chapter XI applies, when they can be addressed to the public generally—Q E v Johlu, 8 All 99. A person disobeying a general order passed under this section (e.g. an order prohibiting the establishment of cotton ginning yards in several villages of 1 taluk) cannot be convicted under section 188 I P Code—Q E v Manab Chaud Ratulal 31. The disobedience of a general order passed under this section prohibiting the public in general from frequenting the roads and paths of a certain village between certain hours is not punishable under sec 188 I P C—In re Kowul Kisto, 12 C L R 231.

The order under this section must not be vague, it must be such that the persons to whom it is directed will be able to learn from its contents what they are ordered to do for the purpose of complying with it—Koti Mohan v Nakari 11 C L J 114. If the order is ambiguous and open to two interpretations the one most favourable to the accused will be adopted—16 Cal 9.

The order must be conditional and not absolute. Every order should state the time within which and the place where the person to whom it is issued may appear and move to have it set aside—9 Cal 637. Disobedience of an order which fixes no time or place is not an offence under sec. 188 I P C.—1 Bur 5 R 363.

And lastly the order must be confined to the removal of the nuisance only and should not direct the removal of the whole thing for instance, in the case of a tank the order should be to fence the tank and not to fill up the tank—In re Distoo 10 W R 27 If the Magistrate finds a burning ghat to be a nuisance he cannot order the removal of the ghat itself but can order the removal of the nuisance, i.e. he can take such steps as would result in the cremation ceasing to be a nuisance—Indra Nath v Q E 25 Cal 425 In a case where sparks from a forge might set fire to a cotton stored in an adjoining building the Magistrate cannot order the removal of the forge but should order its construction in such a way that sparks shall not issue out of it into the open air—Rataulal 872 If the branch of a tree is likely to fall on passers by the Magistrate should not order the tree to be cut down but may secure the safety of the public by ordering proper support to be given so as to prevent the branch from falling—Gekul v Emp, 22 A L J 436 26 Cr L J 104

332 Dropping of proceedings—If a Magistrate is satisfied that there are no sufficient grounds for taking action under this section he can drop the proceedings—Issur Churn v Aah Churn 8 Cal 883 Sonar v Jogendra 1 C L R 486 Thus where the Magistrate before making a final order comes to know that the road is not a public one he can drop the proceedings and abstain from carrying out the order for the removal of the obstruction—15 W R 67 In such cases the High Court will not interfere in revision with the order of the Magistrate dropping the proceedings—Sonar v Jogendra 1 C L R 486

Proceedings once dropped can be revived if sufficient cause is shown—5 C W N 173

Further inquiry—Sec 437 (now 436) enables a superior Court to direct further inquiry in case of offences But proceedings under this chapter are not proceedings in respect of offences and therefore sec 437 (now 436) cannot apply So if a Magistrate drops proceedings under this section neither the District Magistrate nor the Sessions Judge can order further inquiry under sec 437 (now 436)—Srinath v Annuddi 24 Cal 395 The proper procedure for the District Magistrate in such a case is to refer the matter to the High Court—Indra Nath v Q E 25 Cal 425 Prithipal v K E A I R 1925 Oudh 736

333 Orders not under this Section—A Magistrate has no jurisdiction under this section to pass the following orders—

- (1) An order regarding the custody and guardianship of children—2 Weir 66
- (2) An order directing the construction of a new drain—Bisha Nath v Emp 1900 A W N 138
- (3) An order to build a pigsty at a certain distance from the abadi—O. S C 60

(4) An order on a person to lop off branches of a tree of his which overhung a certain house and were thus dangerous in affording facility to thieves—Emp v Hiratal 1883 A W N 222

(5) An order to close a graveyard—12 C W N 70

(6) An order prohibiting persons to drink the water of a certain well—Emp v Sheoamber 1893 A W N 145

(7) A general order prohibiting the public to frequent the roads and places of a certain village between certain hours—12 C L R 231

(8) An order calling upon the inhabitants of a town to keep themselves well supplied with pots filled with water upon their roofs, and also with hooked stiel's for use in beating out fires—1 Bur S R 363

(9) An order directing a person to repair a well is a valid and proper order but an order directing him to pay a fine for non repair of the well wherefrom the Magistrate directed the well to be repaired is an illegal order—Reg v Tatyā Ratanlal 50

(10) An order directing a person to use his own property as not to cause injury to the property of another—In re Jaswant Singh; Ratanlal 510

(11) An order directing a person not to cultivate his land—1 A L J 615

334 Civil Suits—No suit will lie in a Civil Court to set aside an order passed under this section and the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to question or set aside such order—12 W R (T B) 18 (overruling 7 W R 95) 11 W R 434 (civil) 4 B L R 74 Thus a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to order a road which has been declared by the Magistrate as a public road to be closed—11 W R 434 (civil) But in spite of an order under this section a suit will lie for a declaration under sec 42 of the Specific Relief Act against any one of the public who claims to use the road as a public road—Chuni Lal v Ram Aishen, 15 Cal 460, 5 B 11 C R A C 94 19 W R 46 (civil) 6 Cal 291, 6 Bom 670

Since a Magistrate's order under this section is not a conclusive determination of the question of title it is competent to a Civil Court to try the question whether a land is private property or a public place—6 Cal 291

The suit will lie, as regards a public road not against the Magistrate but against the Secretary of State—6 Bom 670, but of course it is open to the party to bring a declaratory suit against any member of the public who may use the road as a public one and in such cases, it is unnecessary to make the Secretary of State a party—15 Cal 460

334A Costs—There is no provision in this chapter for the payment of costs by any party to the proceeding The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order that the costs of the removal of an obstruction should be

born by either party—Rajimaddi v Sher Ali 40 C L J 597 26 Cr L J 517

335 Revision—The High Court can interfere when the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction or in excess of his jurisdiction or when there was an error in law. Where the Magistrate came to a finding after considering all the evidence before him the High Court cannot interfere on the ground that the finding was erroneous—9 B L R 417. But the High Court can interfere when there is no evidence or no reasonable evidence on record to justify the Magistrate's finding or where the finding arrived at is perverse or such as no reasonable man could have arrived at on the evidence produced—Abdul Wahid v Abdullah 45 All 656 (661) 7 B L R 516. The High Court will interfere where an attempt has been made to abuse the powers of the Court that is where the Magistrate has given a decision regarding matters which properly lie within the cognizance of Civil Courts (as for instance in a case when a bona fide claim of right to a way or road has been set up by a party)—Abdul Wahid v Abdullah 45 All 656 (657) 7 B L J 59.

Further it is not the practice of the High Court to entertain an application in revision against an order made by a Magistrate in a proceeding under this section, unless the party aggrieved had first moved the Sessions Judge under Secs 435 and 438 of the Code—Rash Behari v Phani Bhushan 72 Cr L J 650 48 Cal 534.

336 Review—A proceeding under this section being a judicial proceeding is open to review by the High Court—9 B H C R 4 C 160 7 B L R 441.

134. (1) The order shall if practicable be served on the person against whom it is made in manner hereinafter provided for service of a summons.

(2) If such order cannot be so served it shall be notified by proclamation published in such manner as the local Government may by rule direct and a copy thereof shall be stuck up at such place or places as may be fittest for conveying the information to such person.

337 Non service of notice—The terms of this section are directory and ought to be followed but an omission to follow its provisions is a mere irregularity and does not nullify the order—Parbuly v Q E 16 Cal 9. Thus the non service of notice does not invalidate the order if the parties admit that they knew of the existence of the notice—5 W R 4. Where the parties had information of the order it is immaterial that mode in which it was brought to their notice was not in strict with the provisions of this section—Nur Jau v Emp 1900 P R 2 Ahush Ram v Crown 4 Lah 1 (9) Thus where the persons against whom the order was made were residents of a Mohalla and the order instead of being served on them personally was stuck up in some conspicuous place of the Mohalla and the parties came to know of the order held that the service of the order though irregular did not affect its validity—Ahush Ram v Crown 4 Lah 224 (29) 4 Cr L J 457

 5 Lah L J 40

Proclamation—In Bengal the proclamation is to be made by beat of drum—Calcutta Gazette 1883 Part III p 215 In Bombay it is to be made by beat of drum and by publication in the Bombay Gazette and such local newspapers as the Magistrate directs—Bombay Gazette
 1901 Part I p 779

135 The person against whom such order is made shall—
 Person to whom order is addressed to obey or shew cause or claim jury (a) perform within the time and in the manner specified in the order the act directed thereby or

(b) appear in accordance with such order and either show cause against the same or apply to the Magistrate by whom it was made, to appoint a jury to try whether the same is reasonable and proper.

Change—The italicised words have been added by sec 25 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (VIII of 1913)

338 Application to show cause and for a jury—Since the proceeding under Sec 133 is in the first instance entirely ex parte, and since the report or other information whereon the Magistrate has taken action before making the conditional order under section 133 is no evidence against the opposite party it is consequently desirable that reasonable opportunity should be given to the opposite party to show cause as contemplated by this section and to adduce evidence as prescribed by section 137—Raimohan
v Emp 44 Cal 61 (64) 20 C W N 1171

Under this section a party cannot both show cause and apply for a jury at the same time, he has the right to adopt only one of the alternatives
 —13 C W N 367

339 Bona fide claim—If the person against whom an order under sec. 133 is made claims a private right of way the question as to whether the claim set up by the defendant is a bona fide one is to be decided by the Magistrate himself and not to be left to the jury.—6 Cal 860 See Note 355 under sec 133 & sub sec (3) A case can be referred to the jury only after the Magistrate has decided that the claim set up by the petitioner is not a bona fide claim and that the way alleged to be obstructed is one which is or may be lawfully used by the public. The jury is not competent to decide the question whether there is a public right of way. What the jury has to consider is whether the order passed by the Magistrate under sec. 133 is a reasonable and proper order—Nisar ulah v. Ashraf 3 C W N 345 Ashraf v. Pam Lal 6 Cal 269 Dulal Ram v. Baishnab 10 C W N 242 31 Cal 979 Id. Ashrafuddin v. Sk. Harun Bulsh 18 C W N 1119 15 Cr L J 515. Therefore a Magistrate is not competent to make a reference to the jury without first determining whether the way is a public thoroughfare or not or without determining whether the claim set up by the opposite party is bona fide or not—Dulalram v. Laishnab Charan 10 C W N 242 Matukdhar v. Harimadhab 31 Cal 979 26 Cal 869 Sk. Imrat Ali v. St. Amjad Ali 2 P 1 J 67 18 Cr L J 457 Ahusha Ram v. Crown 4 Lah 221 (276). If however the Magistrate through a mistaken view of the law makes a reference to the jury without finding whether the way is a public way or not the jury would be met by a bona fide objection that the way is private property which would render them powerless to proceed. The Magistrate will then have to take up the matter himself again and if the claim is bona fide will have to refer the parties to a Civil Court—In re Chundernath 5 Cal 875.

When a person has applied for a jury and a jury has been appointed the party cannot set up the plea that he caused the obstruction under a bona fide claim of private right to the way—22 All 267 30 All 364. The application for a jury will operate as a waiver of the plea of bona fide claim. Once a jury is appointed on the application of the person against whom an order has been made under sec. 133 it is not open to him at a later stage to set up a claim of right to the subject of contention and to have his claim determined by the Magistrate before the jury proceed with the matter—Ah Yuay v. Ma Gyi 7 Bur L T 23 15 Cr L J 269.

136 If such person does not perform such act or appear

Consequence of his failing to do so and show cause or apply for the appointment of a jury as required by section 135, he shall be liable to the penalty prescribed in that behalf in Section 188 of the Indian Penal Code, and the order shall be made absolute.

340 Object of section.—The provisions of this section are stringent because the intention is to create facilities for conditional orders which Magistrates are authorised to pass under this chapter becoming final without needless delay and thereby promptly to ensure public safety—12 Mad 475. Therefore an order under this section must be passed without delay. Where a conditional order issued under section 133 was made absolute 4 years later the High Court treated the final order as resting on no conditional order and reversed it—23 Bom. L. R. 844.

341 Order absolute.—This section conclusively presumes that the conditional order under sec. 133 was correctly made—17 Mad. 475. Where an order has become absolute under this section it cannot be questioned in any subsequent proceeding—1900 P. R. 2. It is not competent to the party to go behind the order and question its validity in any way—13 All. 577. But where the Magistrate makes an order which he had no jurisdiction to pass the party affected by it can go behind the order—20 All. 501.

Even though an order has been made absolute under this section by reason of the party not being able to attend on the date fixed the Magistrate can set aside the ex parte order on the appearance of the party. In such a case the Magistrate must proceed to record evidence as provided by Sec. 137 and shall then either make the order absolute again or shall drop the proceedings as the case may be—19 Cr. L. J. 214 (Pat.).

342 No further notice necessary.—Whenever the time fixed in the order under sec. 133 has been allowed by the defendant to pass without compliance with the order or without protest the liability to punishment attaches at once and no further notice is necessary under sec. 140—31 Mad. 82.

137. (1) If he appears and shows cause against the order Procedure where he the Magistrate shall take evidence in the appears to show cause matter as in a summons case.

(2) If the Magistrate is satisfied that the order is not reasonable and proper, no further proceedings shall be taken in the case.

(3) If the Magistrate is not so satisfied the order shall be made absolute.

343 Magistrate.—The power to issue a conditional order belongs only to the Magistrate mentioned in the beginning of sec. 133. The power to appoint a jury also belongs to the Magistrate who made the conditional order (see sec. 135). But the Magistrate who is to hold the inquiry under section 137 need not be the Magistrate who made the order under sec. 133. The Magistrate in section 137 is the Magistrate before whom the party is ordered to appear (see sec. 133) he may be either the Magistrate himself who issued the conditional order or a Magistrate of the first or second class mentioned in the first part of section 133 (1). This must be the meaning of sections 133 and 137 read together. Therefore, where a Magistrate issuing a conditional order under sec 133 required certain persons to appear before a Civil Magistrate the latter can exercise his powers under section 137 and can take evidence concerning the conditional order or any further proceedings—see 9 Val 61 25 Cal 278 2 Pers 61

341 Taking evidence.—When a party appears to show cause the Magistrate is bound to take evidence. Where one of the five jurors declined to act and the remaining four being equally divided in opinion the Magistrate declined to pass any order under sec 139 and struck off the case held that the course adopted by the Magistrate was irregular he should have summoned a fresh jury and commenced the inquiry afresh—Uma Churn v Joshe n 11 Cal 84

The finding of the jury should be arrived at after each juror exercises his own discretion in the matter. A verdict given by jurors some of whom blindly follow the opinion of others is not proper. Where out of five jurors two only saw the place and the third never visited it but passed his opinion solely on what had been told him by the other two it was held that the opinion of the so called majority was not that of a legal majority—25 W R 4

The Magistrate must accept the verdict in its entirety If one part of the verdict is erroneous (e.g. if the verdict provides for the reconstruction of an obstruction) the whole verdict must be rejected. The Magistrate cannot split up the verdict and accept that part of the verdict which is correct rejecting the portion which is erroneous—Rahimaddi v Sher Ali 40 C L J 597 26 Cr L J 517

(2) If in such inquiry the Magistrate finds that there is any reliable evidence in support of such denial he shall stay the proceeding until the matter of the existence of such right has

(3) A person who has on being questioned by the Magistrate under sub section (1) failed to deny the existence of a public right of the nature therein referred to or who, having made such denial has failed to adduce reliable evidence in support thereof shall not in the subsequent proceedings be permitted to make any such denial, nor shall any question in respect of the existence of any such public right be inquired into by any jury appointed under Section 138

This section has been newly added by sec 26 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1973)

The procedure which ought to be followed by the Magistrate in case a bona fide claim of right is set up by the petitioner was not laid down in any section of this chapter under the previous law. But quite a large volume of caselaw had gathered round this point which the Legislature has now thought fit to crystallize into a new section

"The principal question in connection with this clause is whether as provided in the Bill questions of title in relation to rights of way and the like should for the purposes of the Chapter be finally decided by the Magistrate or whether the almost uniform decisions of the High Courts which lay down that the Magistrate must stay proceedings if he is satisfied that the question has been raised bona fide should be followed. We prefer to accept the latter view as laid down in Manipur Dey v Birhu Bhuyan Sirkar 1 L R 42 Cal 158 and we have provided for it as a special case in a new section 139 A' — Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

The leading case on this subject is Manipur Dey v Birhu Bhuyan Sirkar 47 Cal 158 18 C W N 1086 15 Cr L J 698 (referred to in the above Report of the Joint Committee) which has laid down the following important propositions of law. If the party against whom the order is contemplated to be passed under sec 133 raises a question that the pathway is not a public property in the sense of the provisions of this section the Magistrate trying the case should be careful not only to decide as to whether the pathway in question is situate on a private land or is for public use but he should, even when the claim of the objector is not substantiated find whether the claim is bona fide or is set up only to oust the jurisdiction of the Court. If the Magistrate finds that the claim which is set up is a mere pretence, he should then proceed to pass a final order and make the rule issued by him absolute. If however he finds that the claim although not substantiated is not a mere pretence and is raised to oust the jurisdiction of the Court but that it is raised bona fide, he should stay his hand and refer the party to the Civil Court. And if the party within a reasonable time does not have recourse to the Civil Court the Magistrate may then proceed to make the rule absolute.

357 Bona fide claim—If there is a bona fide dispute as to the existence of a public right the powers under sections 133, 137 as regards obstruction to public ways cannot be exercised by the Magistrate—4 Bom L R 687 In re Dnyanoba 15 Bom L R 57 14 Cr L J 71 In re Mahirana Jaswatsangji 22 Bom 989 11 Cal 8 1 C L J 434 2 Weir 61. But the claim in order to have this effect must be bona fide and not a mere pretence to oust jurisdiction. The mere assertion of a claim made without reasonable ground or honest belief in it or honest intention to support it will not oust a Criminal Court of its jurisdiction under these sections—15 Cal 564 25 Cal 278 22 Cr I J 459 (Cal) 22 Cr L J 577 (Cal). It is not open to any person illegally causing obstruction to a public property to set up a bogus question of title to such property for the purpose of ousting the jurisdiction of a Magistrate and notwithstanding the raising of such a question the Magistrate is entitled to hear the case sufficiently to enable him to make up his mind whether or not a bona fide question of title is raised—Imp v Dost Muhammad 29 All 98 (99). A claim set up to annoy an enemy of the claimant cannot be said to be a bona fide claim—1 C L J 434.

Therefore when a person against whom an order is made under section 133 to remove an obstruction from a public way claims it as a private way the Magistrate should first determine whether the claim is bona fide or not—Kylash v Ram Lal 26 Cal 869 31 Cal 979 Minipur Dey v Bidhu Bhushan 42 Cal 158 Upendra v Kshilish 23 Cal 493 3 C W N 345 7 C W N 117, 10 C W N 845 2 P L J 67 22 Cr L J 321 (Cal). In the absence of a finding as to the bona fides of the claim set up by the petitioners to the subject matter of the dispute the judgment is liable to be set aside—Chandra Mandal v Ram Mandal 21 C W N 906 18 Cr L J 738 Blagat v Ramsup 21 C L J 116 16 Cr L J 160. The question of bona fides of a claim is a question of fact and has to be enquired into like any other question of fact—Nundo Gopal v Kusum 1 C L J 434, Teni Prasad v Sarjoo 20 Cr L J 556 (Pat).

If, however, the encroachment complained of is made on a way which is admittedly public the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is not ousted and it is not necessary, in order to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate that there should be a finding as to the bona fide character of any claim that might be made by the accused to any particular piece of ground on which the encroachment is made—6 C W N 886. Similarly, if upon inquiry the Magistrate finds that the channel in question is a public channel the

Magistrate is not bound to inquire whether the accused had a bona fide claim of right to the channel or to refer the matter to the Civil Court but has jurisdiction to proceed with the case—Fah r Mullick v Imp, 28 C L J 211

A bona fide claim should be set up at or before the hearing but not afterwards and the Magistrate who finds the claim not to be bona fide should state the reasons for his decision, which is subject to revision by the High Court—15 Cal 501 7 C W N 117

In Em v Dost Muhammad 28 All 98 the Allahabad High Court seems to have laid down that the moment a bona fide dispute as to title is raised by the defendant the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is ousted and the Magistrate is bound to stop the proceeding and to refer the parties to a civil suit. That ruling has been dissented from in a recent case of the same High Court in which it has been held that the Magistrate's jurisdiction is not ousted merely by reason of the defendant raising a bona fide dispute as to title but he is entitled to decide whether the way obstructed by the defendant is a public way—Abdul Wahid v Abdullah, 45 All 659 (660) 21 A L J 529

357A Procedure—The provisions of this section are imperative and as soon as the accused denies a public right the Magistrate ought to inquire into the matter and find whether the place obstructed is a public one or not. If, instead of doing so he at once proceeds under sec 137 to take evidence from the complainant the trial is vitiated by wrong procedure and the final order is liable to be set aside—Raghunath v Emp 23 A L J 187 26 Cr L J 873 A I R (1925) All 311

As soon as the accused appears before him the Magistrate is bound to question him as to whether he denies the existence of any public right in respect of the way, river etc. and if he does so the Magistrate shall before proceeding under sec 137 or 138 inquire into the matter. It is the duty of the Magistrate to follow the above procedure without waiting for the objection to be raised by the accused and the Magistrate cannot refuse to inquire into the matter because the objection was not taken until a late stage of the case—Sh Sadir v Sabirah 29 C W N 649 26 Cr L J 1168 A I R 1925 Cal 735

Dispute between Government and private individual—In case of a dispute between the Government and a private individual as to the right to the ground on which an encroachment is alleged to have been made by the latter by building a wall a Magistrate should not proceed under this section until the dispute is settled in a Civil Court—Ratanlal 378, 2 Bom L R 818

358 Sub-section (2)—The law requires first of all that the party shall appear before the Magistrate and deny the existence of the public right in question, secondly, that he shall produce some reliable evidence, and thirdly, that such evidence shall be legal evidence and shall support the denial. If these three conditions are satisfied, then the Magistrate's jurisdiction ceases to exist—Thakur Sao v Abdul Aziz, 4 Pat 783

If the Magistrate finds that the claim is bona fide, he should abstain from further action and should allow the party to substantiate his claim in a Civil Court—15 Cal 564, 17 Cal 562, Nasaruddi v Akiluddi 3 C W N 345, 8 C W N 143, Manipur Deo v Bidhu Bhushan, 42 Cal 158, Khushi Ram v Crown 4 Lah 224 (231), 25 Cal 278, Nunda v Kusum, 1 C L J 434, 22 Cr L J. 351 (Cal), Debendra v Chairman, 25 Cr L J 1080 (Cal), 1900 A W N 204, 28 All 98, 1903 P. R. 2, 10 Bom L R 563, Rang v B N W Ry Co, 4 P L T 402, L B R (1872 92) 530, 4 C P L R 142. So also where the question as to whether the way is private or public is seriously disputed and its decision becomes a difficult matter of mixed fact and law the Magistrate should decline to decide it, and should send the parties to a Civil Court—Abdul Wahid v Abdullah 45 All 656 (666), 21 A L J 529. When a bona fide question of title is raised, the Magistrate cannot proceed any further in the matter, he cannot decide whether the title exists or not—28 All 98, he is not competent to decide whether the title is barred by limitation or not—35 Cal 283. In Ram Sagar v Alek Naskar, 49 Cal 682 (F B): 26 C W N 142, the Calcutta High Court considered all the above cases and held that even though the Magistrate found that the claim of right set up by the defendant was bona fide his jurisdiction was not thereby ousted but he was entitled to proceed with the case and was not bound to refer the parties to a Civil Court. But the present section expressly lays down that if the Magistrate finds that there is any reliable evidence in support of the defendant's denial of a public right he should stay all proceedings until the matter of the existence of such right has been decided by a competent Civil Court.

If the Magistrate finds that the claim is made bona fide, he should allow the defendant a reasonable time within which to establish his rights in a Civil Court, and in the meantime proceedings may be stayed. If the defendant does not assert his right in a Civil Court within a reasonable time, the Magistrate should proceed with the case—Hesat Ali v Abdur Rahim, 8 C W. N 143, Ram Sagar v Alek Naskar, 49 Cal 682 (F. B) at p 693, Lakshan Chandra v Ulas, 22 Cr L J 351 (Cal), Manipur Deo v. Bidhu Bhushan, 42 Cal 158.

359. Sub-section (3) —Question shall not be inquired into by jury — The question as to whether the claim set up by the defendant is a bona fide one or whether the place is a public way or not is to be decided by the Magistrate himself and not to be left to the jury. The jury is not competent to decide the question whether there is or is not a public right of way. They can merely find whether the Magistrate's order as originally made is reasonable and proper—Ajlash v. Ram Lal, 26 Cal 869, Dulal Ram v. Basirnasb Chattran 10 C W N 845, Nasiruddi v. Akiluddi, 3 C W N 345 Matuk Dhar v. Hari Madhab 31 Cal 979 In re Chunder Nath 5 Cal 875 Sheikh Inrat v. Sheikh Amjad 2 P L J 67 Akushi Ram v. Crown 4 Lah 224 (231) 24 Cr L J 457. Contra—30 All 364 where it has been held that it is within the competence of the jury to decide as to the validity of an objection that the way alleged to have been obstructed is not a public way. But the Allahabad ruling has been disapproved of by the Legislature and is rendered obsolete by this section. We think that the only question to be left to the jury should be whether the measures directed by the Magistrate to be taken are reasonable and proper and in view of the decision in 30 All 364 we think it desirable that this should be made clear"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

140 (1) When an order has been made absolute under Section 136 Section 137 or Section 139, Procedure on order being made absolute the Magistrate shall give notice of the same to the person against whom the order was made, and shall further require him to perform the act directed by the order within a time to be fixed in the notice, and inform him that in case of disobedience he will be liable to the penalty provided by Section 188 of the Indian Penal Code

(2) If such act is not performed within the time fixed, the Consequence of disobedience to order Magistrate may cause it to be performed, and may recover the costs of performing it, either by the sale of any building goods or other property removed by the order, or by the distress and sale of any other moveable property of such person within or without the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction. If such other property is without such limits the order shall authorize its attachment and sale when endorsed by the Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property to be attached is found

(3) No suit shall lie in respect of anything done in good faith under this section.

360 A person who neither complies with the order passed u
Sec 133 nor protests against it within the time fixed can be pro

under Sec 136 without further notice being given under this section—31 Mad 280 (cited in Note 342 under Art 136) : 13 All 577

If a final order is passed by a Magistrate under this chapter, any succeeding Magistrate cannot go behind the order and question its legality, as if he were sitting in judgment over it as a Court of Appeal. Therefore, if an application is made under this section to the succeeding Magistrate for the enforcement of an order passed by a preceding Magistrate the former cannot reject the application on the ground that the order passed by his predecessor was an illegal order—Kiran Chandra v Ramesh Chandra, 27 C W N 459 24 Cr L J 317.

141 If the applicant, by neglect or otherwise, prevents the appointment of the jury, or if from any cause the jury appointed do not return their verdict within the time fixed or within such further time as the Magistrate may in his discretion allow, the Magistrate may pass such order as he thinks fit, and such order shall be executed in the manner provided by Section 140

Procedure on failure to appoint jury or omission to return verdict.

361 Jury failing to return verdict.—When the majority of the jurors perversely refuse to return a verdict for fear of displeasing either party, the Magistrate can discharge them and appoint a new jury—Girwar Lal v Bansidhar, 44 All 375. Where upon failure of the jury to return their verdict, the petitioners appeared before the Magistrate and prayed for appointment of a fresh jury, it was held that the Magistrate ought to have appointed a new jury and not made the original order absolute—12 C W N 1017. Under this section, the Magistrate upon failure of the jury to return a verdict has a discretion to pass such order as he thinks fit. Therefore, where the foreman of the jury simply returned the papers without a verdict the Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order absolute—Jiblal v Gena Sahu, 4 P L T 15. 24 Cr L J 472. But it is desirable that under such circumstances the Magistrate should inquire into the case and should give the party an opportunity of showing cause and producing evidence, before he makes the order absolute under this section—4 P L T. 15, Ajodhya Tewari v. Emp., 4 P. L. T. 13 : 24 Cr L. J. 583. But if upon the failure of the jury to return their verdict, the petitioners did not take any action to move the Magistrate for taking evidence on their behalf, the Magistrate was justified in making the order absolute—13 C. W. N. 367.

Fine :—An order sentencing a man to a fine for the nuisance, and an additional fine for each day he continues it after the conviction, is illegal—1 B L R O C 41

142 (1) If a Magistrate making an order under Section 133 considers that immediate measures should be taken to prevent imminent danger or injury of a serious kind to the public he may, whether a jury is to be, or has been, appointed or not, issue such an injunction to the person against whom the order was made as is required to obviate or prevent such danger or injury pending the determination of the matter

(2) In default of such person forthwith obeying such injunction the Magistrate may himself use or cause to be used such measures as he thinks fit to obviate such danger or to prevent such injury

(3) No suit shall lie in respect of anything done in good faith by a Magistrate under this section

362 Imminent danger — An injunction under this section can be issued only when there is imminent danger or fear of injury of a serious kind to the public—1 W R 86 Where a Magistrate who makes an order under this section subsequently directs further inquiry to be made the Magistrate must be held to have abandoned the proceedings under this section and he should have proceeded under Secs 136 and 137 instead of fining the party under sec 188 1 P C—Ibid

No injunction can be issued under this section when the danger has passed away—1 W R 8

143. A District Magistrate or Sub divisional Magistrate, or any other Magistrate empowered by the Local Government or the District Magistrate in this behalf, may order any person not to repeat or continue a public nuisance, as defined in the Indian Penal Code or any special or local law

Magistrate may prohibit repetition or continuance of public nuisance.

Secs 143 and 144 — This section enables the Magistrate to prevent the continuing of public nuisance, whereas Sec 144 enables him to prevent it for the first time—19 Mad 464

363 Scope of section — A person will be bound by an order under this section only when the order is issued to him personally and not proclamation addressed generally to the public at large—8 All 99 ~ W R 32

Revision —It was formerly held that orders under secs 143 and 144 were not open to revision because they were not proceedings within the meaning of sec 435—Emp v Bisheshar 1892 A W N 102 But now by reason of the omission of subsection (3) of section 435 by the Amendment Act of 1923 orders under section 143 will henceforth be liable to revision

CHAPTER XI

TEMPORARY ORDERS IN URGENT CASES OF NUISANCE OR APPREHENDED DANGER

144 1) In cases where in the opinion of a District Magistrate a Chief Presidency Magistrate Sub Divisional Magistrate or of any other Magistrate not being a Magistrate of the third class specially empowered by the Local Government or the Chief Presidency Magistrate or the District Magistrate to act under this section there is sufficient ground for proceeding under this section and immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable

such Magistrate may by a written order stating the material facts of the case and served in manner provided by Section 134 direct any person to abstain from a certain act or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management if such Magistrate considers that such direction is likely to prevent or tends to prevent obstruction annoyance or injury, or risk of obstruction annoyance or injury to any person lawfully employed or danger to human life health or safety or a disturbance of the public tranquility or a riot or an affray

(2) An order under this section may in cases of emergency or in cases where the circumstances do not admit of the serving in due time of a notice upon the person against whom the order is directed be passed ex parte

(3) An order under this section may be directed to a particular individual or to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place.

(4) Any Magistrate may, either on his own motion or on the application of any person, rescind or alter any order made under this section by himself or any Magistrate subordinate to him or by his predecessor in office.

(5) Where such an application is received the Magistrate shall afford the applicant an early opportunity of appearing before him either in person or by pleader and showing cause against the order, and if the Magistrate rejects the application wholly or in part, he shall record in writing his reasons for so doing.

(6) No order under this section shall remain in force for more than two months from the making thereof, unless in cases of danger to human life, health or safety or a likelihood of a riot or an affray, the Local Government by notification in the official Gazette otherwise directs.

Change.—The italicised words in subsections (1) and (4) have been added. Subsection (5) has been newly enacted and the old subsection (5) has been renumbered as subsection (6) by section 27 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). The reasons have been stated below in their proper places.

364 Application of this section.—The power conferred by this section upon a Magistrate is an extraordinary power and the Magistrate should resort to it only when he is satisfied that other powers with which he is entrusted are insufficient. The authority of the Magistrate should be exercised in defence of rights rather than in their suppression in repression of illegal, rather than in interference with lawful acts.—Sundaram v Q 6 Mad 203. It is the duty of the Magistrate to support all lawful acts as far as possible.—Venkataramana v A 1, 22 M L T 323. 19 C L J 56. His first duty is to secure to every person the enjoyment of his rights under the law and by measures of precaution to deter those who seek to invade the rights of others but if he apprehends that the lawful exercise of rights may lead to civil tumult and he doubts whether he has available a sufficient force to repress such tumult or to render it innocuous regard for the public welfare is allowed to override temporarily the private right and the Magistrate is authorised to interdict its exercise.—Muthulu v Jagan 2 M L J 147. Tekut Kurj Dhanu v Bihik 5 C

W. N 329 An order under sec 144 may sometimes interfere with the legal rights of individuals, but when such interference is necessary, it is the duty of the Magistrate to limit it as much as possible, and for that purpose he should afterwards hold an inquiry into the circumstances and determine whether as a matter of fact the act prohibited as likely to lead to a breach of the peace is within or in excess of the legal rights of the person forbidden to do it. If it is found that a man is doing that which he is legally entitled to do and that his neighbour chooses to take offence thereat and to create a disturbance in consequence it is clear that the duty of the Magistrate is not to continue to deprive the first of the exercise of his legal rights but to restrain the second from illegally interfering with that exercise of legal rights—Abdool v Lucky Narain 5 Cal 132 (134 135), Bharg v K L 25 Cr L J 1178 (Pat), Q L v Haz Faddin, Ratanlal 907

365 Magistrates empowered —Since the power to be exercised under this section is an extraordinary power the law is careful to confer this power upon those Magistrates alone whose discretion is prominently guaranteed by their responsible position or by selection—6 Mad 203

In the Punjab all Magistrates of 1st and 2nd class have been empowered to act under this section—Punjab Gazette 1883 Part I p 52 So also in Upper Burma. In Bombay Assistant Superintendents of Police have been empowered to act under section 144. See Bombay Gazette, 1883, Part I page 396

When a Magistrate passes an order under this section the record should show in clear and unmistakable terms the authority under which he professes to act—Thudamawara v Emp, 1 Rang 49 2 Bur L J 22 24 Cr L J 727

By the Amendment Act of 1923, third class Magistrates have been expressly prohibited from being empowered under this section. 'We do not think that powers under section 144 should be granted to a Magistrate of the third class and we have provided for this by a small amendment'—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

366 Conditions precedent —Proceedings under this section may be taken only in urgent cases of nuisance or apprehended danger, the existence of these circumstances is a condition precedent to an action under this section—1 C L R 58 This section is to be applied in cases of urgency, and should not be allowed to take the place of any other provision of law (e g sec 133) which might be more appropriate. And before proceeding under this section the Magistrate should hold an inquiry and record the urgency of the matter—Kamini Mohan v Harendra, 38 Cal 876 Where the complaint was that a person by closing a drain and obstructing the flow of the rain water of another house endangered the safety of the house but the owner could drain off the water in some other way and that it was not an urgent case of nuisance or apprehended danger and action under sec 144 was not justified—Haji Ali v Emp 26 Cr L J 560 A I R 1935 All C N Before taking action under this section the Magistrate should be of opinion that immediate prevention or speedy remedy is necessary and he should state in the order the materials upon which his opinion is based—3 Cal 935 Jurisdiction under this section depends on the urgency of the case and the mere statement of the Magistrate that he considered the danger to be imminent is not sufficient to give him jurisdiction if the facts set out by him show that really there was no urgent necessity for taking action—Chandra Nath v F J Ry, 23 C W N 145 19 Cr I J 951 The record of the Magistrate should disclose the existence of an emergency which called for an ex parte order under this section or that there was no sufficient time to serve notice on the party affected thereby But a Magistrate ought not to treat a case as a case of emergency merely because some people threaten to commit a breach of the peace unless he had no sufficient police or other force at his command to prevent an immediate breach of the peace and unless he is further unable to find out the persons threatening to commit a breach of the peace so as to bind them over to keep the peace—Velkarantha v K J M L T 313 1917 M W N 724 19 Cr I J 56

There is sufficient ground for proceeding —These words have been added during the Debate in the Legislative Assembly on the same grounds on which a similar amendment has been made in sec 107 See the Legislative Assembly Debates January 25 1923 pages 1495—1496

A Subordinate Magistrate passing an order under this section ought to use his own judicial mind on the report of the police and to come to his own conclusion whether a temporary and urgent order ought to be passed and should not be guided entirely by the instructions issued by the District Magistrate (which are not legally binding on him) though he ought to give due respect to the advice of the District Magistrate—Govinda v Perumal 38 Mad 489 (490)

An order under this section must be based upon proper evidence In the absence of such evidence the Magistrate cannot pass an order merely on the complaint of one party—Chandra Kaula v K E, 20 C W N 981 17 Cr I J 464 So also the Magistrate cannot act upon mere surmise or assumption (11 W R 46) or merely on the strength of a Police report (13 W R 19 11 W R 46) without hearing the petitioner or giving him an opportunity of being heard—11 W R 46

367 Order—Nature and contents —(a) The order must be in writing the words in the section are 'written order' There must be a writt order directed to the accused and duly promulgated before he can be prosecuted for disobedience of the order—1905 P R 36

(b) The order must contain a statement of the material facts which the Magistrate considers to be the facts of the case and upon the footing of which he bases his order—10 W R 53 Karoolal v Shyamlal 32 Cal 935 Akal v Mahabir 1 Pat L R 223 Under this section something more is necessary to be done than a mere recital of the fact that in the opinion of the Magistrate there was sufficient ground for proceeding under the action the order should state the material facts relating to the case in order to show that there was justification for making the order—Blong v Emp 25 Cr L J 1178 A I R 1924 Pat 767 In the case of an ex parte order the material facts include the circumstances showing why the Magistrate was temporarily unable to prevent a breach of the peace by intending peace breakers—Venkalaramana v K E 22 M L T 373 Where the order did not state the material facts it was set aside—Karoolal v Shyamlal 32 Cal 935 Govinda Chetty Emp 27 M L J 628 14 Cr L J 658

(c) The order must be specific and definite in its terms An order that the petitioner should not go to a particular village and should not allow any of his servants or relatives or friends to go there is of the most indefinite character as to time and person—2 C W N 472 Similarly an order directing the petitioners not to commit any act which is likely to induce a breach of the peace and not to take forcible possession of a village not in their possession is indefinite and bad in law—11 C W N 121

(d) The order must be confined to the particular act for which the danger is apprehended any order prohibiting a course of conduct or an occupation involving a series of acts done at certain intervals and spread over a period of time (e.g. an order prohibiting inoculation) is illegal and must be set aside—Anonymous 2 Weir 67

(e) The duration of the order must be co extensive with the emergency it should not be wider than is necessary to prevent the emergency The Magistrate cannot issue an order intending to have effect for all time—Muthialu v Bapin 2 Mad 140 In re Pedda Charu 2 Weir 74 Thus the Magistrate is not competent to pass an order directing that all processions should stop music when passing a certain place of worship at any time when it is not shown that assemblies are held in that place for the purpose of worship at all hours of the day—2 Mad 140 2 Weir 74

(f) The order must not be general and sweeping in its terms A Magistrate cannot in general terms forbid two parties to use any musical instrument in the neighbourhood of each other's house though he may forbid the use of musical instruments for the purpose of mutual annoyance—6 W R 40

(g) The order must not be in its nature irrevocable e.g. an order to cut down trees—13 W R 7^o or an order for division of crops—Umatal v. Nemat, 32 Cal 154

368 Service of order —The order must be served in the manner provided by sec 134 i.e. served personally. If the order is not proved to have been served personally a conviction under sec 188 I P C for disobedience of the order is illegal—Ratanlal 30

369 Abstain from certain act —The words certain act means a definite act. An order directing a person not to collect rents from the ryots generally without mentioning any particular ryots is not an order to abstain from a 'certain act'—16 Cal 80 19 Cal 127 9 C W N 392. See also 2 C W N 422 and 11 C W N 121 cited in Note 367 above. But an order directing a person not to interfere with the management of a particular temple or a particular mutt is a direction to abstain from a 'certain act' and is a valid order under this section—24 Mad 45 3 Mad 354 18 Mad 40^o. So also an order directing the trustee of a Vaishnavite temple to abstain from interfering with the conduct of Adhyapakam service is an order restraining a person from doing a certain act and is valid—In re Srinivasathathachariar 19 Cr L J 933 (Mad)

370 Take certain order with respect to property —Property whether moveable or immovable —It has been held in Q v. Goluck Chunder 12 W R 38 that the power conferred by this section refers only to and is restricted to immovable property of the kind set forth in the next Chapter. The Magistrate cannot make an order regarding the custody of money in respect of which a breach of the peace is likely to take place. See also Ananda v. Carr Stephens 19 Cal 127 (129) which lays down that this section relates to interference or dealing of some kind with the land itself or something erected or standing on the land. But there is nothing in the section to justify this view.

Property outside jurisdiction —No order can be made by a Magistrate under this section when the property in respect of which the order is made is situated outside the local limits of his jurisdiction—2 C W N 572

371 Orders under this section —The following orders can be passed by a Magistrate under this section —

(a) An order prohibiting burials in certain places on sanitary ground—2 Weir 64

(b) An order directing that two rival sects of Muhammadans should enter and worship in a particular mosque only at particular hours—2 Mad 262

(c) An order to the priests of a temple to lighten and wi

the door way so as to prevent overcrowding of pilgrims—6 B H C R 36

(d) An order that certain persons should abstain from interfering with the Badves in the performance of their daily puja of the god Vishnu is a valid order if the Magistrate is of opinion that the interference with the puja is likely to cause annoyance to the worshippers—4 Bom I R 58

(e) An order prohibiting a procession on the ground that the Magistrate would not be able to prevent a breach of the peace with the force at his disposal—Arumuga v Perumalswamy 15 Cr L J 30 (Mad)

(f) An order prohibiting a meeting if owing to the prevalence of ill feeling between certain persons likely to attend the meeting a breach of the peace is to be apprehended—Nga Ti v Maung Kyaw 11 Bur L T 59 18 Cr L J 512

372 Improper orders under this section —A Magistrate is competent to issue an order directing a person to abstain from certain act or to take certain order with certain property and such an order can be passed under this section only when the object of the order is to prevent obstruction annoyance or injury to any person or danger to human life health or safety or a disturbance of the public tranquility or a riot or an affray and when immediate prevention or speedy remedy is necessary. Therefore the following orders not being orders of the above description are not valid under this section —

(a) An order directing the ryots to refrain from reaping the crops they have sown unless they pay the Government rent—Isab v Emp 8 C W N 373

(b) An order stopping the erection of an embankment on the ground that the erection may cause loss to the opposite party—Ram Autar v Krisnaput 13 C W N 188

(c) An order prohibiting a person to excavate a tank in his own land on the apprehension that the house of the opposite party would go down into the bed of the tank—38 Cal 876

(d) An order directing the owners of cattle to take proper care of them and not to allow them to stray on the high road—3 B L R A C 45 9 B L R App 36

(e) An order that prostitutes who had built huts should remove their huts because people visiting them will endanger their lives by having to cross a railway line—In re Birechuar 2 C W N 70

(f) An order directing a person to remove a wall erected on a land alleged to belong to another is invalid in the absence of evidence that any dispute or riot or affray is likely to occur—13 W R 19

(g) An order directing the removal of an embankment whereby adjacent lands are in danger of being flooded—5 M H C R App 19

(h) An order directing the owner of a tank situated in the dry bed of a river to destroy the banks of the tank on the ground that they are an obstruction to the public using the river in the rainy season and that the banks interfere with the drainage of the country—1 B L R S N 27

(i) An order directing the removal of a dam which obstructs the flood of water through an irrigation channel—Emp v Prayag 9 Cal 103

(j) An order in respect of collection of market dues—23 W R 57

(k) An order directing the owner of a building which has fallen down on his own land to re-erect the building—In re Rahmatulla 17 All 485

(l) An order regarding custody of children—Anonymous 2 Weir 66

(m) An order that a certain person should remove the roof drains on the eastern side of his house and should construct them in such a manner as not to injure or inconvenience any party—2 W R 22

(n) An order directing that certain hedges should be pruned—Ratanlal 81

(o) An order regulating boat traffic at a certain landing place on the ground that the over crowding of boats was dangerous to the health of the residents of the town—Q E v Pratap 25 Cal 852

(p) An order passed with the consent of parties that certain articles with respect to which there was a dispute should be removed to the custody of the Court—Leong Yau v Tchurg 12 C W N 1044 or an order directing the village Munsiff to take possession of the disputed property—Boganathi v Velayee (1916) 2 M W N 88 17 Cr I J 190

(q) An order directing that certain persons should continue to live in the havelis in which they were at the date of the order and that a police guard should keep watch on the outer door only allowing certain specified persons to enter the havelis—1878 I R 33

(r) An order to the disputing landlords that no rents should be collected from the tenants until the rights of both parties have been established in a competent Court—Irostina v Lnp 8 C I R 231

(s) An order by a Magistrate holding that the first of two parties was in possession and directing that the second party should not interfere with the possession of the first party—Parkar v Ravi Khelaudhi 11 C W N 271 or an order attaching immoveable property—13 C W N cxiv In such cases the Magistrate should act under Section 145

(t) An order directing division of crops between two rival landlords—Umatal v Nemas 32 Cal 154

(u) An order forbidding people of either party to read prayers in a mosque on account of an apprehension of a breach of the peace (there being at the time an ill feeling between the parties regarding the management of the mosque) is illegal—Haji Md Ismail v Barkat Ali, 26 C W N 904.

373 Orders regarding hats or markets —A Magistrate may direct one of two rival hat holders to change the day of his hat, so as not to interfere with the days of the hat of the other proprietor, if the Magistrate is of opinion that the holding of two hats on the same day, will lead to a breach of the peace—14 W R. 46 or he may direct that one of two rival hat holders should not hold his hat on the same day as another—18 W R 47 Nagendra v Rakhal Das, 23 C W N 141; Parameshwar v Emp., 3 P L T 268 or where a new hat is established within half a mile of an old one the Magistrate may order the new hat-holder to abstain from holding his hat on certain days—18 W R 22 But the Magistrate cannot direct one of the two hat holders to hold his hat on particular days e.g. Saturdays and Tuesdays only, for though the section empowers the Magistrate to make an order prohibiting a person from holding his hat on certain specified days (viz the days on which the rival hat is held) the law does not empower him to direct that hats shall be held only on certain days, leaving the party no option to hold his hat on some other days on which his rival does not hold his hat—Shyamanand v Emp., 31 Cal 990

A general order prohibiting the holding of hats for an indefinite period is illegal—Bidhu Ranjan v Ramesh, 11 C W N 223 Md Bakar Ali v Hanwant 1897 A W N 59 Parameshwar v Emp., 3 P L T 268 An order forbidding certain persons from establishing a hat at certain places, and giving a vague direction not to interfere in any way with the trade of another hat, is improper—Satish Chandra v. Emp., 11 C W. N 79

The right to hold a hat is a man's lawful right and he has the right to establish the hat in the place and on the days most advantageous to him (4 W. R. 12) provided that no breach of the peace is caused by any dispute between two rival hat holders Therefore an order of a Magistrate directing that one of the two rival hat holders should not hold his hat opposite to that of the other but should hold it a mile away is illegal, because such an order would render the hat of no use to him—Shurul Chunder v Bama Churn, 4 C L R 410 A general order prohibiting a person absolutely from holding a hat within an extensive area is illegal, for a person is entitled to exercise all rights of ownership on his property, and the holding of a hat on one's own property is not a wrongful act—Benowars v Pranab Krishna, 26 C. W N 663; Rakhal Das v. Emp., 19 C W N. 248

An order can be passed under this section only on the grounds specified in the section, viz grounds of apprehended danger etc. Thus, an order to close a kat can be passed on the ground that it was very near to another kat and a breach of the peace was apprehended—20 W R 43 but an order prohibiting a party from holding a kat on a particular day cannot be passed merely on the ground that another party had long been used to hold a kat on the adjacent land on the following day—21 W R 26 Even where there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace the likelihood must be imminent a Magistrate cannot restrain the holding of a kat merely because there is already a kat existing and the ulterior consequence of holding the new kat may be a breach of the peace—Rakkhal Das v Emp., 19 C W N 248 13 Cr I J 311 If disturbance is anticipated the proper procedure would be to act under section 107 of the Code—Benoochari v Prabod Krishna 26 C W N 663

373A. Effect of order under this section.—An order under this section restraining a certain person from going upon the land of another should not be treated as a substantive evidence of possession of the latter, in a case of rioting which subsequently takes place in respect of the possession of the land No importance should be attached to a temporary injunction under this section which is intended only for emergencies Having regard to the peculiar jurisdiction conferred by this section no inference can be drawn from it as to the possession of either party—Gita Prasad v A. F. 5 F 1 T (5) 13 Cr I J 919 A I R 1925 Pat 17

374 Order contrary to Civil Court decree.—The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order the effect of which would be to interfere with the orders of a Civil Court—17 All 485 32 Cal 154 It is the duty of the Criminal Courts to respect the opinions of the Civil Courts and no order contrary to that of the Civil Court should be passed by a Magistrate under this section when the Civil Court has passed an order of temporary injunction against one party—Murari v Ajjasam (1922) M W N 112 23 Cr I J 159 Where the landlords of a certain share in an estate had obtained a decree in a Civil Court for arrears of rent and for ejectment of their tenants and also obtained possession under the decree, but the Magistrate at the instance of the tenants passed an order prohibiting the landlords from interfering with the possession of the tenants as the landlords were unable to point out the particular lands of which they had obtained possession under the decree held that the order was illegal being contrary to the Civil Court decree as its effect would be to deprive the landlords of the lands to which they were entitled under the decree, held further that it was on the tenants to shew what lands they held from the landlords—Gobinda Sahai v Sims 6 C W N 466 Where a person purchasing some property at a sale in execution of a mortgage debt put in possession of the same a Magistrate is not competent un section to order the purchaser or any of his subordinates to refrain from entering upon the lands and the properties—2 C W. N 572

375 Question of title —A Magistrate acting under this section has no business to adjudicate upon rights and has no jurisdiction to decide upon any question of title or possession the only question before him is whether a breach of the peace is imminent and to make an order with the object of preventing a breach of the peace—Appala Narasimhulu v Mahant 11 M L J 122 Therefore a Magistrate's order directing the petitioner to take certain idols into the house of a certain person on the ground that the latter is entitled to them according to long usage, is illegal—8 C W N 376

376 Notice to file statements —This section does not authorise a Magistrate to issue notice upon the parties for filing written statements before the Court on a fixed date The issue of such a notice is not within the contemplation of the section and is a clear innovation beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate Such a notice being in effect a notice contemplated by section 145 (1) (although professedly issued under sec 144) the High Court under its powers of superintendence and control will prohibit the innovation and will order the Magistrate to convert the proceedings under sec 144 into proceedings under Chapter XII and to complete the proceedings by following the procedure prescribed by Chapter XII—Kanis Amina v K E 3 P I J 243 19 Cr I J 869

377 Secs 144, 145—Dispute relating to immoveable property —Section 144 is a larger and more general section than sec 145 An order under sec 144 can be made under various circumstances including a danger of a breach of the peace arising from disputes as regards possession, sec 145 is of limited scope and applies only where there is a danger of a breach of the peace due to such dispute The former section is discretionary, the latter is mandatory Therefore where the special condition of section 145 is fulfilled section 144 yields to sec 145 so that when the Magistrate finds that there is a real dispute tending to a breach of the peace, he is bound to institute a proceeding under section 145 irrespective of any order that he might have originally made under section 144—Sheobalak v. Kamaruddin, 2 Pat 94 107 (F B) 3 P L T 573 23 Cr L J 549

Where there is a dispute regarding possession of immoveable properties between the rival parties and a breach of the peace is likely to ensue the proper procedure to be adopted by the Magistrate is to pass an order in a proceeding under sec 145 deciding the question of possession on evidence and not an order in a proceeding under this section—Parhar v. Ram Khalaun 11 C W N 271, Kanis Amina v. K. E. 3 P L J 243, Lachman v Dhuru 19 Cr L J 1002 (Pat). Tarapada v Emp. 1 P I T 72 21 Cr L J 241 By adopting a procedure under sec 145 in such a case, the Magistrate puts himself in a position to effectively and conclusively settle the dispute between the parties. Otherwise the dispute might still exist at the end of two months—27 Cal 785, Tarapada v Emp., 1 P. L. T. 72, Bhairav v Emp., 1 P. L. T. 377, Jhama v Thakur, 1 P. L. T. 369, 21 Cr. L. J. 625. Sec. 144 applies only where possession is either undisputed or clear beyond any shadow of doubt, but where possession relating to immovable property is disputed, the proper procedure is to take proceedings under sec. 145 which will permanently settle the dispute so far as the Criminal Courts are concerned—Bhairav v. Emp., 1 P. L. T. 377, 21 Cr. L. J. 646, Gouri Dutt v Gobind, 1 P. L. T. 44, Tarapada v Emp., 1 P. L. T. 72, Madan v. Gul Chand, 2 P. L. T. 464, 22 Cr. L. J. 635. In cases of apprehension of a breach of the peace the Magistrate may act under sec. 144, or 107. See Note 234 under sec. 107.

Section 144 is of general application, and contains nothing which ousts the Magistrate's jurisdiction in case of bonafide disputes as to possession of land. Therefore where section 107 or 145 will meet with the requirements of the case, section 144 is not an appropriate remedy, and if it is found that the danger was not so imminent and that it could be otherwise averted, an order under sec. 144 will be generally held to have been made without jurisdiction—Sheobalak v. Kamaruddin, 2 Pat 94 (F. B.): 3 P. L. T. 573, 23 Cr. L. J. 549, Munni Lal v. Gatti, 6 P. L. T. 746: 26 Cr. L. J. 1229.

The use of sec. 144 is a suitable method of avoiding a breach of the peace, only if it is clear that the claim of the party creating the disturbance is not a claim made in good faith—Kaniz Amina v. K. L., 3 P. L. J. 143, 19 Cr. L. J. 869. Where it is clear upon the materials before the Magistrate that one of the parties is in possession, and that another person whose claim to possession is a mere pretence is threatening to interfere with that possession, the Magistrate is bound to maintain the party in possession, and forbid the party who is not in possession by a summary order under sec. 144 of the Code, if immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable. Sometimes it may even be necessary to take action against the party who is actually in possession, but in every case it must be shown that the conditions required by sec. 144 exist. What the Court deprecates is the habitual and unjustifiable use of sec. 144 as a substitute for sections 107 and 145—per Mullick J. in Sheobalak v. Kamaruddin, 2 Pat 94, 101 (F. B.): 23 Cr. L. J. 549. If on the expiry of the injunction under section 144, there is any further apprehension of a breach of the peace, the appropriate procedure would be to take proceedings under sec. 145 (but not under sec. 107)—Abinash v. Lokenath, 19 Cr. L. J. 367 (Cal.).

The subsistence of an order under section 144 does not take away the power of the Court to take proceedings under section 145. Therefore where in a dispute between the trustees of a temple as to the possession and management of the temple and its properties an order under section 144 was passed and during the subsistence of that order proceedings under section 145 were initiated and pending final orders the properties were attached and a receiver was appointed held that the procedure was not illegal—Gopala v Krishnaswamy 27 M L T 234 21 Cr L J 73. So also when proceedings are initiated under section 144 with respect to land the possession with regard to which is honestly disputed the Magistrate would be acting properly in converting the proceedings into those under sec 145 and making an order under the latter section—Nandkishore v Bikan Sing 3 P L T 570 23 Cr L J 200 Sheobalak v Kamaruddin 2 Pat 94 F B (per Jawala Prasad J).

But where a Magistrate while passing an order under sec 144 in case of dispute relating to immoveable property makes an incidental observation as to possession of the property the observation cannot have the force of an order under sec 145—Munni v Gathi 6 P L T 746 26 Cr L J 1229.

378 Clause (2)—Ex parte order.—An ex parte order can be made only in cases of emergency—27 Cal 785 3 B L R A C 4 2 C W N 747. Ordinarily in proceedings under this section notice should be issued upon the person against whom the order is made and an opportunity afforded to him to show cause why it should not be passed—10 W R 53, 19 Mad 18 2 C W N 747.

In the case of ex parte orders the record of the Magistrate should disclose the existence of emergency which called for such ex parte orders and should show that there was no sufficient time to serve notice on the party affected thereby—Venkataraniama v A E 22 M L T 323 19 Cr L J 56. The record of the Magistrate should indicate with reasonableness the materials on which he concluded that there was an emergency to justify the passing of ex parte orders affecting the liberty of persons—Ibid.

379 Clause (3) Order to whom to be addressed.—In an Allahabad case in which the Magistrate issued a proclamation forbidding any persons to spread night soil on his fields so as to cause disease it was held that the order was ultra vires and not within the scope of this section because the order issued by the Magistrate was not directed to the public generally frequenting or visiting a particular place but was directed to a portion of the community—Q E v Jokhu 8 All 99. This view of the law does not appear to be correct. In an Oudh case it has been held and more correctly held that the words public generally are not restricted to the corporate body pursuing its public avocations but also mean the whole number of individuals who in the circumstances cannot be particularly addressed and an order duly promulgated will have the effect to control either the private or public actions of every such individual according to its tenor. The proper interpretation of this section is that the order may be directed to a particular individual but when owing to the number of particular individuals it is impracticable for the Magistrate to address each of them individually an order under this section may be issued to the whole number of particular individuals designated as the public generally and such order in respect of each particular individual will have the same effect as a separate order served upon him provided of course that it has been so promulgated that it has come to his knowledge—Abdool Gaffur v Emp 18 O C 70 This is the plain meaning of this clause.

Frequenting or visiting a particular place—These words have been interpreted in Q E v Lallumidas 14 Bom 165 to mean that the order can be directed to the public generally only when frequenting or visiting a particular place. Therefore, where owing to the prevalence of cholera the District Magistrate issued a notification in the form of a proclamation forbidding the public in general to give caste dinners in that city it was held that the order not being directed to a particular person nor to the public when frequenting a particular place (but to residents) was illegal in its manner of publication. In another Bombay case also it has been similarly held that an order directing all persons in Surat City to abstain from interfering with the destruction of dogs is ultra vires as the Magistrate has power only to direct an order to a particular person or to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place—Limp v Bhagubai 16 Bom J R 684. The Calcutta High Court likewise holds that an order which directs the public in general to abstain from attending has is illegal since it is not until the public attends the lat that the order can be binding on them. If the order can only be issued to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place—Asutosh v Harish 23 C W N 411 26 Cr L J 874. But in Abdul Gaffur v Emp 18 O C 70 it has been held that the words frequenting place are intended to extend rather than to limit the scope of the order so as to include therein the residents of the locality as well as casual or frequent visitors from outside the limits of the locality.

380. Clause (4)—Rescinding or altering an order.—A Magistrate who passed an order under this section without taking evidence can afterwards cancel the order, if after hearing the evidence he finds that there is no reason to apprehend a breach of the peace—13 W R 72.

Applications for rescinding or modifying ex parte orders under this section should be disposed of as quickly as possible, but it is not illegal to put off an inquiry for a reasonable time within two months—Satish v Emp. 11 G.W.N. 79 4 Cr L J 433

An order passed under this section by a Joint Magistrate, while acting as a District Magistrate, can be rescinded or altered, after his reversion to the post of Joint Magistrate by the next District Magistrate, and the latter cannot transfer an application for rescission or alteration to the former—Sudarsanam v Srinivasachari, 16 Cr L J 74 (Mad)

It was once held by the Patna High Court that a District Magistrate could rescind or alter an order of a subordinate Magistrate only on the ground that having regard to circumstances which had happened since the passing of the order, the reason for its having been passed did no longer exist so that an alteration or rescission of the order was necessary as a corollary, he could not reverse the order of a subordinate Magistrate on grounds existing at the date of the order, i.e., he could not, sitting as it were in appeal or revision reverse the order on grounds which interfered with the discretionary power of the Magistrate who originally made the order—Cheddi Lal v Mahabir 2 P L T 650 23 Cr L J 27 But this decision has been overruled by a recent Full Bench case where it has been laid down that the powers given by this sub section need not be confined to cases where there has been a change of circumstances since the original order was made If the Magistrate has power to rescind an order previously made by a subordinate Magistrate because the circumstances no longer require it to remain in force, he would equally have power to rescind it if he is satisfied that it never ought to have been made—Sheobalak v Hamaruddin 2 Pat 94 (F B) 3 P L T 573

A District Magistrate in cancelling an order of the subordinate Magistrate is not competent to substitute an order of his own in the nature of an innovation Thus where in a case of dispute as regards immoveable property, the subordinate Magistrate started a proceeding under this section, and considering the claims of the second party to be a mere pretence passed an order against such second party, but the District Magistrate under clause (4) cancelled the Sub Magistrate's order and substituted an order of his own, prohibiting the first party from cutting crop, it was held that the order of the District Magistrate was in the nature of an innovation and therefore without jurisdiction and must be set aside—Ganpat v K. E 3 P L J 287 19 Cr L J 880

Although a District Magistrate may rescind or alter an order made by a subordinate Magistrate, still the District Magistrate cannot direct the subordinate Magistrate to initiate proceedings under section 145 instead of under sec 144, because it is the subordinate Magistrate who has to satisfy himself by the exercise of his own independent judgment and upon proper materials as to the existence of a reasonable apprehension of danger, and the District Magistrate acts illegally in interfering with that discretion by directing him to substitute proceedings under sec 145 in place of proceedings under sec 144—24 Cal 391 Tilaki Bai v Emp, 2 P L T 372, Chaddi Lal v Makar 2 P L T 650 23 Cr L J 27

Intermediate order—Except orders contemplated by sub section (4) (i.e., orders of rescission or alteration) no other intermediate order can be made while an order under sec 144 is still in force. When the High Court has issued a rule in any case it takes full seisin of the case and it is the High Court alone that can pass ad interim orders in the case. The Magistrate against whose order the rule is issued has no such jurisdiction—Satish Chandra v Emp 11 C W N 79

Final of order—When a Magistrate set aside his order and struck the case off the file he had no power to re-arrest without a fresh proceeding—Bradley v James 8 Cal 560

Clause (5) — It was suggested to us that section 144 should be elaborated so as to enable a person aggrieved by an order made under the section to require the Magistrate to make a judicial inquiry regarding the truth of the information on which he had acted and thereby to bring in the revisional powers of the High Court. We think this proposal goes too far and that it is necessary to maintain the executive character of proceedings under section 144. We have not therefore accepted this suggestion. We are however prepared—and we have proposed an amendment to this effect—to lay down that a person aggrieved shall be entitled to apply to the Magistrate and show cause against the order and that the Magistrate shall give him an opportunity to be heard in person or by pleader and shall record an order in writing on the application giving his reasons where he rejects it — Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

381 Clause (6)—Duration of order —An order under this section is temporary and is to remain in force for only two months. An order for perpetual injunction passed under this section is beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate—Q E v Sheodin 10 All 115 Bradley v Jameson 8 Cal 580 5 Cal 7 In re Vengayam Ammal 1914 M W N 169 15 Cr L J 145. Thus an order prohibiting a landlord from ever holding hats on his land on certain days is illegal—Gopi Mohan v Taramoni 5 Cal 7. So also, an order that a certain person should abstain from taking any part in the management till another is duly evicted from management is ultra vires—24 Mad 45. so also an order that no rents should be collected from the tenants by their contending landlords until their rights have been established by a Civil Court—Prasanna v Emp 8 C L R 231, or an order directing a party not to interfere with the land without the order of a competent Court—Runjit v Lachman 7 C W N 140

A temporary injunction can be passed under this section even though the dispute demands a permanent injunction for final settlement. Thus, where disputes were going on between the applicant and the opposite party, and the latter used to strike a bell continuously at night time in order to annoy the applicant, who thereupon applied to the Magistrate for an injunction held that the Magistrate could pass a temporary order under this section—In re C J R 22 Bom L R 157 (per Hayward J) but Shah J held that the Magistrate could pass no order under this section because the applicant's application was for the prevention of a nuisance which was not temporary but permanent.

Non specification of time—An order under this section is not bad merely because it does not state that its operation is confined to two months or some shorter period. Under this subsection it will be presumed in the absence of anything to the contrary that the duration of the order is limited to the full period of two months—34 Cal 897 Ponnappa v Vanamamalai (1919) 11 W N 872 20 Cr L J 755. In another case the Madras High Court has held that an order which is indefinite as to time is to that extent without jurisdiction—Muthukumaraswami v Md Rowther 42 M L J 352 23 Cr L J 404.

Extension of time by successive orders—A Magistrate cannot by passing successive orders extend the operation of this section beyond the time limit prescribed by this section—11 C W N 79 Biswaswar v Emp, 17 Cr L J 200 20 C W N 758 Gouri Datt v Govind 20 Cr L J 829 1 P L T 44 Murari v Ayyasami (1922) 11 W N 64 23 Cr L J 689. If there is really a very serious danger of a breach of the peace he can take action under section 107—3 P L J 130 13 C W N cclviii. But he cannot, under the shelter of this section assume a jurisdiction to prohibit persons by a permanent injunction by arbitrary and successive renewals of orders under this section—Govinda v Perumal 38 Mad 489 Govinda Chetty v Emp, 7 M L J 68 7 C W N 140. The period cannot be extended by drawing up the same order once more and merely adding a larger number of persons to whom it is directed. Such a proceeding is an attempt to evade the provisions of this clause and is illegal—Ashutosh v Haris Chandra 29 C W N 411 26 Cr L J 874.

Extension of time by Local Government—The last three lines of this section lay down that the Local Government may extend the order in cases of danger to human life etc and it can extend the order for any length of time. The fact that the heading of this Chapter refers to temporary orders does not support the contention that the Local Government has only power to extend the order for a definite and very limited time. The Legislature has not seen fit to limit the time for which the force of the order may be extended by the Local Government and under the terms of this section it is competent to the Local Government to extend the order so long as the danger which is apprehended continues to exist.

Moreover in extending the order it is not necessary for the Local Government to state its reasons or even to state the fact of a likelihood of a riot or affray or other danger which it apprehends—Emp v Bhure Mal, 43 All 52 (3-7) 24 Cr L J 629

352 Revision.—Subsection (3) of section 435 which disallowed the powers of revision of the High Court the Sessions Judge etc. in respect of proceedings under Sec. 144 has now been omitted by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 and the effect of the omission is to overrule all the cases in which it was held that the High Court had no power under secs. 435 and 439 of this Code to interfere in revision with orders under this section. Under the old law, the High Court could revise an order passed under this section, not by virtue of sec. 439 of the Code but by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by sec. 13 of the Charter Act (35 Mad 489 8 Cal 580, 16 Cal 80) and this power could be exercised only by the Chartered High Courts and not by the non-chartered ones e.g. the Chief Courts or the Judicial Commissioners' Courts. Under the old law, the High Court could revise under sec. 439 of this Code an order passed under sec. 144, only when the order was ultra vires or without jurisdiction that is when the order was such that it could not be made under this section (even though it purported to be made under this section) and therefore did not fall within the purview of this section—Ananda v Carr Stephen 19 Cal 127 Roop Lal v David Monook 2 C W N 57. Isab v Emp 8 C W N 373 Q E v Parash Chunder 25 Cal 852 Empress v Prayag 9 Cal 103 Palaniappa v Dorasamy, 18 Mad 402, Gopi Mohan v Iaramoni 5 Cal 7. Under the present law, not only the High Court (both chartered and non-chartered) but also the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate can call for the record of a proceeding under this section and the order may be revised by the High Court on any ground whatsoever.

But the High Court does not ordinarily interfere in revision with an order under this section when other remedies are open to the aggrieved party especially because the High Court is loth to reject the opinion of the Magistrate responsible for the peace of his locality that there is an emergency which justified an ex parte order—Lenkataramani v K. E 22 M L T 323 19 Cr L J 56. The Magistrate is the sole Judge as to whether the material is sufficient or not to justify an order under this section—19 Cr L J 113 (Pat.)

The High Court can set aside an order under this section even though two months had expired from the date thereof—Gandranath v L. I. Ry., 23 C W N 145 Bisheswar v Emp 20 C W N 758, Chandrahanta v K. L., 20 C W, N 981, Dhanraj v Bharat, 6 P. L T 253 26 Cr L J 42 M L J 352. In Gowda v Perumal, 38 Mad 489 (490) and F

Poomalai, 47 M L J 439 25 Cr L J 1304, however, the High Court declined to set aside the order as the two months during which the order would remain in force was almost expiring on the date of hearing

383 Reference —An order under this section not being a judicial proceeding a District Magistrate cannot refer it to the High Court but can himself deal with it in his executive capacity—Ratanlal 129 Or the party aggrieved by the order may apply to the District Magistrate to recall the order and failing him to the Local Government—Mad H C Pro 5 12 1879

384 Punishment —See sec 188 I P C

The Magistrate issuing the order under this section cannot himself punish a man for disobeying his order—Chandra Kanta v K E 20 C W N 981 17 Cr L J 461, 10 B H C R 424 Reg v Tatyia Ratanlal 50, 4 C W N 226

385 Civil suit —An order under this section is not a bar to the institution of a civil suit by the party on whom the order is made Therefore where the plaintiffs and the defendants are owners of adjoining properties and the defendants obtained an order of the Magistrate under sec 144 preventing the plaintiffs from erecting certain buildings on their own property without adjudication of the private rights of the parties it is open to the plaintiffs to sue the defendants for a declaration that they are entitled to make use of their property and erect buildings on it as they desire and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with them in so doing and the order under section 144 far from being a bar to such suit would itself furnish the cause of action for the suit—Baba Sah v Mahomed Hussain 42 M L J 179 15 L W 68 1921 M W N 867

386 Proceedings judicial —Inquiries under this section before an order is issued are judicial proceedings within the meaning of sec 4 (m), and the Magistrate can take action under sec 476 if he thinks that false evidence has been given before him in such proceedings—19 Mad 18 (Section 476 as amended in 1923 is no longer limited to judicial proceedings, but applies to any proceeding)

CHAPTER XII

DISPUTES AS TO IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY

In proceedings under this Chapter the Magistrate should distinctly indicate under what section of the Code he takes proceedings. It should not be left to the higher Courts to speculate to see under what section the order was passed—Srinivasa v Ranganathan 18 Cr L J 295 (Mad)

145 (1) Whenever a District Magistrate Sub divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class is satisfied from a police report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof within the local limits of his jurisdiction he shall make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied and requiring the parties concerned in such dispute to attend his Court in person or by pleader within a time to be fixed by such Magistrate and to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute

(2) For the purposes of this section the expression land or water includes building markets fisheries crops or other produce of land and the rents or profits of any such property

(3) A copy of the order shall be served in manner provided by this Code for the service of a summons upon such person or persons as the Magistrate may direct and at least one copy shall be published by being affixed to some conspicuous place at or near the subject of dispute

(4) The Magistrate shall then without reference to the statements of the claims of any of such parties to a right to possess the subject of dispute peruse the statements so put in hear the parties, receive all such evidence as may be produced by them respectively consider the effect of such evidence take such further evidence (if any) as he thinks necessary and if possible

Procedure where a dispute concerning land, etc., is likely to cause breach of peace

Inquiry as to possession

decide whether any and which of the parties was at the date of the order before mentioned in such possession of the said subject

Provided that if it appears to the Magistrate that any party has within two months next before the date of such order been forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed he may treat the party so dispossessed as if he had been in possession at such date

Provided also that if the Magistrate considers the case one of emergency he may at any time attach the subject of dispute pending his decision under this section

(5) Nothing in this section shall preclude any party so required to attend or any other person interested from showing that no such dispute as aforesaid exists or has existed and in such case, the Magistrate shall cancel his said order and all further proceedings thereon shall be stayed but subject to such cancellation the order of the Magistrate under sub-section (1) shall be final

(6) If the Magistrate decides that one of the parties was or should under the first proviso to sub
Party in possession to retain possession until legally evicted section (4) be treated as being in such pos session of the said subject he shall issue an order declaring such party to be entitled to possession thereof until evicted therefrom in due course of law and forbidding all disturbance of possession until such eviction and when he proceeds under the first proviso to sub section (4) may restore to possession the party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed

(7) When any party to any such proceeding dies the Magistrate may cause the legal representative of the deceased party to be made a party to the proceeding and shall thereupon continue the inquiry and if any question arises as to who the legal representative of a deceased party for the purpose of such proceeding is all persons claiming to be representatives of the deceased party shall be made parties thereto

(8) If the Magistrate is of opinion that any crop or other produce of the property the subject of dispute in a proceeding under this section pending before him is subject to speedy and natural decay he may make an order for the proper custody or sale of such property and upon the completion of the inquiry shall make such order for the disposal of such property or the sale proceeds thereof, as he thinks fit

(9) The Magistrate may if he thinks fit at any stage of the proceedings under this section on the application of either party issue summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce any document or thing

(10) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to be in derogation of the powers of the Magistrate to proceed under Section 107

Change —The amendments as shown by the italicised words have been effected by sec 17 of the Crim Pro Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). The reasons have been stated below in their proper places

387 Object and scope of section —Sec 145 was intended only to provide a speedy remedy for the prevention of breaches of peace arising out of disputes relating to immoveable property by maintaining one or other of the parties in possession—Debi Prasad v Sleodai 30 All 41 Tarapada v Nurul Haq 32 Cal 1093 30 Cal 155 Manindra v Barada Kanta 30 Cal 112 Ramchandra v Monohar 21 Cal 19 The object of this section is to enable a Magistrate to intervene and pass a temporary order in regard to the possession of property in dispute having effect until the actual right of one of the parties has been determined by a competent Civil Court—Daulat v Rameswar 26 Cal 625 Kunja Dehari v Khetra 29 Cal 208

Litigants often resort to section 145 as an easy way of getting possession without the expense delay and trouble of a civil suit regarding the land in dispute and Courts should be on guard against an abuse of legal powers—Ma Ma Gyi v K E 2 Bur L J 295 25 Cr L J 1161 The object of this section is only to prevent a breach of the peace and not to protect or maintain anybody in possession Courts should take action under this section only if there is a report or information of a breach of the peace and the same cannot be obviated without an order under this section—Phulanja v Emp 25 Cr L J 1109 (Nag) The scope of this section is merely a determination of actual possession for the purpose of preventing a breach of the peace pending a decision on the merits in a Civil Court This section does not provide for a decision by the Magistrate of any question affecting the rights of parties See Note 410 post

proceed under Sec 107 or 144 or 145 in case of disputes relating to immoveable property between the rival parties likely to cause a breach of the peace see Notes 234 and 377 under Secs 107 and 144 where the subject has been fully discussed

Where a Magistrate initiated proceedings under Sec 144 and at a later stage intimated to the parties who were present in Court his intention to draw up proceedings under sec 145 held that the Magistrate was not guilty of any irregularity—Chadhari v Raja Ramsingh 19 Cr L J 396 (Pat)

389 Nature of proceedings under this section —A proceeding under this section is taken for the prevention of crime it does not arise out of or deal with a crime already committed Therefore a proceeding under this section is not a criminal case within the meaning of Sec 526 —25 Bom 179 Farid v Piru 8 S L R 215 16 Cr L J 249 An action taken under this section is a quasi executive action—25 Bom 179 A proceeding under this section is in reality a civil one—33 Cal 68 Contra —In re Arumuga 26 Mad 188 Jaggu v Murlu 34 All 533 Misra v Narasingh 2 P L T 186 and 11 O C 61 where it is held that a case under this section is a criminal case and the High Court has power to transfer it under Sec 526 of this Code or under clause 29 Letters Patent It should be noted however that the word criminal in sec 526 has now been omitted so that the question as to whether a proceeding under this section is a criminal or civil one is immaterial for the purpose of sec 526 the High Court is competent to transfer the proceeding under the provision of that section

Though the Court dealing with a case under this section is a criminal Court yet an order under this section is not one made in a criminal trial within the meaning of Sec 15 of the Letters Patent and therefore an appeal lies from an order of a single Judge of a Chartered High Court—17 M L J 158 But see 39 Mad 537 (cited in Note 323) in respect of a proceeding under sec 133

Competency of Magistrates —Bench of Magistrates —A Bench of Magistrates exercising first class powers may be invested by virtue of Sec 15 (2) with powers to take proceedings under this section The decision in 3 Cal 754 under the old Code of 1872 is no longer good law

390 Is satisfied —Before taking proceedings under this section the Magistrate must satisfy himself that there is an existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, and he ought not to assume jurisdiction in those cases where the suggested apprehension of a breach of the peace is merely colorable and made to induce him to deal with matters properly cognisable by the Civil Courts—Obhoy Chandra v Md Sabir, 10 Ca 78 (80) Unless the Magistrate is satisfied that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace he cannot proceed under this section—H I Low & Co v Mansindra Chandra Vandy 3 Pat 809 (814) It is necessary that the Magistrate should himself inquire into the likelihood of a breach of the peace and should come to a judicial decision upon it It is that judicial decision which is the foundation of the subsequent investigation and without it the investigation is void and inoperative—Anundee Koer v Soonat Koer 9 W R 64 An order of the Magistrate merely on the complainant's petition without determining whether any breach of the peace was likely to occur or enquiring whether the accused had any evidence is bad in law since the Magistrate has failed to find the facts that were necessary to constitute the foundation of his jurisdiction—Buddhu v Emp. 1885 P R 6 The ground stated by the Magistrate must be such as to satisfy a Court of Revision before which such case may be brought by any of the parties concerned—20 Cal 513

The fact that the Magistrate is satisfied as to the necessity of proceedings under this section and the ground of his being so satisfied must appear on the record—15 All 394 and in the first order directing the issue of notice—Pai Abas v Jagannath 6 C P L R 21 In re Pandurang 24 Bom 527 2 Bom L R 84 28 Cal 416 Posukha v Tandalagara 4 M L T 213 8 Cr L J 399

Power of High Court or Sessions Judge to direct proceedings—The Magistrate must satisfy himself and use his own discretion as to the necessity of proceedings Therefore neither the High Court nor the Sessions Judge has power to order a Magistrate to take proceedings under this chapter—23 W R 58 20 Cal 112 Q E v Gobind Chandra 20 Cal 520 9 W R 64 If the Magistrate is satisfied that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace the High Court cannot direct him to be satisfied as to such likelihood and to take proceedings under this section—H I Low & Co v Mansindra Chandra 3 Pat 809 (814) So also the High Court has no power to direct the revival of proceedings after they have been stayed by the Magistrate—30 Cal 112

Where a subdivisional Magistrate having regard to the circumstances of the case came to the conclusion that proceedings under sec 144 should be taken, and made an order accordingly the District Magistrate had no authority to direct the Sub divisional Magistrate to institute proceedings under section 145—Kailash v Kunja Behari 24 Cal 391

391. Police-report—A Police report upon which a Magistrate bases his initial order under this section should contain a statement of the facts from which the Magistrate may be satisfied as to the existence of a likelihood of a breach of the peace No rule can be laid down so as to specify the sufficiency of the materials upon which the Magistrate may act but there is no inflexible rule that the police report must

that the disputing parties are actually assembling men or doing some other specific overt acts—Kuloda Kinkar v Danesh 33 Cal 33 A police report which sets out sufficiently substantial reasons for believing that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace relating to a certain land exists is a good foundation of proceedings under this section—20 Cal 513 But a police report which does not state that there was any apprehension of a breach of the peace is not sufficient to give the Magistrate jurisdiction under this section—6 C W N 340 But this is not an inflexible rule and the fact that the police report stated that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace would not by itself take away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed under this section if upon a consideration of the materials before him and by exercising his own independent judgment he came to the conclusion that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace—Ganga Bishun v Rajo 5 P L T 252 26 Cr L J 133

A mere expression of opinion by a police officer without sufficient materials that a breach of the peace is likely to happen, ought not to be the foundation of an action under this section Thus where the police report showed that the parties disputing over a tank were big Zemindars and that although there was nothing to show that a breach of the peace was likely to happen yet such a breach was not impossible it was held that the Magistrate ought not to proceed upon such report which was merely an expression of opinion by the Police—Malaraj Baladur v Rajjit Singh 11 C W N 835 Surjarkanta v Jagodindra 11 C W N 198 Kuloda Kinkar v Danesh 33 Cal 33

The report must contain a definite statement by a responsible police officer to the effect that he apprehends that there will be a disturbance of the peace which is beyond his power to prevent and that he therefore desires the exercise of the higher powers of the Magistrate to prevent it When no such report is sent to the Magistrate the fact will be almost conclusive as an indication of the absence of any likelihood of a breach of the peace—Phulanja v Emp 25 Cr L J 1109 (Nag).

A Magistrate is in no way bound to act on all that is stated in the Police report before him—27 Cal 892 He is to exercise his own independent judgment upon the materials placed before him and to arrive at a conclusion as to whether upon those materials there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace He would not be justified in acting merely upon an expression of opinion by the police—Ganga Bishun v Rajo 5 P L T 252 26 Cr L J 133; Kuloda Kinkar v Danesh 33 Cal 33

Evidentiary value—A Police report is not itself evidence although it may be sufficient to justify a Magistrate in taking action under this section—In re Bhadreswaris 16 W R 17 7 B L R 329 The police report and the evidence contained therein about the factum of possession is in admissible in evidence in a proceeding under this section except for the purpose of initiating the proceeding—1 P L T 501

392 Other information —The Code does not limit the materials on which the Magistrate may act. He may act on any information and without any formal complaint being made before him. He is not confined to evidence recorded on oath—In re Kishoree Mohun 10 W R 10

The word 'information' does not refer to any particular way in which a Magistrate's attention should be drawn. It is wide enough to cover the knowledge of the Magistrate derived by reading the petition filed by the parties in another proceeding which satisfies him that a breach of the peace was imminent—Jhaman v. Thakurs 1 P L T 369 21 Cr L J 65

But a telegram is not a sufficient information—72 Bom 956 so also a statement made by a witness in the course of a trial that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists—70 Cal 570 or a mere petition by an officer in the employ of a party interested in the dispute that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists is not a sufficient basis of proceedings under this section—29 Mad 561. Where there is no police report the statement of interested parties as regards the existence of a breach of the peace must be received with great caution but if a Magistrate has reason to believe such statement, it cannot be said that he acts without jurisdiction in taking proceedings on the basis of that statement—Joymangal v. Kanta Gope 24 Cr L J 304

393 Dispute —The essence and basis of the jurisdiction which a Magistrate can exercise under this section depends upon there being a dispute likely to create a breach of the peace and when the parties appear before the Magistrate if they are able to show or if it otherwise appears to the Magistrate that there is no dispute or no such dispute as is likely to induce a breach of the peace the Magistrate should hold his hands and not proceed further—Gobind v. Abdul Sayaf 6 Cal 835. Thus when the rights of the parties have been determined by a competent court the dis-creed of the competent Civil Court—6 Cal 835 Daulat v. Rameswari 26 Cal 625; Sims v. Johurry 5 C W N 563 79 Cal 203. The proper course for a Magistrate to pursue if the defeated party does any act that may probably occasion a breach of the peace is to take action under sec 107 of the Code—6 Cal 835 Amruteshwari v. Darpa Varain 7 C W N 558 Subba Nayah v. Trincall 7 Mad 460. As to the effect of a prior decree of a Civil Court see Note 438 infra

or supposed right—Gobind v Abdul Sayad 6 Cal 835 In every case in which a Magistrate finds that there is a bona fide dispute about land no matter how erroneous the contention of one or other of the parties may be he ought to adopt the procedure laid down in sec 145 But if the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the defendants are wrongfully and without any bona fide claim seeking to eject the other party by force and a breach of the peace is imminent he is not bound to act under this section but is justified in making an order under sec 107—Emp v Ram Baran 28 All 406

394 Likelihood of breach of peace —The basis of the Magistrate's jurisdiction under this section is the likelihood of a breach of the peace Therefore where in his order directing the issue of a proceeding under this section the Magistrate was of opinion that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace but that as the dispute was one relating to possession section 145 was applicable held that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction—Sib Narayan v Satish 24 C W N 621 21 Cr L J 593 Where the police report did not disclose that there was any apprehension of a breach of the peace the Magistrate's order under this section was without jurisdiction—Ram Sarup v Darsano 1 P L T 387 21 Cr L J 748

The term likely in this section does not mean that the breach of the peace complained of must be imminent or likely to happen immediately but simply signifies that there is a probability or a likelihood of a breach of the peace—Balmukand v Crown 1 S L R 50 8 Cr L J 170 The Magistrate must decide in each case whether there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace and it is not enough on the one hand that the breach is merely probable nor is it necessary that it should be imminent as indicating a higher degree of chance of the event happening than is denoted by the 'likelihood of it'—Kulada Kankar v Danesh 33 Cal 33 But a mere probability that a breach of the peace may occur if no proceedings are taken will not justify the Magistrate in taking action under this section the Magistrate must be satisfied of the existence of a dispute likely to induce a breach of the peace rendering it necessary for him to take immediate steps for its prevention—7 Cal 385 An order under this section will be justified if there is an immediate danger of a breach of the peace—Janu v Moniruddin 8 C W N 590 If there be no present danger of a breach of the peace the fact that a breach may happen at a future time will not justify an order under this section—Uma Churn v Beni Madhub 7 C L R 352 A mere finding that the parties are in a contesting mood without any finding as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace, is insufficient—Mannu Lal v Harde Ram 12 O L J 256 26 Cr L J 944 When there is ample time to have the dispute settled in the Civil Court, action under this section is not justified—Choley Lal v Emp, 25 Cr L J 227 A I R. 1924 Oudh 341

Where a party was acting properly and within his rights there is no reason to suppose that any breach of the peace was likely to be committed by him—Bejoy Singha v Emp 3 C W N 463

There must be a likelihood of a breach of the peace on the date on which the Magistrate draws up proceedings. He cannot take proceedings on the strength of a Police report which is more than three months old, when he has no information that a breach of the peace is likely to occur at the time of his taking action—Ckhedi Lal v Mahabir 2 P L T 650 23 Cr L J 27

Where at the date of the initial order the materials before the Magistrate do not disclose the existence of such dispute as is likely to result in a breach of the peace the order made by him would not be void if it appears from the evidence in the course of the trial that there was at the date of the institution of the proceedings a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace—33 Cal 33 dissenting from 23 Cal 557

The mere fact that a person complains of being dispossessed of his land is no reason for the institution of proceedings under this section if the petition made by the complainant refers only to the commission of various offences none of which necessarily involves a breach of the peace—Kasu v Moti Molla 4 C W N 57

The primary object of this section is the preservation of peace. Therefore if it is found during the proceedings that there is no likelihood of the peace being disturbed there is no necessity for the Magistrate to continue the proceedings—Ramchandra v Monohur 21 Cal 29. The Magistrate has jurisdiction to decline to proceed with the inquiry whenever it is shown to his satisfaction that the dispute no longer exists or that the danger has disappeared—4 L W 57. See notes under sub-section (5)

Inquiry and Record—A Magistrate who purports to act under this section must himself enquire into the question whether a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists and must record a judicial decision thereon. Where a preliminary order was made on the report of a Zaildar and the parties had had no opportunity of producing their evidence before the Zaildar, held that in the absence of judicial evidence showing the likelihood of a breach of the peace the report of the Zaildar could not be invoked in support of an order under this section—Prem Singh v Crown, 1917 P L R 115 18 Cr L J 565 1917 P W R 25, 2 Weir 117. The Magistrate must also record the ground of his belief as to the existence of such likelihood—4 Cal 650

The law does not require the Magistrate to record an express finding in his judgment (final order) that a breach of the peace was imminent

Such a finding in respect of the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace is a matter to be considered in relation to the preliminary order—Maqimunnissa v. Ahmedunnissa, 2 O. W. N. 704 : 26 Cr. L. J. 1581.

395. Subject matter of dispute.—Land or water.—The words in the 1882 Code were "tangible immoveable property." The section of the present Code does not limit the action of a Magistrate to disputes relating to the possession of tangible immoveable property, but it empowers him to take cognisance of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning any land or water or boundaries thereof, and sub-section (2) gives an explanation of the words "land or water"—26 Cal 188. See notes "under sub-section (2) infra

Proceedings under this section cannot be instituted with respect to moveable properties—Hira Lal v. Emp, 11 O L J. 59. 25 Cr. L J. 440

Property must be specified.—To bring a case under this section, the property which is the subject of dispute must be capable of being accurately defined—23 Cal 80. Therefore a Magistrate cannot proceed under this section in the case of a dispute about an undivided share of land, or rent or profit issuing from such undivided share, because the subject matter of the dispute is uncertain, and the boundaries of the land are undefined—7 C W N 462

Before a proceeding is drawn up by the Magistrate, the subject matter of dispute should be clearly determined—Maharaja Suryakanta v. Maharaja Jagadindra, 11 C W N 198 ; Sabid Mandul v. Lakshmi, 7 C. W. N. 599. Absence of clear specification of the subject matter of dispute in the proceedings is a serious defect—Sib Narain v. Salish, 24 C. W. N. 621 : 21 Cr. L. J. 593. But where the parties are not at dispute upon the question as to what the disputed lands are, the real question being which party was entitled to possession under a Civil Court decree, the want of a proper specification of the boundaries of the property will not vitiate the proceedings—Sims v. Johurry, 5 C. W. N. 563 ; Jhantan v. Thakuri, 1 P. L. T. 369 : 21 Cr. L J. 625.

An order under this section which does not specify by metes and bounds the lands in dispute may be amended by the Magistrate himself—2 Weir 107. But an order which gives no information as to the subject matter of dispute and which leaves the persons to whom notice is ordered to be issued quite in the dark as to the property in regard to which they have to put forward their respective claims, is not merely defective but invalid and liable to be set aside in revision—27 All. 296.

396. Within jurisdiction :—This section does not authorise a Magistrate to pass orders respecting lands situate outside the local limits of his jurisdiction—17 W R 33 Therefore where a jalkar was situate partly within and partly without the local limits of his jurisdiction and proceedings were taken with regard to the jalkar as a whole the whole proceedings were set aside and the Magistrate was allowed an option to institute fresh proceedings with regard to such portion of the jalkar as came within his jurisdiction—Korban v Raja Srinath 1 C L J 329

Where it is uncertain in which of two local areas the land in dispute is situated proceedings may be taken by a Magistrate having jurisdiction over any of such areas—12 O C 400 See also Audendra v. Daman Singh, 16 Cr L J 527 (All)

A Magistrate of one district has jurisdiction to institute proceedings under Sec 145 on a report drawn up by a police officer of another district in respect of such portions of the land or water as lie within the limits of his jurisdiction—29 Cal 885

397 Preliminary Order —The making of a formal order under sub-section (1) is absolutely necessary to the initiation of proceedings under this section—Nathu Ram v Emp, 15 A L J 270 18 Cr L J 557; Kaku v Harnaman 1917 P W R 28, and an omission to make such an order and to draw up a proceeding under sub-section (1), will render all subsequent proceedings void—Banuari v Hriday, 32 Cal 552, 30 Cal 443, 4 W R 26, Dhaniram v Kaliram 26 P L R 712, Kaku v Harnaman, 1917 P. W R, 28, Sher Khan v. Fazl Iishi, 26 P L R 187 26 Cr. L J. 1177 Hakam v Rakia Ram 4 Lah 66 24 Cr L J 751 20 Cr L J 124 (Oudh), 6 C W N 923 Jamuna v Mohan, 2 P L T 724 23 Cr L J. 64 In Sajad Hussain v Nanah Chand, 1917 P W R 22* 18 Cr L J. 461 (following Muhammad Shareef v Dhaupat 1914 P W R 15 15 Cr L J 279) however, it has been held that the omission to record the preliminary order is not a fatal defect if the Magistrate afterwards in the presence of parties recorded an order which essentially complied with the requirements of this sub-section So also in Nur Baksh v Crown 1917 P W R 26 18 Cr L J 633 the omission to record a preliminary order in writing or to serve it on the parties did not invalidate the subsequent proceedings, where the parties appeared before the Magistrate who explained matters to them fully and they evidently understood everything that was requisite The Rangoon High Court also holds that the omission to draw up a preliminary order is a mere irregularity curable by sec 537, where no objection was taken before the Magistrate and no party was prejudiced—Mg Po Lon v Mg. Ba, 3 Bnr L J 256* 26 Cr. L J 324

It is essential that the provisions of this section must be strictly complied with, otherwise the order must be deemed to have been made without jurisdiction Where no order was recorded, no notice issued, no ten statements called for, and no inquiry held, the order must be

to be an order without jurisdiction and therefore void—25 All 537 Tara Chand v Behari Lal 1916 P R 22 18 Cr L J 36 Budhan v Ram Rakha 1915 P L R 169 16 Cr L J 628

An order under this section must state all the particulars necessary to enable the Magistrate to act under this section otherwise the proceedings are without jurisdiction It is not sufficient that the Magistrate should have before him a police report that he should have given orders thereon and that a written order be drawn up [according to the terms of this section It is his duty to draw up an order which in all respects satisfies the requirements of law The written order should be correct and complete in its terms—27 Cal 981

The essential points to be kept in mind in connection with proceedings under this section are as follows —

(a) The Magistrate should in his order which must be in writing declare himself satisfied from a proper report or other information and for reasons given that a dispute exists concerning land within the local limits of his jurisdiction and that the dispute is one likely to cause a breach of the peace

(b) When land is in dispute the boundaries should be duly defined in the order and care should be taken to include nothing beyond the subject of dispute

(c) The order should proceed to require the parties concerned in the dispute to attend the Magistrate's Court in person or by pleader on a certain date to file written statements of their respective claims as regards the fact of actual possession and to be prepared with their oral and documentary evidence there and then

(d) The date should be so fixed as to allow reasonable time for the due service and return of the notice promulgating the order and the production of evidence

(e) A copy of the order should be published and affixed at or near the subject of dispute

(f) The forms prescribed in Sch V should be used such modifications being made therein as the circumstances of the case may require"—Cal G R & C O pp 10 11

Where the Magistrate purported to pass an executive order but from the form of the order it was evident that it was a thinly disguised order under sec 145 but no formalities of sec 145 were observed (viz no preliminary order was made no written statement called for) held that the order was passed without jurisdiction and must be set aside—Harbans v Md Syad 26 Cr L J 1511 A I R 1926 Pat 37

398 Statement of grounds — A Magistrate's order in instituting proceedings under this section ought to set out the grounds on which he is satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists—28 Cal 416 Dan Pershad v Ganesh 11 A L J 696 14 Cr L J 495 16 C. P. L. R. 21 2 Bom L. R. 84 Akhubi v Darbari 2 P. L. T. 267 22 Cr L J 481 Even where the Magistrate acts upon a local inquiry held by himself he is still bound to state the grounds upon which he is satisfied that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace—32 Cal 771

Omission to state grounds—The object of drawing up a proceeding prior to the issue of notice is to inform the parties of the grounds or information which satisfy the Magistrate that a dispute exists—7 C. W. N. 599, For it is the intention of the law not only that the Magistrate should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under sec 145 but that he should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which he is proceeding—30 Cal 570 Therefore where the Magistrate omits in the preliminary order to state the grounds for his being satisfied as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace the final order is without jurisdiction and must be set aside—37 Cal 771 Nga Po Tin v Nga Po Saung 1 Rang 53 Ma Gyi v King Emp, 2 Bur L J 295 25 Cr L J 1161 But the Allahabad High Court holds that failure on the part of the Magistrate to set forth explicitly the grounds for his being satisfied that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace will not vitiate the proceedings if there was otherwise a substantial compliance with the requirements of this section—Har Prasad v Pandurang 1905 A. W. N. 260 Har Piar v Nathe Lal 18 A L J 1140, 4 A L J 91 In 1884 A. W. N. 317 it has been held that the omission to state the grounds is a mere irregularity curable by Sec 537 Similar view is taken by the Oudh and Sind Courts—Parbhu Dayal v Emp 25 Cr L J 1139 (Oudh) Mad Mahdisha v Wahdalsah 26 Cr L J 1792 (Sind) The Madras High Court also lays down that once the Magistrate is satis-

by section 537 of the Code—Kamal Kutty v Udayavarma 36 Mad 275: 23 M L J 499 13 Cr L J 753 and in 30 Mad 548 and 2 Weir 98 the High Court refused to interfere in revision unless either of the parties had been prejudiced by the Magistrate's omission to record the grounds

But in his final order the Magistrate should sufficiently state his reasons so that the High Court in revision may determine whether or not the Magistrate has complied with the provisions of sub section (4) and directed his mind to the consideration of the evidence—Bhuban Chandra v Nibaran 49 Cal 187

Where neither the preliminary order nor the final order stated in that the Magistrate was satisfied that the dispute was likely to

to be an order without jurisdiction and therefore void—25 All 537; Tara Chand v Behari Lal 1916 P R 22 18 Cr L J 36, Budhan v. Ram Rakha, 1915 P L R 169 16 Cr L J 628

398 Statement of grounds —A Magistrate's order in instituting

A I R 1925 Oudh 190 Although a person is not one of the parties to the dispute but is in possession of a part of the land, he is a necessary party to the proceedings and should be asked to file a written statement—Ram Bhaushan v Ram Lakshan, A I R 1925 Oudh 484. 26 Cr L J 630

It was held in several Calcutta cases that the words 'parties concerned' in this section meant not only the persons who were actually disputing but also the persons interested in or claiming a right to the property in dispute, and the Magistrate was bound to ascertain those persons and to give notice to them all so that the whole matter, so far as his Court was concerned, might be disposed of in one proceeding—Ram Chandra v Monohur, 21 Cal 29 (32), Laldhars v Sukdeo 27 Cal 892 (904), Ganesh Jaha v Ayubal, 4 C W N 753, Mangal Halder v. Naimuddin 6 C W N 101

But these cases must be deemed to have been overruled by the Full Bench case of Arishna Kamini v Abdul Jabbar, 30 Cal 155, in which Frisep, C J, referring to the above cases, made the following remarks (at pp 183, 184) —“The reported cases seem to have proceeded on the ground that proceedings under sec 145 should be regulated on the same principles as if the Magistrate were trying a civil suit involving a right to possession, and that unless all persons having any possible claim are made parties to those proceedings, they are bad for want of jurisdiction. But the law does not require this, nor is it the object of proceedings under sec 145 that the Magistrate should deal with the matter before him as if he were acting as a Civil Court. It may be very desirable that such parties (i.e. the parties who may be interested in, or may have a claim to the property in dispute) should be heard so as to avoid a possible injustice by determining in their absence an issue which may affect their rights. But the law nowhere declares that such person is entitled to come into the proceedings and that the refusal of the Magistrate to hear him amounts to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction under the law. The object in view is to prevent a breach of the peace between certain parties found to be in dispute by determining the subject matter of that dispute, not the determination of actual possession or a right to possession in regard to all persons who may possibly be concerned in such a matter.” In the same case, Hill J observed (at pp 195-196) — The object of a proceeding under sec 145 is the ascertainment of the persons actually in possession at the time of the initial order under sub section (1) and having regard to that object I should feel disposed to think that the words 'parties concerned in the dispute' were intended to indicate all persons claiming to be then in possession, and I think that the Magistrate should endeavour to bring all such persons into the proceeding. But the scope of the inquiry under this section is confined to the fact of actual possession irrespective of the merits of the claims breach of the peace the proceedings were set aside as illegal—1884 A W N 317

A mere omission by the Magistrate to record the source of information will not invalidate the proceedings where the Magistrate held the inquiry in the presence of the parties and they were aware of the fact in the course of the inquiry—Sabid Mondal v Lakshmi 7 C W N 599

Where the Magistrate omitted to state in detail the grounds of his satisfaction that a breach of the peace was likely to happen but referred to a petition which contained such grounds and also recorded that there was no denial of the same by the opposite party it was held that there was a substantial compliance with the provisions of this section and that the order was valid—16 M L J 148

Reference to police report—An initial order made by the Magistrate under sub sec (1) is not defective merely because it is not self contained and does not state in express terms the grounds upon which he is satisfied when such grounds appear in the police report upon which it is founded and to which it makes reference and which is incorporated in it—Ahosh Mohamed v Asir Mahomed 33 Cal 352 Goluck Chandra v Kali Charan 13 Cal 175 Where the police report sets out sufficient grounds and is expressly referred to in the initial order by the Magistrate such an order sufficiently fulfils the requirements of the law—33 Cal 357 If the Police report or other information shows that there is a dispute and the Magistrate believes it and issues the preliminary order basing his information on such report only he acquires sufficient jurisdiction to act under this section and it is not necessary for him to set out any further reasons for his being satisfied as to the existence of such a dispute His order is final and the High Court will not scrutinize the said reason — Krishnaappa v Alamelu 5 L W 165 18 Cr L J 23 But it is remarked in Kali Krishna v Golam Ali 7 Cal 46 that it is the duty of the Magistrate to record distinctly what the law requires to be recorded and he performs his duty in an unsatisfactory manner if without stating the grounds he merely refers to a police report

399 Parties concerned—The words parties concerned should not be so narrowly construed as to mean only the persons actually disputing but should be extended to persons who are concerned as claiming to be in possession Had it been intended to confine the proceeding to the actual disputants the Legislature would have used the words 'parties disputing' instead of the words parties concerned—per Hill J in Krishna Hanani v Abdul Jubbar 30 Cal 155 (F B) at p 198 Proceedings under this section are not without jurisdiction merely because some of those persons (i.e. persons claiming to be in possession) are not likely to cause a breach of the peace—Abadi Begam v Mirza Ahmed 11 O L J 757

the proceedings—Manik v. Govind 6 C W N 206 Where the Zemindars on both sides claim possession through their respective tenants the presence of the rival tenants is necessary and they must be made parties. The order passed in favour of one tenant as against the other is a good and valid order—Gurusis v. Kedar Nath 38 Cal 889 15 C L J 184 12 Cr L J 408

Where the disputed land consisted of several plots of land all held by tenants on a yearly rent of half the produce and the parties to the proceedings were the lakhirajdar and the patindar the dispute between whom was as to the right to collect rent and it appeared that as regards some of the plots there was a dispute as to what tenants were in possession it was held that as regards the plots about which there was a dispute as to what tenants held the lands the Magistrate should not have passed any order in those proceedings in the absence of the tenants because they might be very seriously prejudiced by an order in favour of one or other of the parties to these proceedings—19 C W N 67

Where the petitioners allege that the landlords have fraudulently attempted to dispute their possession by setting up false tenants as cultivators of the lands in dispute the landlords are the real parties—Raj Kumar v. Mahadev 4 C W N 748

Agent or Manager or Servant—Where the person in whose favour an order was made under this section regarding a dispute as to the right to dig coal in a certain mouza was merely the manager of the coal company claiming the property Ield that the possession of such person was not one as contemplated by this section and the order was bad as the parties really interested were not before the Court—Behary Lal v. Darby 21 Cal 915 The person in possession of land merely as agent or manager is not a party concerned within the meaning of this section—Brown v. Prithviraj 25 Cal 423 Jhabu v. Rutherford 7 C W N 208 Newaz v. Ramnallabh 21 Cal 916 (Note) An order passed against servants without their masters being on the record is one made without jurisdiction and is liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court—Nagoji v. Subbarajulu 5 L W 118 18 Cr L J 44 But if the actual proprietors are not resident within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate an order under this section can be made in favour of the person who claims to be in possession as agent or manager of the proprietors—Dhondas v. Follet 31 Cal 48 (F B) If both the master and the servant are resident within the Magistrate's jurisdiction the master must be made a party to the proceedings—Jibahan v. Bansrup 6 C L R. 193

In 32 Cal 287 and Chhakar v. Ishar 6 F L T 799 however it was held that where the Magistrate made the manager a party to the proceedings instead of the proprietor who was resident within the Magistrate of the parties concerned. A claim merely to a right to possession as distinguished from a claim to be in possession, would be outside the scope of the inquiry. —I am therefore unable to agree in the view which has been taken in certain cases that all parties interested in, or claiming a right to, the property in dispute are entitled to be, or should be made parties to the proceeding. To require the Magistrate to ascertain who are the persons interested in or claiming a right to the property in dispute would be to impose on him in some cases an almost impossible task, and would undoubtedly have the effect of unduly prolonging and greatly embarrassing his proceedings and of depriving them altogether in many instances of their summary character."

The Madras High Court, however is of opinion (following the old Calcutta cases) that the words 'parties concerned' include persons who are interested in or claim a right to the property in dispute—Q. E v Kuppayyar, 18 Mad 51. Nagoji v Subbarayulu, 5 L W 118: 18 Cr L J 44

The Magistrate should do his best to ascertain who are the parties concerned in the dispute in a case under sec 145. But his order cannot be pronounced to be vitiated by any error of jurisdiction merely because such inquiry has not been made or carried far enough—Arishna Kamini v Abdul Jubbar, 30 Cal 155 (F B) at p 193

It is upon the basis of the information conveyed to him that the Magistrate is in the first instance to select the persons whom he will require to attend his Court for the purpose of laying their claims before him—Ibid (at p 196)

Owners occupiers —This section concerns owners as well as occupiers. When a Zeminder has let his lands in farm he and his farmers and their occupying ryots are all in their degree concerned in the dispute as to possession, and they ought to be maintained in the possession of the interests which they severally enjoy—Harah Narain v Luchmi, 5 C L. R. 287.

Landlords, tenants —Where in a dispute concerning the ownership and possession of land between a Zeminder as well as his tenants on one side, and another Zeminder as well as his tenants on the other (so that the dispute was of a dual character) the Zeminders were made parties, but the tenants were not, it was held that the presence of the tenants was essentially necessary for the proper and effectual decision of the case, and the omission to join them as parties was illegal and without jurisdiction—Laldhari v. Sukdro, 27 Cal 892. Where the dispute existed only among the tenants of the rival Zeminders, and the Zeminders not being concerned in the dispute did not move in the matter themselves, the omission to add the Zeminders as parties to the dispute would not vitiate

the proceedings—Manik v. Gotsind (C W N 206) Where the Zeminders on both sides claim possession through their respective tenants the presence of the rival tenants is necessary and they must be made parties. The order passed in favour of one tenant as against the other is a good and valid order—Gurudas v. Ketarnath 38 Cal 889 15 C L J 184: 12 Cr L J 408

Where the disputed land consisted of several plots of land all held by tenants on a yearly rent of half the produce and the parties to the proceedings were the lakhrajdar and the patindar the dispute between whom was as to the right to collect rent and it appeared that as regards some of the plots there was a dispute as to what tenants were in possession, it was held that as regards the plots about which there was a dispute as to what tenants held the lands the Magistrate should not have passed any order in those proceedings in the absence of the tenants, because they might be very seriously prejudiced by an order in favour of one or other of the parties to these proceedings—19 C W N 62

Where the petitioners allege that the landlords have fraudulently attempted to dispute their possession by setting up false tenants as cultivators of the lands in dispute the landlords are the real parties—Raj Kumar v. Mahadev 4 C W N 748

Agent or Manager or Servant—Where the person in whose favour an order was made under this section regarding a dispute as to the right to dig coal in a certain mouza was merely the manager of the coal company claiming the property held that the possession of such person was not one as contemplated by this section and the order was bad as the parties really interested were not before the Court—Behary Lal v. Darby 21 Cal 915 The person in possession of land merely as agent or manager is not a party concerned within the meaning of this section—Brown v. Prithiraj 25 Cal 423, Jhabu v. Rutherford, 7 C W N 208, Newaz v. Rambhulabh 21 Cal 916 (Note) An order passed against servants without their masters being on the record is one made without jurisdiction and is liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court—Nagoji v. Subbarajulu 5 L. W. 118 18 Cr L J 44 But if the actual proprietors are not resident within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate an order under this section can be made in favour of the person who claims to be in possession as agent or manager of the proprietors—Dhondai v. Follet 31 Cal 48 (T B) If both the master and the servant are resident within the Magistrate's jurisdiction, the master must be made a party to the proceedings—Jitaban v. Bansrup, 6 C L R. 193

In 32 Cal 287 and Chhakauri v. Ishar 6 P L T 799 however, it was held that where the Magistrate made the manager a party to the proceedings instead of the proprietor who was resident within the Magistrate's jurisdiction the course adopted by the Magistrate was a mere irregularity or at most an error of law which did not vitiate the proceedings

Receiver —Where the land in dispute is in the possession of a receiver appointed by a Civil Court his possession is the possession of the Court. Such an officer cannot be described as a party interested in a dispute under section 145. Even if such officer can be so described there will be no jurisdiction in the Magistrate to make any order on him under this section without the sanction of the Court appointing him—30 Cal 593. In a dispute between the old and the new tenants of an estate the receiver who granted new leases to the new tenants and who himself was not in actual possession was not a proper party to the proceedings—Chinna Veeranna v Narayanaswami 9 M L T 502 12 Cr L J 185

Reversioner —A person who is the next reversioner to the estate is not a person concerned in the dispute and is not a necessary party because he has no right to present possession—24 All 443

Minor —A minor who is interested in the dispute is a proper party, but he is not a necessary party as he is not a party likely to cause a breach of the peace. Non service of notice on the minor does not invalidate the proceedings—Nandan v Siaram 26 Cr L J 1287 A I R 1926 Pat 67

400 Non joinder of parties —Questions of misjoinder or non joinder of parties do not ordinarily go to the jurisdiction. Such questions as whether A ought to have been added as being a person likely to be affected by the proceeding or B omitted as not being concerned in it or whether C was added at too late a stage are questions of procedure by which the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is not affected—Krishna Kamini v Abdul 30 Cal 155 200 (F B) Nandan v Siaram 26 Cr L J 1287 A I R 1926 Pat 67. Therefore proceedings under this section are not without jurisdiction because some person claiming to have possession of portions of lands in dispute has not been made a party when he was not one of the parties in the dispute so far as appeared from the information on which the Magistrate acted and when such person does not appear and raise any objection. And further proceedings under this section are not without jurisdiction merely because the parties that have been joined are concerned only with possession of portions of the land in dispute—Krishna Kamini v Abdul 30 Cal 155 (F B) Safani Kanta v Shamsher Ali 24 Cr L J 235

But non joinder of persons concerned in a dispute whose presence is essentially necessary for the purpose of a proper decision of the case involves a question of jurisdiction and the High Court has power to set aside an order made in a proceeding in which such persons are not made parties—Anesh Mollah v Fajharuddin 28 Cal 446

401 Addition of Parties —It was held in Protap Narain v Rajendra

Narayan 24 Cal 55 (F B) that a Magistrate had no power to add parties after the initiation of proceedings under this section and that if in the course of the proceedings it appeared to the Magistrate that it was absolutely necessary that other parties should be required to attend and he was satisfied that they were concerned in the dispute the only course open to him was to initiate a new proceeding.

But this case was decided under sec 145 of the old Code of 1882 in which subsection (3) regarding the service and publication of notice did not exist. The opinion of the Full Bench in 24 Cal 55 cannot in view of the alteration of law introduced by subsection (3) of sec 145 as it now stands be regarded as a binding authority on the construction of the section. Subsection (3) has been enacted not simply for the purpose of regulating the issue and service of notice generally under this section but it is also intended to empower the Magistrate after he has issued the order provided for by subsection (1) to the persons claiming to be in possession, to bring in any other persons whom from subsequent information it may seem to him proper to have before him—Krishna Kamini v Abdul Jubbar, 30 Cal 155 (F B) at pp 197 199. And the addition of those persons does not put an end to the original proceeding and does not require the initiation of any fresh proceeding—Ibid (at pp 192 193 201).

The Magistrate has very wide powers with respect to the persons whom he will bring into the proceeding. He may alter or add to the array of parties either of his own motion or on the application of any one claiming to be concerned in the dispute (i e claiming to be in possession). But the Magistrate can add parties at any time up to the commencement of the inquiry under subsection (4). He has no power to add fresh parties after the opening of the inquiry. The section contains no provision for the addition of parties after the commencement of the inquiry and it was no doubt considered that the power conferred on the Magistrate by subsection (3) of summoning such persons as he deemed proper, and the means prescribed by the same clause for giving publicity to the proceeding provided a sufficient guarantee that before the actual inquiry is entered upon, all parties really concerned will either have been summoned to attend the proceedings or will have had the opportunity of doing so afforded them if they care to avail themselves of it. It would lead to much inconvenience and delay if it were held that any one claiming to be concerned in the dispute was entitled to come in and join in the proceedings after the commencement of the inquiry. It would probably be necessary in such a case to start the inquiry afresh as the party added would have a right to have the evidence taken in his presence, and if several claimants successively were to come in this way it is evident that the proceeding might be indefinitely prolonged—per Full J. in Ibid (at pp 198, 199). The same Judge again remarked in the same case (at p 201):—'If parties are added after who is himself a co-sharer must be deemed to be in possession under this section—1890 A. W. N. 178

Proceedings under this section are not without jurisdiction merely because some of the parties are concerned only with possession of a portion of the land in dispute—Narayan v Chandrabhaga, 26 Cr L J. 1289 (Nag).

The possession contemplated by this section is absolute, continuing and not occasional possession. Where the petitioners claim possession of a market stall for only one day in the week, this section is inapplicable—Narayan Manjari v Fazley Haq, 49 Cal 871. So also, where one of the parties to a proceeding under this section claimed only the right to worship on the disputed land on only one day in the year and the right to make due and proper preparations for the holding of that worship by erecting huts for the purpose of holding pujah held that the right of such party to be in possession for only one day in the year or to take such steps as were necessary to prepare for the pujah was in the nature of an easement and not in the nature of possession, and proceedings under this section could not be taken as this section contemplates absolute continuing possession of either party—Manik Chandra v Prem Nath, 17 C W N 205

Wrongful possession.—The possession referred to in this clause is actual possession at the time of the initiation of proceedings and not possession at the date of the Magistrate's order. Therefore, possession though obtained by wrongful means but complete at the time of inquiry is actual possession within the meaning of this section—Q. E. v Gauhar, 1897 P. R 5. So also, possession obtained by fraud or trickery—In re Girdhar, Ratanlal 27. The Magistrate's duty is to determine actual possession and not whether the possession is rightful or wrongful—In re Sangambasawa, 7 Bom L R 18. 2 Cr L J 28

Origin of possession.—A Magistrate ought to inquire into the question as to who is in actual possession of the property in dispute, he has no concern as to how the party obtained possession, provided that the possession dates more than two months prior to the date of the preliminary order—11 Cal. 365. Dastur v. Fell, 6 B H C R. 30

Actual possession, what is not.—Possession by tenant is not possession of landlord in cases where there is a dispute between the tenant and the landlord as to the fact of possession—2 Weir 107. Also, in case of dispute between two rival zemindars, constructive possession through intermediate holders (e. g. ticcadars) to whom the ryots pay rents, is not contemplated by this section—3 Cal 320. This section does not contemplate the possession of a superior landlord to whom the occupier of the land does not pay rent. It contemplates the possession of a landlord by his immediate tenant i. e., the person who pays rent to him—Sutherland v. Croud, 18 W. R. 11 (13).

The possession contemplated by this section is a real tangible possession therefore where a party claims under a document or agreement the right to do certain things over a large extent of territory the performance of acts under such alleged right in one portion of the ground over which the right extends (although it may be sufficient for the purpose of keeping alive that right so as to be an answer to a plea of limitation raised in a civil suit) is not of itself a sufficient possession on which the Magistrate's order under this section may be based for the purpose of forbidding in a distant locality acts necessarily not in conflict with such possession but at variance with the right—Bejay Nath v Bengal Coal Co 23 W R 45 (48) So also the mere purchase at an execution sale without delivery of possession does not amount to possession of the property purchased and the rights of the purchaser will not be protected by this section—31 Mad 410

The possession given by Am n in butwara proceedings is simply one of ownership and not of occupancy and is not contemplated by this section—4 Cal 378 3 C L R 94

A succession certificate only authorises the holder to collect the debts of the deceased and is no bar to the Magistrate maintaining another party in possession of the lands belonging to the deceased—Seslaram v Roy Sheo Golam 13 W R 34

Possession of forest land —In a dispute regarding forest land the right to possession of which was exercised by cutting timber from time to time and removing the timber upon a certain price being paid for it is necessary to inquire as to who was in undisturbed possession of the land in dispute by felling the trees and removing the same without objection on the occasion immediately preceding the time when the dispute arose and whichever party be found to have been in possession on that occasion should be presumed to have possession when the proceedings commenced—16 Cal 281 Where it was found that certain jungle lands were in the khas possession of the Zemindar and the other party without claiming any easement or customary right cut a few trees and encroached upon a small portion of the jungle held that such intermittent encroachment did not oust the possession of the Zemindar—Bhola Nath v Wood 32 Cal 287

Permissive possession —Possession that can be pleaded in a proceeding under this section must be possession based on a claim of right to possession The possession of a person which is merely permissive can not come within the purview of this section—Nrit a Gopal v Chandu Charan, 10 C W N 1088

405 Joint possession —Section 145 contemplates a dispute between two parties, each of whom asserts the right to hold exclusive posses-

of the property as against the other (Bidhu Bhusan v Annoda 6 C W N 883) and not a dispute between a party claiming to hold joint possession with another and the latter contesting such right. Such a dispute nearly always arises out of a claim to hold a specific share in the property and this obviously is a matter which no Criminal Court can properly deal with. Therefore, where two parties are in joint possession of the property in dispute and one of them tries to evict the other so as to endanger the public peace this section does not apply and an order allowing one of the parties to be in possession till evicted by law is bad—Tarujan v Asamuddi 4 C W N 426 Krishna v Radhasyam 7 C W N 118 Dhani Ram v Bholanath 1902 P R 23 10 C W N 1088 Makhan v Barada 11 C W N 512 5 Cr L J 296 Shamlal v Rajendra, 21 Cr L J 790 1 P L T 594 Arjun v Chandan 22 Cr L J 625 24 O C 167

This section is not intended to regulate the mode of enjoyment and when the parties are jointly entitled an order under sec 145 should not be made—23 Cal 80. This section clearly refers to exclusive possession and is not capable of being so construed as to authorise a Magistrate to take cognizance and dispose of disputes regarding joint possession—190* P R 23. The object aimed at by the Legislature is the prevention of a breach of the peace. This can be secured by asking one of the parties to keep away from the property. But where both parties have been in joint possession and are still prepared to commit a breach of the peace by trying to oust one another it will not be in the interests of the preventive remedy that both should be maintained in possession. It will certainly not help to maintain order and peace. That is the reason why Courts have declined to declare the joint possession of the contending parties—Mohammad Kaola yappa v Sheikh Abdul 27 M L J 169 15 Cr L J 572. Even in such cases the Magistrate is not competent to put one of the parties in possession—Veerabhadra v Shanmugan 17 Cr I J 76 (Mad). Where it was found that the second party was in possession of the disputed land on behalf of the first party as also on behalf of himself, both parties being members of the same family and the Magistrate declared the second party to be in possession the order was held to be without jurisdiction—Hinu Mandal v Haji Baul 23 C W N 1051.

Where the parties do not claim joint possession but each party claims exclusive possession it cannot be said that it is a claim for joint possession making this section inapplicable—Bidhu Bhusan v Annoda 6 C W N 883 Ramjharis v Piar Koeri 4 P L T 308 Makhan v Makhan Singh 2 Lah 372 23 Cr L J 225 Dasudeo v Makadea 6 P L T 454 26 Cr L J 1187. Thus, where the case is one of exclusive possession claimed by each set of landlords through their respective tenants the Magistrate has jurisdiction to pass an order in favour of one tenant against the other.

persons setting up their tenancy—Gurudas v Kedar Nath, 38 Cal 889: 12 Cr L J 408 15 C L J 184 And the fact that there may be a joint title to land does not prevent the application of this section, if the Magistrate finds that possession is with one party—Baynath v Street 20 C W. N 518 17 Cr L J 251 Malan v Makhhan Singh 2 Lah 372 The only question for the Magistrate is whether either party has actual possession, and if he finds that one party has actual possession of a defined area and the other party has not, he can make an order under this section irrespective of the fact that the parties may have joint title to the land—Basanta Kumari v Mohesh, 40 Cal 982 17 C W N 944 14 Cr L J 269

Where it has been declared by a Civil Court that the property is joint and partition has been ordered, no proceedings under this section can be taken until the partition has been effected—8 C W N 485

If the co-shares have by express or tacit arrangement made a partition between themselves so that each of them is in possession of a specified and demarcated portion of the estate, there is nothing to prevent the application of this section—Basanta Kumari v Mohesh, 40 Cal 982. So also, where it was found that each party to the dispute was in possession of separate dwelling rooms in the same house the Magistrate was competent to pass an order that the separate possession of each party should continue—2 Weir 108

Debtor property being by nature impartible and inalienable possession of such property by co-sherebais must always be necessarily joint and as such beyond the scope of an order under this section Where one of several co-sherebais had been entrusted with the sole management of the debtor estate for convenience, a dispute between him and the other co-sherebais claiming to have joint management with him is not a fit subject for a proceeding under this section—Nritta Gopal v Chand Charan, 10 C W N 1088

406 Clause (2)—Land or Water —These words have been substituted for the words 'tangible immoveable property' occurring in the Code of 1882, and this subsection gives an explanation of the expression

Building—Temple —A dispute relating to possession of a temple comes within the provisions of this section—2 Weir 110 whether the temple be wholly or partly private property or dedicated to purposes of public worship—2 Weir 99 A dispute arising between two pujaries regarding the right to perform the puja in a certain temple comes within the purview of this section—2 Weir 112 This case will now properly fall under sec 147 as amended in 1923

Markets —A dispute about the exclusive right to collect the entire toll from one partitioned half of the market may be a subject of proceedings under this section—30 Cal 593

Fisheries —Under the Code of 1882, by reason of the word 'tangible' occurring in the section, incorporeal rights were excluded from the operation of this section—11 Cal 413 and therefore a dispute concerning the right of fishing in a jalkar was held to be not governed by this section—12 Cal 539 13 Cal 179 But these decisions are no longer good law in view of the express words fisheries occurring in this subsection Therefore where there is bona fide dispute about a fishery or jalkar right, proceedings under this section may be properly instituted—35 Cal 117

Where parties have joint rights in a certain fishery and neither of them can be considered as claiming exclusive possession, and a dispute arises with regard to its possession, this section is inapplicable because joint possession does not come within this section If what was in dispute was not a share in the fishery but a share in its profits (i.e. either the fish caught or their price when sold) it might have been dealt with under this subsection—Bhabanath v Peary 11 C L J 412 11 Cr L J 370

Alluvial lands —In the case of alluvial lands (in Bengal) recently reformed where questions of breach of the peace arise it is open to the Magistrate to deal with the matter either under the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act (V of 1920) or under the provisions of section 145 of this Code This section has not been impliedly repealed by Act V of 1920 in the case of alluvial lands recently formed—Abdul Jabbar v Mafizuddin 28 C W N 783 25 Cr L J 1107 A I R 1924 Cal 980

Crops or other produce —The word land includes crops or other produce of land—2 Weir 108 But crops mean standing crops and not crops which have been severed from the land and stored on the thrashing floor—3n Cal 110 Srinivasa v Sathayappa 13 Cr L J 295 (Mad) Ganga Prosad v Narain 15 All 394 Chaurasi v Ram Shankar 28 All 266 Contra—2 Weir 108 where it is held that the mere fact that the crops which are the subject of dispute have been removed from the land is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate under this section

Mines —A dispute as regards mines and minerals and the right to work mines falls under this section as mining rights must reasonably be regarded as falling within the definition of the term land which is intended to cover all profits derivable from land—Andrew Yule & Co v Skone 4 P L J 154 20 Cr L J 199 Mahaheo Dutt v Sarkar 24 Cr L J 263 Bimala Prosad v Tata Iron & Steel Co Ltd 35 C L J 456 24 Cr L J 103

Trees severed from the land do not come within the purview of this section and no order under this section can be made with respect to them—1917 P W R 22 But trees growing on the land come within this section as being produce of land But lac which is not a part of the tree itself but is a parasitic growth on it is not a produce of land or crop—Ali

Mohammad v Fakiruddin, 24 C W N 1039 22 Cr. L. J. 131 The right to tap a tree is an intangible property and may be the subject of proceedings under this section—Jiblal v Emp 3 P L J 316 19 Cr L J 656 It would more properly come under sec 147

Rents—A dispute as to collect rents is a dispute concerning land, within the meaning of this section—Pramatta v Durga Churn 11 Cal 413 15 Cal 57 12 Mad 88 18 Cr L J 156 (Mad) Abhayessari v. Sidhessari 16 Cal 513 Lalithari v. Sukdeo 27 Cal 892 (903) 27 Cal 259 Haridas v. Abdul Malieb 19 C W N 959 16 Cr L J 590 The decision in *Durga v. Where there is no dispute as to the possession of or extent of share in a certain immoveable property and the dispute is merely as to who is entitled to collect rents on behalf of all from the tenants this section does not apply—Md Fazil v Md Abdul Samad 5 Cr L J 394 10 O C 89 Ahaloo v Mohesh 36 Cal 986 Ramlochan v Emp 12 A L J 162 36 All 143 That is where there is no dispute as to possession or share of land a Magistrate can not under this section determine the method by which the possession of the parties is to be exercised or the method by which the the parties in possession are to collect the profits of land—Ahaloo v Mohesh 36 Cal 986

This section applies where the dispute is as regards the collection of rents between joint owners governed by the Mitakshara Law as for instance where one of the joint owners dismisses the common manager and claims to collect the rents separately on his behalf—Sri Mohan v Narsing, 27 Cal 259 (261)

Profits—The profits must arise out of or emanate from immoveable property therefore fees paid by pilgrims at Gaya for performing Sraddh ceremonies cannot be said to arise out of land and proceedings under this section cannot be instituted in respect of a dispute regarding such fees—3 C L J 137 So also a right to the offerings given by worshippers for the worship of any deity cannot be said to be a right to profits issuing out of the temple but arising out of the deity irrespective of the temple building in which the deity may happen to dwell A dispute relating to the rights to the offerings only is a dispute relating to moveable property and is outside the scope of this section—Ram Saran v. Raghunandan 38 Cal 387 13 C L J 445 12 Cr L J 3 Gurram v. Lalbehari 37 Cal 578 14 C W N 611 11 Cr L J 292 So also a dispute concerning the right to take sandalwood paste when removed from an idol does not fall under this section—2 Bom L R 438 A dispute with respect to the collection of offerings at a karbala cannot be the subject matter of a proceeding this section—*Chulam Sibzun v. A dispute as to the right to collect fees (as mere remuneration for conducting the business of the market) from the sellers of a market the payment of such fees being purely voluntary on the part of the sellers and being in no way connected with the ordinary rents and profits of the market, and not being a perquisite of the Zeminder, is not a dispute as to the profits of a market within the meaning of this section—Ram Lochan v Emp, 36 All 143 12 A L J 162

Right of succession to a muth —A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to institute proceedings in case of a dispute arising out of a right of succession to a muth and its appurtenances—11 W R 23

Right to ferry —The right to a ferry, i. e., the right to carry passengers and their goods to and fro in a boat across a river, cannot be treated apart from the possession of lands used on either side of the stream for the purpose of landing them. Therefore a dispute regarding a ferry including the land and the water upon which the right is exercised, comes under this section—26 Cal 188. But questions relating to rights to use a ferry come under section 147 and not under this section—Harbulla v Bajrang, 3 C W N 148

Disputes as regards easements fall more appropriately under sec 147 than under this section—Kali Kumar v Bejoy, 21 Cr L J 697 (Cal), Aasram v Chotu Lal 22 Cr L J 768 (Nag). e. g. a dispute as regards the right to use a well—Nanke v Jamid ul Rahman, 23 A L J 41 26 Cr L J 683

407. Clause (3)—Service of Notice —A copy of the order, stating the grounds of the Magistrate's satisfaction must be served on the parties for it is the intention of the law not only that the Magistrate should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under this section, but that he should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which the proceedings had been instituted —20 Cal 520

A Magistrate before proceeding under this section ought to satisfy himself that a notice of the proceeding and a copy of the order drawn up under clause (1) have been duly served on the parties alleging the non-receipt of the notice, and the Magistrate's omission to do so vitiates all subsequent proceedings—Sripati v Ram Kumar, 8 C W N 76

When the Court decides to take action, all processes should be served at the expense of the Crown—Phutanja v Emp, 25 Cr L J. 1109 (Nag)

Local service of notice —This clause also provides for the publication of a copy of the order in a conspicuous place at or near the subject of dispute, and the publication of such notice is a condition precedent to the exercise of a Magistrate's jurisdiction in an inquiry under subsection (4)—Nawab Khaja Solemulla v Ishan Chandra, 9 C W N 909

The provision regarding the local service of notice was made with the intention of guarding against collusive proceedings as well as to give to any one interested who may through an oversight or otherwise not have received a summons an opportunity of coming in with his claim and to notify generally to all persons in the locality that a proceeding under this section has been set on foot—Krishna Kamini v Abdul Jabbar 30 Cal 155 197 (F B) As regards the effect of clause (3) on the power of the Magistrate to add parties see 30 Cal 155 (F B) cited in Note 401 ante

Form of notice—Though the section prescribes no particular mode of giving notice the language of this section indicates that the notice shall be to known individuals and not in the form of a general citation or public proclamation—4 Cal 650

Notice under section 107 or 147 not sufficient—Where notice was issued under section 107 to show cause why the accused should not execute a bond for keeping the peace and the Magistrate when he tried the case recorded an order in the course of which he stated that on facts the case was one for the application of Sec 145 and not one under Sec 107, and proceeded at once to pass an order under clause (6) of this section, the order was held to be bad—30 Cal 443 Similarly where a Magistrate gave notice under sec 147 and started proceedings under that section, but on objection being taken did not decide whether Sec 147 was applicable to the proceedings but passed an order purporting to be under sec 145 without giving notice of his intention to act under sec 145 the Magistrate's order was made without jurisdiction—19 M L J 18 In both these cases the Magistrate ought to have issued fresh notice under sec 145

Service on whom to be made—The service of notice need not be made on all co sharers It is enough if notice is served upon persons concerned in the dispute—In re Gobinda 18 W R 54 A service of notice upon a mofussil naeb who takes no steps to consult his employer or act under his directions is not such service as is contemplated by this section—Ramranginee v Goroo Das 17 W R 9

Proof of service—Where one of the parties denies the service of the order the written return of the serving peon is not sufficient proof of the service The Magistrate should examine the serving peon and allow him to be cross examined on this point—8 C W N 719

Non service of personal notice—Failure to serve the notice upon the parties concerned is a mere irregularity cured by sec 537—Mg Mauk v Mg Po 3 Rang 169 Bidhyadhar v Jagodish 7 O C 334 Bhure Khau v Fakira 25 Cr L J 159 (Nag) and will not render the proceedings void if the parties were present and no prejudice was caused—D bi Prosad v Slocdat 30 All 41 or if the parties appeared before the Magistrate who explained matters to them fully and they evidently understood everything that was requisite—Nur Bakish v Crown 1917 P W R 26 18 Cr L J 633 or if the person did not question the order—30 Mad 548 But accor /

Where the Magistrate did not serve any notice upon any person nor did he affix a notice on the property in dispute nor receive a written statement from either party and passed the order in the absence of one party the proceedings of the Magistrate were very irregular and were bad for want of jurisdiction—35 Cal 774 1907 P R 7 Dasawan v Tilak 4 P L T 723 24 Cr L J 345

If the proceedings are heard and order passed ex parte on account of the absence of a party and that party afterwards appears and alleges non service of notice and applies for rehearing of the case the Magistrate cannot reject the application but is bound to re open the case after satisfying himself of the truth of such allegation—Aali Charan v Abdul Lashar 24 C W N 902 21 Cr L J 848

Omission of publication of notice —The provision as to the publication of the order in some conspicuous place near the property in dispute is directory and a matter of procedure only Omission to publish the notice is not an illegality which deprives the Magistrate of his jurisdiction and unless it be shown that some one interested has been materially prejudiced by the omission the High Court will not interfere—Sukh Lal v Tara Chand 33 Cal 68 F B (overruling 8 C W N 590 and 9 C W N 909) Debi Prosad v Sheodat 30 All 41 Muhammad Sharif v Dhanpat 1914 P W R 15 Bhure Khan v Fakira 25 Cr L J 159 (Nag) Maung Mauk v Maung Po Yon 3 Rang 169

Warrant to compel attendance of party —Under this section the matter in issue is not the commission of an offence but the settlement of a dispute and it is entirely optional with the parties to attend or not therefore the issue of a warrant to compel the attendance of any party is illegal—5 C W. N 71

408 Clause (4)—Inquiry —An inquiry as to possession is made not for the purpose of strengthening the possession of one party or the other in the dispute between them but because such an inquiry is necessary for the making of an order under subsection (6) declaring the party in possession to be entitled to retain it until eviction by a Civil Court—30 Cal 112

The inquiry contemplated by this section is a personal inquiry. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction even with the consent of parties to make over an inquiry under this section to any other Magistrate Sub section

(4) makes it clear that the section contemplates only an inquiry by the person directed by the Statute to hold it and by that person and no one else. This section read as a whole does not give the person charged with the inquiry the power to delegate the duties which have been vested in him to any other person to hold an inquiry or to ascertain facts which the law requires the Magistrate to do himself—Hamidul Haque v Sh Atait 2 P L J 86 18 Cr L J 145 See also Note 414 infra

409 Procedure — It should be impressed upon Magistrates that the whole object of and only excuse for proceedings under Sec 145 is the prevention of a breach of the peace supposed to be imminent and that the procedure to be followed in disposing of such cases is that laid down in section 145 subsection (4) of the Code which must be strictly observed. It should be the primary aim of the inquiring officer therefore to arrive at his decision with the utmost promptitude consistent with an adequate investigation into the dispute before him and he should be specially careful not to permit the proceedings to assume the complexion of a civil suit or in any way to countenance an endeavour on the part of either party to secure any advantage for the purposes of civil litigation.

The trying Magistrate should be in a position to insist upon the taking up of the case on the date fixed for hearing and it should not be necessary to grant adjournment after adjournment simply because the parties are not given due notice of the proceedings or by reason of the proceedings themselves being inaccurate or incomplete. Once the case is commenced, the hearing should be continued de die in diem until the Magistrate is in a position to arrive at a decision but in doing so he must remember that the sole object of his inquiry is to determine if possible the fact of actual possession and that even in the case of an ex parte proceeding, there must be some recorded evidence to justify the order passed by him —Cal G R & C O pp 10 11 Sastu Sahu v Nathani 6 P L T 258 26 Cr L J 105

The sole procedure in an inquiry under section 145 by a Magistrate is as to who was in actual possession of the land in dispute and a Magistrate should not deal with such proceeding as if it were a civil suit by framing several issues and trying them—35 Cal 795

It is incumbent on Magistrates to dispose of proceedings under this section as quickly as possible and therefore the procedure of a summons case is to be followed and not that of a warrant case—Moti Singh v Dhanukdhari 24 Cr L J 595 see also Biswanath v Shrinanand 2 P L T 330 72 Cr L J 430 11 Cr L J 76 and Ram Chandra v Monohur 21 Cal 29 where the procedure of a summons case has been recommended. In another Calcutta case it has been remarked that in cases dealing with taking securities for keeping the peace or for good behaviour as to cases of public parties and receive evidence—In re Dyawappa, 17 Bom L R. 382 16 Cr. L. R. 434. An order under this section without taking evidence is invalid and must be set aside—6 C W. J 73, Gagin v. Karimuddin, 25 C W N 1007 23 Cr L J 199, 16 W R. 13. A Magistrate will be acting illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction if instead of taking the evidence tendered by the parties he proceeds to the spot and decides the case only on the statements of witnesses picked up by himself—Khubi v Darbari, 2 P L T. 267 An order passed by a Magistrate on the basis of his own knowledge without recording any evidence, and relying solely on the evidence in another case is invalid—25 O C 148 So also, an order passed merely on a consideration of the written statements and without taking any evidence is invalid and must be set aside—34 Cal 840, 8 C W. N 642 Similarly an order under this section without giving either party an opportunity of adducing oral evidence as to possession is illegal and liable to be set aside—Sakhajur v Athadi 21 C W N 928 19 Cr L J 108 The Magistrate must consider both oral and documentary evidence in the case—Kailash v Jas Narain 1 P L T 291 21 Cr L J 601, Hanuman v Sheo Chandra, 2 P L T 333

It is not open to a Magistrate to refuse the evidence tendered to him—29 Mad 561 The Magistrate's act in preventing the objector from producing evidence to prove his case constitutes such a grave irregularity as to amount to an abuse of jurisdiction, and the Magistrate's order is in consequence open to revision—1902 P R 23 The Magistrate is bound to grant adjournment for the production of important evidence, if he refuses to do so, his order is liable to be set aside—Biswambhar v Amiruddin, 25 C W N 602, 22 Cr L J 335 If the evidence rejected is a material document affecting possession of a party, its rejection might furnish a good ground of grievance to that party—Udit Narayan v Sundarman, 20 Cr L J 234 (Pat)

The record must show the ground of rejection of evidence A general remark in an order that the oral evidence is not reliable, without referring to it and without giving any reason is not a proper disposal of the case on the evidence. It amounts to a refusal to exercise the jurisdiction vested in a Magistrate and is remediable by the High Court in revision—Lakhpal v Emperor, 4 P L T 579

The words 'receive all such evidence as may be produced' have been substituted for the words 'receive the evidence produced'. This shows that the Magistrate is now bound to receive all the evidence produced by the parties and has no discretion to refuse any evidence. * In order to meet certain difficulties which have arisen in connection with the words 'receive the evidence produced by them' in section 145 (4) we have made an amendment adopting the phraseology of section 244 (1) — Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

Examination of witnesses — The Magistrate is bound to examine the witnesses tendered in support of the respective claims to possession of the land in dispute—6 M H C R App 4 9 W R 64. An order passed without examining the witnesses is without jurisdiction—Marudanayakam v Md Rowthen 17 Cr L J 217 (Mad) 17 C W N 771

So also an order passed on the evidence of a person who was not a witness of any of the parties is bad—8 C W N 719 Fateh Sher Khan v Crown 1916 P R 4

Under the old law a mere refusal by the Magistrate to examine a particular witness in a proceeding under this section was not necessarily a ground of interference by the High Court—30 Cal 508. A Magistrate was not bound to examine all the witnesses adduced by the parties but could limit the number for good and sufficient reasons. He had a discretion in the matter of examining witnesses—3 C L J 478 (explaining 31 Cal 685) 16 Cal 513. Therefore where a Magistrate after examining ten of the witnesses produced by a party refused to examine any further witnesses on the ground that the evidence sought to be adduced was worthless it was held that the Magistrate had not acted without jurisdiction—24 All 315

The present Amendment of this subsection however makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to examine all the witnesses produced by the parties, and leaves no discretion to him in this matter

But the Court has undoubted jurisdiction to curtail the number of unnecessary witnesses upon the ground that their examination will delay and possibly defeat the ends of justice though he cannot arbitrarily restrict the number of witnesses that a party wishes to examine—Bisuanath v Shivanand 2 P L T 330 -- Cr L J 430 Bahidunnissa v Pichit Lal 23 Cr L J 954 (Pat)

Summons to witnesses — See sub section (9) and notes thereunder

Admission by party — If one of the parties admits that the other is in possession, the Judge is not bound to take any evidence—Gangadharani v Sankarappa 9 M L T 91 1- Cr L J 47. Although it is necessary ordinarily to record evidence in a case under this section before passing final orders it cannot be said that it is indispensable to do so when the case is completely given up by the opposite party. An admission by the

Mukhtear that his client had no actual possession is sufficient to dispense with evidence—7 C W N 351

Withdrawal of proceedings —Where after proceedings under this section had been properly instituted the first party examined some witnesses and then represented to the Court that he would conduct the case in the Civil Court and gave an undertaking not to enter upon the said land until the matter should have been settled by the Civil Court whereupon the Magistrate passed an order reciting the terms of the petition and declaring the second party to be in possession held that the omission by the Magistrate to take evidence on behalf of the second party or to record a formal finding as to possession did not vitiate the order—Yar Mohammad v Hayat Mohammad, 18 Cr I J 1024 (Cal)

414 Inquiry by Subordinate Magistrate —The inquiry contemplated by this section is a personal inquiry by the Magistrate who makes the order. Therefore an order under this section based upon the report of a Subordinate Magistrate made after inquiry by such Magistrate is illegal—4 M H C R App 20. Though Sec 148 enables a Magistrate acting under this section to depute a Subordinate Magistrate to make a local investigation he ought not to depute to such Subordinate Magistrate the whole investigation under this section but on the receipt of the report of such Magistrate should himself take written statements from the parties and receive the evidence produced by them and conclude the investigation—7 Weir 218

If a Magistrate omits to take evidence as required by clause (4) but refers it to a Subordinate Magistrate to report thereon his order based on such evidence alone is made without jurisdiction and must be set aside—31 Mad 82. But in a later Madras case it has been held that the order based on the report of a Sub Magistrate is not without jurisdiction. The essential requisite to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate is that he must be satisfied about the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. His subsequent action is a matter of procedure and not of jurisdiction—Jagannatha v Venkatasopalakrishna 37 M L J 589 20 Cr L J 773 (dissenting from 31 Mad 82)

415 Evidence recorded by predecessor —Since a proceeding under this section is an inquiry within the meaning of Sec 4 (k) a Magistrate may act on evidence taken by his predecessor by virtue of sec 350. The decision in 23 W R. 62 is no longer good law

416 Reference to arbitrators —This section requires the Magistrate himself to receive the evidence adduced by the parties and on a consideration thereof to come to a decision. The procedure laid down by this section does not contemplate that the question as to who is in actual possession should be delegated even by consent of parties to arbitrators—Banqary

v. Hriday 32 Cal 552, Hamidul v Sheikh Atail 2 P L J 86, 18 Cr L J 145, Jamuna Das v Hanuman 25 C W N 719, 22 Cr L J 623. But where the parties themselves agreed that the question of possession should be decided by an arbitrator and the matter was thereupon referred to arbitration the Magistrate was bound to take into consideration the finding of fact by the arbitrators as to which party was in actual possession—Taramoni v Gjanendra 7 C W N 461. So also where the dispute was referred to arbitration by consent of parties both of whom accepted the award that followed it was not open to the Magistrate to insist on the production of evidence—Haladhar v Bulaki 3 P L J 248, 19 Cr L J 266.

Where the parties themselves applied that the matter should be referred to arbitration and the Magistrate made an order in terms of the award the parties were not entitled afterwards to object to the course and the High Court declined to interfere in revision—Janki v Kalika Misra 6 C W N cix.

In Uttam Singh v Jodhan Rai 3 Pat 288, A I R 1924 Pat 589, Foster J. considered all the above cases and came to the conclusion that a distinction should be drawn between cases in which the reference to arbitration was made for the purpose of deciding existing and past possession, and cases in which the reference was made for deciding future possession. The scheme of an inquiry under subsection (4) of sec. 145 is retrospective and not prospective that is the Magistrate is to consider who was in possession at the date of the institution of the proceedings or within two months prior thereto and not who is entitled to possession and will henceforth be in possession of the property in dispute. Therefore if the reference to arbitration is made for the purpose of deciding the question as to who was in possession at the date of the institution of the proceedings such a reference is not improper and the Magistrate can pass an order on the basis of the award of the arbitrators. But if the reference is made for the purpose of deciding future possession and the arbitrators give an award to the effect that the disputed lands will be divided among the parties the award is prospective and the Magistrate cannot pass any order on the basis of that award.

In the same case it has also been decided (at p. 794) that if the parties refer the disputes to arbitration and the arbitrators give an award it shows that the parties have come to a settlement of their disputes and that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace. In such a case the Magistrate should pass an order under subsection (5) dropping the proceedings and cannot pass a final order (declaring the possession of the parties in terms of the award) under subsection (6).

417 Decision as to possession — An order under this section merely declaring one of the parties to be in possession without deciding and giving a finding as to who was in actual possession of the land in dispute on the date of the preliminary order is one made entirely without jurisdiction and consequently void—35 Cal 795 Peria Subba v Sinna Subba 45 M L J 56 23 Cr L J 670

Where the Magistrate made no attempt to deal with the question of possession but made some general observation in regard to the ownership of the property and declared the petitioner to be in possession held that the order was an obvious infringement of the provisions of this section—Shukulathi v Gulam Moideen, 1922 M W. N 689 16 L W 338 .

If it is difficult for a Magistrate trying a case under this section to come to a conclusion as to the fact of possession, the wise and proper course to be adopted is to pass an order under Sec 146 Where a Magistrate in such a case passes an order under Sec 145 the High Court in revision has the power to make the order which the lower Court ought to have made and to alter the order under Sec 145 into one under Sec 146 of the Code—14 Cal 361 22 Cal 297

418 Possession at the date of the order —The question of possession has to be determined with reference to a specified point of time viz the date of the initial order or in the case of forcible dispossession a date within two months next preceding such order—32 Cal 1093 The rulings in 11 Cal 365 12 Cal 521 12 Cal 539 20 W R 51 15 Bom 152 18 Mad 41 13 All 362 are no longer good law .

The actual possession of the land in dispute is the only subject for inquiry The fact of symbolical possession delivered under the C P Code has no bearing on the Magisterial inquiry—Ramalingam v Raja of Ramnad 16 Cr L J 736 (Mad) Promoda v Khelra 25 Cr L J 1104 (Cal) Where a party is given symbolical possession of certain lands, and shortly afterwards proceedings under sec 145 are instituted in respect of the same land it is incumbent on the Magistrate to go into the fact of actual possession between the two dates and consider the evidence tendered on that question before passing the final order—Hazari Khan v Nafar Chandra 22 C W N 479 18 Cr L J 718 Where it was found that notwithstanding the delivery of symbolical possession given to the auction purchasers (second party) the judgment debtor and his heirs and representatives (first party) had continued all along to be in possession and were in actual possession on the day on which proceedings under this section were instituted but the Magistrate made his final order in favour of the second party held that the order made in favour of the second party could not be supported as they were not in actual possession at the date of the order—Shahabaj v Bhajahari 49 Cal 177 (180) 24 Cr L J 875

A Magistrate should find/as to who was in possession at the date of the order, not at any date anterior to that although previous possession

may be a guide to his finding as to peaceful and actual possession on the date of the order—T Hampanna v Gangamma 16 Cr L J 239 (Mad)

Where the Magistrate found one party to have been in possession a few days before the date of the preliminary order, and confirmed his possession without finding who was in possession on the date of the preliminary order itself but the interval between the two dates was very short (viz 5 days only), and there was nothing on the record to show that there was any change of possession in that short interval and the party confirmed in possession had a decree of Civil Court declaring him entitled to possession held that the order of the Magistrate was valid—Id Hussain v Pachayappa 42 M L J 147 23 Cr L J 9. But where the Magistrate declared possession in favour of the opposite party as evidenced by certain documents of title relating to a period as old as 10 years prior to the proceeding without taking further evidence oral or documentary to see whether that possession continued up to the date of proceeding the High Court set aside the order as made without jurisdiction and contrary to the provisions of this sub-section—Juthan v Ram Narayan 18 C W N 700 15 Cr L J 202

Land under Water —Where the Magistrate made the final order in favour of one party finding that as there could not be any act of peaceful possession within two months of the date of the proceeding owing to the land being under water the possession in the current year was to be presumed in favour of the man who was in possession during the previous years it was held that the order was in direct contravention of this section and the Magistrate should have passed an order under Sec 146—Satyendra v Arishnadhan 20 C W N 1014 18 Cr L J 80

419 Forcible and wrongful possession —The Magistrate's duty is to find peaceful possession. Ouster of a person lawfully in possession by a trespasser does not confer on the latter any rights which can be recognised under this section. The Magistrate must look to the possession which may be termed peaceful. He must go back to the time when the present dispute originated and not to the result of the dispute itself—4 Cal 417. The recent occupation of a trespasser is not a possession which a Magistrate can direct the party to retain under this section. The possession is still with the person ousted by the trespasser and an order directing him to have possession and the trespasser to be dispossessed is the proper order to be made—1876 P R 8. Where it appeared that one of the parties within two months prior to the proceedings obtained sanction from the Municipality and proceeded to dig a tank on the land in dispute to the exclusion of another party who was then found to be in possession it was held that it was forcible and wrongful dispossession within the meaning of this section, and possession must be deemed to be in the party dispossessed—Manmatha Nath v Ganga 20 C W N 978 17 Cr L J 449 But where the Magistrate finds that on the date when the proceedings under this section were instituted and for more than two months preceding that date the members of the first party have been and are in possession although the members of the second party obtained delivery of possession of the property through Court a year ago held that the Magistrate should pass his order in favour of the first party—Shahabaf v Bhajahari 49 Cal 177 (181) 24 Cr L J 875

If a person has been turned out of possession and submits to the ouster, and the other party whether rightfully or wrongfully is in peaceful possession a Magistrate will not go behind the period when possession may be found to have become peaceable—1 C L R 136 For the point for inquiry under this section is not whether any of the claimants has taken possession of the subject of dispute by force but whether the struggle for it has ceased leaving it in the hands of one of them If the struggle has ceased the party in whose hands it remains is in actual possession which the Magistrate is bound to recognise under this section—1897 P. R 5 If however the struggle for possession is still proceeding between the party who has taken forcible possession and the rightful owner or if neither party can show his complete control over the subject at the time when the proceedings are taken neither party is to be regarded as in possession and the Magistrate is to take action under section 146—Ibid

It is not necessary that actual force or violence should have been used to some person before the dispossession can be said to be 'forcible' when the dispossession of a person is effected by a show of criminal force that person is said to be forcibly dispossessed—Sila Nath v Harvey 25 C W N 601 22 Cr L J 637

This sub section contemplates that the dispossession should be forcible as well as wrongful the mere wrongful dispossession without any evidence to show that it was forcible as well does not come within the purview of this section The remedy of the party wrongfully dispossessed lies only in the Civil Court—H v Low & Co v Manindra Chandra Nandy, 3 Pat 809 (813 814) 26 Cr L J 268

The words wrongfully dispossessed mean dispossessed without due warrant of law or dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law even though the dispossessor be the rightful owner—Bai Jiba v Chandulal 27 Bom L R 1353 A I R. 1926 Bom 91

Date of forcible possession —It is not sufficient for the Magistrate to come to a general finding that certain fields are in the possession of one party and certain others in the possession of the other, and that the latter has taken wrongful and forcible possession The date of such forcible possession must be determined and unless there is a finding that the forcible possession occurred in the case of all the fields at the time same there must be a finding as to the date of the possession with regard to each field separately—Kaku v Harnaman, 1917 P W R 28

420 Attachment —An order for attachment under the proviso to clause (4) would remain in force only pending the Magistrate's decision, and not until a decree or order of the Civil Court is obtained—Farid v. Piru, 8 S L R 207 16 Cr L J 235

Where a land was attached under this section and the crops standing on the land were sold and the sale proceeds kept in deposit in the Court, but the preliminary order was afterwards cancelled by the Magistrate on the ground that there was no immediate danger of a breach of the peace, the Magistrate could order the sale proceeds to be restored to the persons who raised the crops—Suryanarayana v Ankinced 47 Mad 713 (715) 146 M L J 565 25 Cr L J 978, Mahalakshmi v Subbarajadu 17 L W. 429, 24 Cr L J 783 or he could order the money to be kept in deposit in the Court until one party or the other obtained an order in his favour—Suryanarayana v Ankinced 47 Mad 713 (716), Chenga Reddi v Ramasamy, 16 Cr L J 104 (Mad)

Moveable property —This section does not authorise the Magistrate to attach moveables—Ratanlal 891 Gopala v Krishnaswamy 27 M L T. 234 21 Cr L J 73 Arjun v Chandan 24 O C 167 22 Cr L J 625 Gajraj v Emp, 20 A L J 906

Postponement of proceedings —A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order postponing sine die a proceeding under this section, at the same time retaining under attachment the property covered by the proceeding on grounds extraneous to the proceeding—13 C W N 104

421 Appointment of receiver —A Magistrate cannot appoint a receiver under proviso to clause (4) of this section before the commencement of the inquiry He can do so only under Sec 146 and after the conclusion of the inquiry—1910 M W N 821 Meena Lal v Emp 3 P. L J 147 19 Cr L J 249 Dasrath v Tarachand 21 N L R 191 26 Cr L J 1378 Even if a Magistrate appoints a receiver under this section such receiver will only be an agent or servant of the Magistrate acting under his order The right to attach carries with it the right to take the necessary steps for custody and management of the property, and the Magistrate may appoint a receiver for that purpose—Srinivasa v Sathayappa 13 Cr L J 295 (Mad) but the power of such receiver will not be the same as that of a receiver appointed under sec 146 infra His duty will be simply to take and keep possession of the properties attached and to make an inventory thereof—Gopala v Krishnaswamy, 27 M L T 234 21 Cr L J 73

is proceeding and only when he is satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace still exists. The High Court in revision cannot appoint a receiver, because the inquiry is already over and there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace, as the Magistrate's order has put one party in possession of the property in dispute—Marudayya v Shanmugasundara, 49 M L J 593 A I R 1926 Mad 139

422. Joint Inquiry —(1) One dispute as to several plots —When the dispute is one, the fact that it embraces several distinct parcels of land does not necessitate an independent proceeding in respect of each. To require the Magistrate to hold separate proceedings in respect of each plot of land claimed by each of the disputants, would be to require him to undertake what would be almost impossible from the intricate character of such proceedings. His findings should naturally be directed to possession of particular plots but the fact that he did not take separate proceedings in respect to each plot would not invalidate his entire proceedings—Krishna Kamini v Abdul Jubbar, 30 Cal 155 (F B) at pp 185 200, , Sajant Kanta v Shamsher 24 Cr L J 235 (Cal). Although it may be desirable under such circumstances to deal with each dispute relating to each of several plots separately it is impossible to extend to such proceedings the strict rule of procedure observed in civil actions—6 C W N 206. To draw up one proceeding with respect to several plots of land claimed to be in the possession of different persons would not be bad if it was shown that none of the parties had been precluded from giving any evidence and no party was prejudiced by the Magistrate's action in not taking separate proceedings—5 C W N 544, Gajadhar v Thakur Singh 26 Cr L J. 424 (Pat)

(2) Different disputes as to different subjects —Where the parties are found to be in possession of different and separate pieces of land, e. g., when the dispute is alleged to exist in 230 villages and each village stands on its own footing, the Magistrate does not exercise proper jurisdiction if he clubs together 230 subjects of dispute and treats them as one. The Magistrate should decide which party is in possession of this or that village, instead of arbitrarily finding that one party was in possession of all the villages—29 Mad 561, 1 S L R 25. When there are independent disputes relating to distinct parcels of land, they ought to be dealt with in separate proceedings—Krishna Kamini v Abdul, 30 Cal 155 (F B) at p 200.

(3) Different claims —In a dispute regarding possession of 708 bighas of land belonging to a Zemindari the parties to the dispute were persons interested as tenants under the Zemindari on the one side, and on the other side persons claiming under the same Zemindar to be interested in various portions of the land as their mawasi jote in different quantities and under interests acquired at different times, and the Magistrate tried the case together and passed an order in favour of the former, directing that they as a body should remain in possession until evicted therefrom by order of a Civil Court it was held that the Magistrate ought not to have passed an order declaring one set of persons in possession as against another set but should have distinctly specified which persons were entitled as against which and to which portion of the land in dispute. Otherwise it would render it necessary for the party out of possession to make as defendants in the civil suit a multitude of persons who were by terms of the order held to be in possession. The proceedings were set aside—15 Cal 31

(4) Where parties in all cases are not the same —Where the parties in several cases under sec. 145 are not the same the Magistrate is not competent to try all the cases together although the parties consent to the adoption of such a procedure. Evidence already taken in one case may be accepted in the other cases but the cases must be tried separately—4 C W N 748

There should be separate and full inquiry in each case —Where two cases are inquired together the Magistrate must come to a separate finding after full inquiry into each case and the decision of one case should not be applied in coming to a decision in respect of the other. Where two investigations were before the Magistrate, who, after conducting a regular inquiry in the first case and coming to a proper decision remarked in the other case that because the lands were adjacent he had taken the evidence in the two cases together and found it unnecessary to continue the inquiry further it was held that the parties in the second case were entitled to a full inquiry—8 W R 63

423 Subsection (5)—Addition of parties —This clause provides for interested parties coming in even if they have not been served with notice—Bhura Khan v Fakira 25 Cr L J 159 (Nag). Clause (5) does not enable a Magistrate to add parties to the proceeding. It merely enables a stranger to come in and show that no such dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning any land etc. existed. He does not become, nor can thereby be made a party to the dispute which he seeks to show has never existed—3 C W N 329. The person interested who is empowered under clause (5) to show that no dispute exists or has existed does not come in for the purpose of joining in the proceeding but for the purpose of bringing it to an end—Krishna Kamini v Abdul Jubbar 30 Cal 155 (F B) at p 199. A third person is allowed to come in under clause (5) only for the purpose of showing that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace really existed or exists but it is not clear whether such person can be made a party to the proceedings—5 C W N 900

Where a person applies on the ground that he is interested in the land in dispute as a tenant of a part of the property in dispute and there is nothing to show that that is not the case, he should be allowed to come in and show under clause (5) that there is no dispute—37 Cal 285.

But as he does not become a party to the proceedings, no order can be passed under sub-section (6) in favour of such person, and the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to declare any land to be in the possession of such person—Radhamohan v Naimuddin, 19 Cr. L. J. 653 (Cal) : Rasik v Jagabandhu, 25 C. W. N. 214 22 Cr. L. J. 502.

For further notes on addition of parties, see Note 401 ante

424. Cancellation of preliminary order.—The apprehension of a breach of the peace is the first condition necessary to give the Magistrate jurisdiction under this section and if it is found that there is no longer any such apprehension, the Magistrate's jurisdiction ceases. He is then bound to cancel the initial order and stay all further proceedings under this clause—Madhbandu v Sadakati, 38 C. L. J. 284 A. I. R. 1923 Cal 577.

So also, the mere fact that in a prior criminal case between the parties a Magistrate expressed his opinion that one of the parties was in possession, is not conclusive as to possession and can in no sense be said to have settled the dispute between the parties; and on the basis of such a decision a Court cannot stay the proceedings started under this section—Abdul Shakur v Abu Sajeed 6 P. L. T. 710 26 Cr. L. J. 870 A. I. R. 1925 Pat 593.

A Magistrate can cancel his preliminary order only on facts being brought to his notice which are sufficient to satisfy him that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, and therefore the cancellation of proceedings merely on the ground that one party admits that the other party was in actual possession of a land in dispute, is without jurisdiction and should be set aside—Tara Charan v Bengal Coal Co. Ltd., 13 C. W. N. 125. The Magistrate can cancel a preliminary order only when the parties are in a position to give positive evidence that there is no likelihood of a breach of the peace. The mere absence of a finding by the Magistrate in respect of a likelihood of a breach of the peace is not sufficient—Ranada Ranjan v Bharat Chandra, 25 C. W. N. 215 22 Cr. L. J. 484. The information that there is no likelihood of a breach of the peace need not be confined to what the parties give under sub-section (5). If the Magistrate is satisfied, whatever the source of his information may be, that the likelihood of a breach of peace does not exist, he can cancel the order passed under sub-section (1) and stay the proceedings—Manindra v. Barada Kanti, 30 Cal. 112, Kamalammal v. Vayu Routhier, 4 L. W. 57 : 17 Cr. L. J. 138, Santokh v Ram Singh, 2 Lah. 364. 23 Cr. L. J. 292. The Magistrate's power to drop the proceedings is not limited to the circumstances mentioned in clause (5). He is entitled to drop the proceedings whenever he is satisfied that there is no further likelihood of a breach of the peace, without giving an opportunity to the parties to show by evidence that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace—Donepudi Narasiah v Venkiah 49 M L J 784 22 L W 524 A Magistrate will not be acting illegally if he drops the proceedings after being satisfied upon the information given by a third party that the dispute no longer exists—Suryanarajan v Ankinced 47 Mad 713 (715) 46 M L J 565 25 Cr L J 978. Krishna Kamini v Abdul 30 Cal 155 (161) And in so dropping the proceedings at the instance of a third party the Magistrate is not bound to record the evidence of the witnesses of one of the parties who might have shown by evidence that a dispute still existed If the Magistrate is able to act on a police report or other information in starting proceedings under this section there is no reason why he should not be able to stay further proceedings on similar information without being obliged to record such evidence as the parties may produce with the same formality as he would have done if he had gone on with his inquiry instead of dropping it—Suryanarajan v Ankinced 47 Mad 713 (715) 35 M L T 68 25 Cr L J 978

When a Magistrate cancels an order under this sub section he has no jurisdiction to allow one of the parties to reap the crops to the exclusion of the other—3 C L J 573 When the Magistrate has cancelled his preliminary order and dropped the proceedings he becomes functus officio and has no jurisdiction to direct the delivery of the property or of its sale proceeds (e g where the property is sold being perishable) to one of the contending parties The proper course under these circumstances is to retain the property or its sale proceeds in court, until one of the parties obtains an order of a Civil Court—Donepudi v Venkiah 49 M L J 784 22 L W 524 Chenga v Ramasamy 16 Cr I J 104 (Mad) Dasrath v Tarachand 11 M L R 191 26 Cr I J 1378

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to cancel the order of his predecessor—2 Weir 108 Where a proceeding under sec 145 has been drawn up by a Deputy Magistrate the District Magistrate can cancel the proceeding after transferring the case to his own file and on a consideration of the facts and after hearing the objections of the parties—Tara Charan v. Bengal Coal Co Ltd 13 C W N 125

Effect of cancellation —An order striking off proceedings under this section does not amount to an adjudication of the question of possession for the purpose of sub section (6)—30 Cal 117

Fresh proceedings —When proceedings under this section are struck off on the ground that there is no immediate apprehension of a breach of the peace the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to revise the proceedings He can only start fresh proceedings upon fresh materials which must be specific relating to the lands in dispute A general state of affairs in the locality is insufficient—Khuda v Darbari 2 P L T 267 22 Cr L J 481

 If it is intended to take fresh proceedings upon new materials it is necessary for the Magistrate to record such materials in his order renewing the proceedings—6 C W N 923

425 Clause (6)—Final Order —

Contents —Whether sections 366 and 367 do or do not apply to proceedings under sec 145 the Magistrate in his final order must give reasons for his decision sufficient to enable the High Court to determine whether he has complied with the terms of sub section (4) and directed his mind to the consideration of the evidence adduced before him and whether he has acted with jurisdiction in making his final order. A statement in the final order that the witnesses have been examined pleaders have been heard on both sides and oral and documentary evidence of both parties has been considered is of a stereotyped nature applicable to any and every case and does not enable the High Court to understand what in fact the evidence was or to say that the mind of the trying Magistrate had been properly and sufficiently directed to its consideration. Such a final order is bad and the case must be retried—Bhuban Chandra v Nibaran 49 Cal 187 (189) 25 C W N 887 22 Cr L J 499 Peria Subba v Sinna Subbaya 31 M L T 312 45 M L J 36 23 Cr L J 670 Mothahar Ali v Lslogue 39 C L J 366 25 Cr L J 1115 Ishan Chandra v Hridai 29 C W N 475 26 Cr L J 915 41 C L J 357

Signature —A Magistrate should sign his name in full to a judicial order under this section and should also note his official position—12 C W N 771

Who can pass order —The jurisdiction to make a final order under this section is not personal to the Magistrate who initiates the proceedings and a District Magistrate may of his own motion transfer a case under this chapter to another Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him, and the latter can pass the final order—10 C W N 1095 22 Cal 898

But where a Magistrate who heard a case under this section handed over his charge to another Magistrate and was transferred to another district and subsequently delivered the final order in the case held that once he had handed over the charge and was transferred to another district he became functus officio and ceased to have any jurisdiction in the case. He therefore acted without jurisdiction in delivering the final order—Jagabandhu v Jagabandhu 38 C L J 201 25 Cr L J 192 (following 3 All 563)

Or should be treated as being —We think that this subsection should apply not only to the case of a party in actual possession but also to one who is to be treated as being in possession under the proviso to sub-section (4), and we have amended sub section (6) in this sense — Report of the Select Committee of 1916

426 May restore to possession etc — Power has been given to restore to possession a party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed — Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) We think that this is a logical carrying out of the provision contained in the first proviso to sub section (4) — Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Prior to this amendment it was held in several cases that the only order which a Magistrate was competent to pass under this section was one declaring one of the parties to be entitled to possession but he had no jurisdiction to deliver possession or to oust one person and place another in possession of the property—Tulshi Ram v Alwar Ahmed 37 All 654 13 A L J 93 16 Cr L J 14 27 All 300 Shcorani v Baij Nath 14 A L J 146 17 Cr L J 145 1 C W N 696 14 C W N 78 4 Cal 339 These cases are no longer of any authority

427 Order in respect of joint possession —Where in a proceeding under sec 145 in respect of a dispute concerning some land the Magistrate finds that one party has been in possession of a portion of the land in dispute and the other party in possession of the rest and the possession of the one is not likely to interfere with the enjoyment of the possession of the remaining portion by the other the Magistrate can in the exercise of jurisdiction vested in him under this section maintain both parties in possession of their respective portions and an order of attachment under sec 146 is unnecessary—Kangali Das v Muti Lal 11 C W N 743 Thus where the Magistrate finds that each party was in possession of separate rooms in the same building he is competent to pass an order that the separate possession of each party should continue —Devji v Golla 2 Weir 108 Where the component parts of the subject of dispute are quite divisible from each other it is quite possible to make an order confirming the possession of one of the parties in regard to one of those parts and it is not competent for the Magistrate to make an order for attachment of the whole property—Sadar Ali v Abdul Karim 5 C W N 710 If however the subject matter of dispute is one and indivisible the proper order to make is an order of attachment under sec 146 Thus in a proceeding under sec 145 regarding a dispute between two parties in respect of certain collieries it appeared that the first party were in possession of the building which contained the office where the business of the collieries was conducted and the cashbooks and the papers of the business were kept and the second party were in possession of the pits wharves and tramway of the colliery The Magistrate passed an order in favour of the second party considering that party to be in actual possession It was held as the subject matter of dispute was indivisible and as the second was not in possession of the whole of the colliery, the order of the Magistrate was bad, since its effect would be to place the second party in possession of that portion (viz the building) which was in the possession of the first party. The proper order of the Magistrate was one under sec 146 attaching the whole property—Katras Jheria Coal Co v Sib Krishno Daw, 22 Cal 297. Similarly where there was a dispute concerning certain immoveable and moveable property and the Magistrate took proceedings under this section and gave possession of the house to one party, except two rooms in which the Magistrate locked up the moveables until the rights of the parties in respect of the moveables were determined by the Civil Court, held that the order was illegal—Mahadevi v Beni Prasad, 42 All 214. 18 A L J 171 21 Cr L J 242

428 Effect of order—An order under this section does not bar a suit for ejectment under the Agra Tenancy Act. The expression eviction in the due course of law is equally applicable to ejectment proceedings under Ch V of the Agra Tenancy Act and to ejectment under a civil Court decree—Iqbal Ahmed v Suraj Balli A I R 1925 All 210. Although a Magistrate's order under this section confers no title, the fact of possession remains and the person in possession can only be evicted by a person who can prove a better right to possession himself—4 Bom L R 167, 29 Cal 187 (P C). The order throws upon the person contending its validity the burden of proving his title. The onus is not upon the person in possession to show that the judgment in his favour is right, it is for his opponent to show that it is wrong and where and why it is wrong—4 Bom L R 167. The onus is on the plaintiff to show that the person in possession under the order of the Magistrate has no right to possession—Manindra v Saradindu, 23 C W N 593.

Appointment of Receiver by Civil Court—The fact that there is an order under this section does not bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to appoint a Receiver under sec 503 of the C P Code 1882 (=O XL of the Code of 1908). The C P Code and the powers of the Civil Court under that Code are in no way fettered by an order that may be passed by a Magistrate under this section. The Magistrate's order under this section is only intended to control any period up to the time when the Civil Court takes seizin of the matter—Barkatunnissa v Abdul Aziz 22 All 214.

Mamlatdar's order as to possession—An order under this section does not take away the jurisdiction of the Mamlatdar or any other Civil Court to decide who was in actual possession before the date of the order—26 Bom 353.

Suit under Sec 9 Specific Relief Act—An unsuccessful party in a proceeding under this section cannot be said to have been dispossessed, and therefore he has no cause of action to bring a suit under sec 9 of the

Specific Relief Act—7 C L J 517 But where the plaintiff was forcibly dispossessed by the defendant before the institution of proceedings under this section and the trespasser's possession was maintained by the Magistrate the plaintiff is entitled to sue under sec 9 of the Specific Relief Act—30 All 331

Evidentiary value—Orders of Magistrates under this section are admissible in evidence to show the fact that such orders were made They are also evidence of the following facts all of which appear from the orders themselves viz who the parties in dispute were what the land in dispute was and who was declared entitled to retain possession For this purpose and to this extent such orders are admissible in evidence for and against every one when the fact of possession at the date of order has to be ascertained If the order refers to a map that map is admissible in evidence to render the order intelligible—29 Cal 187 (P C)

429 Orders which cannot be made under this section—The final order should declare which party is in possession and should state that he will continue in possession until evicted therefrom in due course of law, and should forbid all disturbance of such possession An order in these terms I warn the opposite party not to interfere with the possession of the first party in any way is not one in sufficient compliance with the law—Khuli v Daruori 2 P L T 267 22 Cr L J 491 Where possession is found to be in one party the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to grant to the other party permission to cultivate the lands in dispute pending any necessary action that might be subsequently brought—18 W R 27 A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a division of crops on the land between the parties—8 C L J 24 Nor can he order that a person shall be maintained in possession until he has reaped the crops and then he shall give way to another—1 C I R 136

Where a Magistrate found that the disputed land was in the possession of the second party and declared that party to be in possession of the land but directed that two pathways on the land should be made over to the first party held that there was nothing in this section which gave the Magistrate power to pass an order of this kind—Asit Mohan v Sarat Chandra 17 C W N 793 14 Cr L J 391 But the Bombay High Court dissents from this ruling and holds that in proceedings under this section, it is competent to the Magistrate not only to award possession of the land in dispute but also to grant a right of way to one of the parties If the Magistrate has power to put the petitioner in possession of a certain portion of a land he is also empowered (under sec 147 if not under sec 145) to give them a lesser right viz the right to pass over a strip in that land that a passage should be left, for the purpose of such tapping in a wall which was being built by the second party—Jablat v Fmp 3 P L J 316 19 Cr I J 656

A Magistrate is not competent to pass an order directing the method by which the possession is to be exercised or the agency by which the person in possession is to collect the profits—36 Cal 986 He cannot pass an order to the effect that one of several joint owners should not use the land in such a manner as to cause annoyance to another—2 C L R 62

430 Supplementary order without notice —Proceedings under this section were drawn up in respect of certain premises consisting of a dalan a hotel and a privy and the Magistrate made his final order with regard to the first two Subsequently the omission in respect of the privy being brought to his notice by one of the parties the Magistrate declared that party a possession of it without notice to the other party It was held that the order in respect of the privy should not have been made without hearing the other party—Natalar v Bireskhar 22 C W N 552 19 Cr L J 732

431 Order in respect of land not covered by proceedings —In a proceeding under this section the Magistrate is bound to ascertain and define the land in dispute and he has no jurisdiction to pass an order in respect of lands which were not covered by the initiatory proceeding—7 C W N 558 Sukhari v Ram Khelauri 4 P I T 372 21 Cr L J 309 Uttam Singh v Jodhan Rai 3 Pat 288 (295)

A Magistrate would also be exceeding his jurisdiction if his final order covers plots of land not included in the preliminary order passed under sub section (1)—11 C W N xlii

432 Alteration of proceedings —If a Magistrate after having initiated proceedings under sec 145 afterwards finds that the dispute is as regards a right of way over a land rather than regarding the possession of the land he can alter the proceedings under sec 145 into proceedings under sec 147 and pass an order under the latter section—In re Amarsang 48 Bom 512 (515) 26 Bom L R 436 Anath Bandhu v Wahid Ali 26 Cr L J 558 (Cal)

433 Persons bound by the order —Judicial proceedings cannot bind a person who is not a party to them—3 C W N 379 A final order under sec 145 is not binding on a party on whom no preliminary order was served and who was not given an opportunity to prove his possession over the subject of the dispute—Mugimunnissa v Ahmedunnissa 2 O W N 704 26 Cr L J 1581 An order under this section is binding only on the actual parties to the proceedings Where an order was made between A

on the one side and B and his three tenants on the other the subsequent tenants of B would not be bound by such order and would not be punished for disobeying such order—3 B L R A C 13 A person who is not a party either to the proceedings or to an order under this section is certainly entitled to challenge the propriety of it He may even defy it though only by lawful act and is clearly entitled to show that the existing possession is not of the same nature as it was determined to be in the proceedings—Mahesh v K F 11 O L J 743 26 Cr L J 398 A I R 1925 Oydh 251

But in In re Nathubhai 11 Bom L R 277 it has been held that the parties whom the Magistrate has to deal with are not merely the actual parties to but all persons who may be concerned in the dispute the object being to prevent a breach of the peace Therefore it is not only the actual parties but all parties who may have notice of the proceedings that are bound by the order

An order under this section binds not only the actual parties but their representatives also It is binding on a purchaser from the person against whom it was made and with knowledge of such order—13 Cal 175 It is binding upon all persons who may claim the property through the parties to the proceedings under a title derived subsequent to the order—23 Cal 731

But a person who was merely examined as a witness in the proceeding is not a party bound by an order under this section—Q E v Kuppajyar, 18 Mad 51

434 Duration of the order —An order of the Magistrate is meant to be a temporary order and is to be in operation until one or other of the parties applies for and obtains a determination of his rights in a Civil Court—7 C W N 558 29 Cal 208 It is intended to control only the period up to the time when the Civil Court takes seisin of the matter and passes such order as may be necessary for the protection of the property—22 All 211 This section does not empower a Magistrate to make an order permanently settling the difference of the parties—Mad High Court Firs, 23-6-1893

435 Subsection (7)—Continuation of proceedings —Before the amendment of 1923 this subsection stood as follows —

Proceedings under this section shall not abate by reason of the death of any of the parties thereto

The subsection has now been expanded The Magistrate is now authorised on the death of a party to make his legal representative a party to the proceedings and if necessary to decide whether the representative is—Statement of Objects and Reasons [1, 14

This clause supersedes the decision in 21 Cal 404 where it was held that a son could not be made a party in place of his deceased father

The words may cause show that the Magistrate is not bound to continue the proceedings on the death of a party. The provision in clause (7) is intended to keep alive the jurisdiction of the Court where the danger to the peace still exists inspite of the death of any party to the proceedings. If however the dispute no longer exists and the danger has disappeared the Magistrate has jurisdiction to discontinue the proceedings—Kama'ammal v. Vavu Rowther 4 L W 57 17 Cr L J 138

Death of Petitioner before High Court—The death of the petitioner (who applied for revision of an order of a District Magistrate) during the pendency of the application for revision in the High Court, causes the application to abate. This sub section only applies to proceedings before a Magistrate—Kristen Deo v. Hari Singh 1919 P R 23 20 Cr L J 720
Subharaju v. Ramachandra 4 L W 440 17 Cr L J 389

Sub-section (8) — The Magistrate has been empowered to pass necessary orders for the custody or sale of the property in dispute which is subject to speedy and natural decay—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). Thus if the subject matter of dispute is a crop growing on the land the Magistrate can cause the crop to be sold by auction and the price placed in deposit as was done in Mir Singh v. Makhlan 45 All 404

436 Sub section (9) We have added this subsection on the lines of section 244 (2) —Report of the Joint Committee (1922). Even prior to this amendment there has been a large number of decisions empowering the Magistrate to issue summons to witnesses which are given below

Summons to witnesses —If the parties cannot procure the attendance of witnesses it is the Magistrate's duty to issue summonses for their attendance even though the Code contains no provision for the issue of summonses in this case—18 W R 64 21 Cal 29. When an application for the issue of summonses to witnesses is made at a proper time the Magistrate should not arbitrarily refuse his assistance merely on the ground that the number of witnesses mentioned is large—11 Cal 76 or on the ground that the application for the issue of summonses is vexatious—Gajjuddi v. Aminuddi 18 C W N 94 15 Cr L J 79. This section enjoins on the Magistrate to receive the evidence produced by the parties and to take such further evidence as he thinks necessary. But this does not mean that the parties shall produce their own evidence nor does it absolve the Magistrate from the duty of assisting the parties in procuring the attendance of material witnesses, when it is shewn that their attendance cannot be enforced without such assistance—30 Cal 508. But it is not obligatory on a Magistrate to assist the parties in producing their witnesses and they cannot claim as a matter of right that processes should be issued by the Court to enable them to bring forward their evidence—32 Cal 1093 38 Cal 24 Arjun v Juggar Nath 3 P L T 433 23 Cr L J 275 A Magistrate is not bound to exhaust the processes of the Court in order to enforce the attendance of witnesses that do not appear or cannot be found—Haripada v Sanyasi 17 C W N 144 14 Cr L J 40 Cf the words may if he thinks fit in the subsection

437 Sub section (10) —Power to proceed under Sec 107 —In 35 Cal 117, it has been held that the word shall in subsection 1 (he shall make an order in writing etc) is mandatory and therefore where there is a bona fide dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace the Magistrate is bound to proceed under this section and he has no discretion to act under sec 107 It was proposed by the Amending Bill of 1914 to substitute the word may for shall so as to give the Magistrate a discretion to proceed either under Sec 107 or under Sec 145 The Select Committee of 1916 instead of making the verbal alteration added the present subsection

There may be cases in which it would be necessary to bind parties over under section 107 in order to prevent a breach of the peace even though proceedings under sec 145 had been taken An order under section 145 is no bar to the passing of an order under sec 107—In re Mulhia 36 Mad 313 14 Cr L J 559 K L v Bandi 24 O C 21 22 Cr L J 384

439. In order that the decree of the Civil Court may be binding on the Magistrate, three things are necessary, namely —

(1) First the decree must be recent —It is the duty of the Magistrate to maintain the rights of the parties when such rights have been declared to direct the judgment debtor who raises the plea that the property is debutter to be retained in possession until ousted by a Civil Court but should see that the possession as given by the Nazir is maintained leaving it to the judgment debtor to substantiate his claim as shebait in a Civil Court—In re Chutrapil Singh 5 C L R 200 The Magistrate cannot ignore the decree of the Civil Court on the ground that that Court had no jurisdiction over the property The Magistrate cannot go behind the decision of the Civil Court in the matter and cannot ignore the decree even though the Court passing it had no jurisdiction over the land It is not for the Magistrate to question the validity of a decree that has not been set aside by a competent Court—Abloy Mondal v Basu Rai 27 C W N 267 Tufani v Bibi Umatul 5 P L T 535 A I R 1923 Pat 765 Where a decree holder has obtained delivery of possession under O 21 rule 35 C P Code in execution of his decree the judgment debtor is precluded from raising the question and a Magistrate acts illegally in starting a case under sec 145 of the Crim Pro Code and in not upholding the Civil Court's decree and the delivery of possession given by that Court—Belari v Rani Bhubaneswari 5 P L J 101 Where the Civil Court decree has defined the boundaries of a jalkar right the Magistrate in instituting proceedings under this section ought to follow that decree and not to attempt an explanation of it—6 C W N 167 Where one of the parties to a dispute regarding the land has been actually put in possession of the same by a Civil Court as a result of sale under its decree it is the duty of a Criminal Court to uphold the status of that party as established by the Civil Court—7 C W N 118 Where a decree has been passed regarding the whole or any portion of a disputed land it is the duty of the Magistrate to maintain the decree and he cannot institute proceedings under this section regarding the lands covered by it—16 W R 24 24 W R 17

439. In order that the decree of the Civil Court may be binding on the Magistrate, three things are necessary namely —

by a competent Court within a time not remote from that of his taking proceedings under this section—26 Cal 625 Pratap v Sundarbans 24 Cr L J 79 3 P L T 608 Parameswar v Kailaspati, 1 P L J 336, Kedarnath v Jaleswar 4 P L T 248 Rambaran v Saguna 4 P L T 333 Thus it is the duty of the Magistrate to have found possession in accordance with the decree of the Civil Court when a party had been put into possession by that Court eight days prior to the institution of proceedings under this section—32 Cal 796 or within three months or so—79 Cal 203 6 C W N 38 Durganand v Hiranand 25 Cr L J 83 (Pat)

But if the decree of the Civil Court is not recent but several years old it would be unsafe to act on that documentary evidence alone—6 W R 79 A decree which is 23 years old is not conclusive as to the question of possession because it is not absolutely impossible that the party who obtained the decree 23 years ago should have been subsequently dispossessed—8 C W N 719 So also with the case of a decree 17 years old—33 Cal 33 Even a decree four years old is not sufficiently conclusive and the Magistrate in disregarding that decree would not be acting without jurisdiction—11 C W N cxx

(2) Secondly the decree must have been passed between the same parties A decree passed ex parte under which only symbolical possession was delivered or one which was not inter partes is not binding on a criminal court in proceedings under this section—Promoda v Khatra 25 Cr L J 1104 (Cal) Atul v Srinath 23 C W N 982 20 Cr L J 840

(3) Thirdly the decree or order of the Court must give possession —Possession must have been given to one of the parties either by the decree itself or by an order of the Court in execution of the decree (e g to an auction purchaser)

Where the Civil Court deals only with the question of proprietaryship of land the decree of such Court will not bar a Magistrate from deciding the question of possession under this section—2 A L J 274 So also where the suit in which the decree was passed was merely one for damages in which the determination of title was incidentally necessary but the suit was neither for possession nor for declaration of title the decree in such suit was not conclusive as to possession and the Magistrate was competent to take proceedings under this section—16 M L J 51 So also where the question of possession was raised by the parties but was neither fought out between them nor decided by the Court the decree would not bar a proceeding under this section—Annaswamy v Muthu Kumara 15 Cr. L J 663 (Mad)

There must be actual delivery of possession under the decree or order of the Civil Court Where merely the sale was confirmed and the sale certificate issued but there was no delivery of possession actual or symbolical to the petitioners their rights were not protected from proceedings under this section—31 Mad 416 Symbolical possession given to the purchaser would raise the presumption that the purchaser had possession, although it may be that slight evidence would suffice to rebut that presumption—14 Cal 169

Where an order (of a Criminal Court) under section 522 of this Code was passed, directing restoration of immoveable property, but possession as a fact was never delivered to the petitioners such infructuous order would not bar the jurisdiction of the Magistrate in taking proceedings under this section in respect of the same property—Probbat v. Prosanna, 18 C W N 1048 15 Cr L J 700

Effect of previous decree on third party —Where in a proceeding under this section, it appeared that the first party had previously brought a suit for rent against some persons (tenants) not parties to the proceeding and purchased the disputed properties at a sale held in execution of an ex parte decree obtained therein, and had been put in possession without the knowledge of the second party, and the Magistrate found that the rent suit brought by the landlord against the tenants in possession was not a bona fide one and declared the second party to be in possession of the disputed land, it was held that under the circumstances of the case the order of the Magistrate was not erroneous and was not liable to be set aside. A previous decree of the Civil Court relating to the proceedings in dispute may throw light upon the evidence on the matter, but the evidentiary value to be attached to such a piece of evidence must depend upon the particular circumstances of the individual case. Decrees of Courts so far as third parties are concerned may have different value in different cases. Where for instance there has been a real contest between the parties to a suit, and upon an adjudication regarding title or possession a party has been awarded a decree and has been put in possession in execution of such a decree, it would be conclusive upon any person even though he was not a party to the decree. But money decrees followed by sale of property would stand on a different footing. In these cases the sale in execution only passes the right, title and interest of the judgment debtor consequently there is no adjudication regarding title to property, and therefore it is not conclusive upon a third party as regards possession or title—Atul v Srinath, 23 C. W. N. 982 30 C L J. 123 20 Cr L J 810.

In estimating the value of delivery of possession against third parties, it is also material to see what is the true nature of the possession said to have been delivered—Atul v Srinath, 23 C W N 982

440. Effect of possession given by Criminal Courts —In proceedings under sec 145 the Magistrates have always upheld the possession given by Civil Courts. But possession given by Criminal Courts cannot be treated in the same manner in which possession given by the Civil Courts is treated in cases under this section—2 C L J 147 A Magistrate does not act without jurisdiction merely because he does not accept the decision in a previous case of rioting as to possession—Bhulan v Kumar 5 P L T 69 25 Cr L J 951

441 Suit for damages for improper proceedings —Where proceedings are initiated under this section by a party who is eventually unsuccessful it is not open to the successful party to sue for damages The damages in such a case are remote and are sufficiently compensated by any order for costs that might be made in the proceedings—Ram Das v Md Faqir 20 A L J 205 A 1 R 1922 All 143

442 Effect of order under this section on a subsequent civil suit — An order under this section does not decide any question of title Therefore where a case under section 145 was compromised by the parties and the Magistrate passed an order in terms of that compromise it was held that the order simply settled the question of possession but did not determine the question of title and the parties were not therefore precluded by the order from having recourse to the Civil Court for the determination of that question—Gopi Das v Madho Lal 45 All 162 20 A L J 932

Limitation for subsequent civil suit —See Art 7 of the Indian Limitation Act

443 Striking off proceedings —Where proceedings under this section have once been started the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to strike them off He must pass an order either under subsection (5) or (6) of sec 145 or under sec 146—Trilochan v Jogeswar 20 Cr L J 464 (Pat) Sastee v Natlum 6 P L T 258 26 Cr L J 105

444 Fresh proceedings —When an order under clause (6) has been passed the proceedings terminate and a Magistrate cannot institute fresh proceedings so long as such order is in force—Sadhu v Mahammad Ali 15 C W N 568 12 Cr L J 32 When a final order has been passed and one of the parties has been declared to be in possession the order of the Magistrate is binding on all the parties and the unsuccessful party cannot be allowed to disturb the possession of the other party without having recourse to a civil suit It is not proper for a Magistrate to initiate fresh proceedings at his instance—Aran Sardar v Hara Sundar, 27 C W N 171 24 Cr L J 97 But where the parties compromised and filed a petition of compromise and according to the terms thereof the Magistrate ordered the land to be in the possession of both sides as stated in the petition of compromise such an order was one falling under clause (5) showing that no dispute existed and not an order under clause (6) and the Magistrate could therefore institute fresh proceedings—Sadhu v Mahammad Ali, 15 C W N 568 12 Cr L J 32

When a party has been declared to be in possession as a result of proceedings under section 145 fresh proceedings under the same section cannot be started against him unless it can be shown that the previous order has been duly vacated or possession has been amicably surrendered. But subsequent proceeding can be started and fresh order made in respect of properties other than the one comprised in the first order—Bayit Lal v Harakh Singh, 1 P L T 557 21 Cr L J 753

During pendency of High Court rule—During the pendency of a rule issued upon the District Magistrate to show cause why his order under sec 145 should not be set aside it is irregular and highly improper for a Subordinate Magistrate to institute fresh proceedings as the proceedings in the Lower Court with reference to the matter in dispute must be considered to have been stayed. When a rule is issued by the High Court on the District Magistrate staying further proceedings, all Subordinate Magistrates are bound by it, and would not be justified in instituting fresh proceedings during the pendency of the rule—4 C L J 418

Fresh materials—When an order striking off proceedings under this section is passed, its effect is to destroy the proceedings and anything done thereafter under this section must start afresh upon fresh materials, and not stand upon the basis of the earlier proceedings—20 Cal 867, 6 C W N 923 Akhubi v Darbari 2 P L T 267 22 Cr L J 481, Ghulam Md v Crown 3 Lah 401

Power of High Court—The High Court cannot direct the revival of proceedings under sec 145 when they have been stayed by the Magistrate—30 Cal 112

445 Further Inquiry—Sec 437 (now 436) allows a further inquiry into a complaint which means under sec 4 (k) a complaint of an 'offence', and since sec 145 is not directed to any offence at all sec 436 does not authorise a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to order a further inquiry into a case under sec 145—20 Cal 729

446 Review—There is no authority for holding that a Magistrate can review a final order passed by himself under this section—35 Cal 350, 16 O C 192

447 Revision—Under sub-section (3) of section 435 before it was omitted by the Amendment Act of 1923 proceedings under this Chapter were not liable to revision by any Court whether by the High Court or by the Sessions Judge or by the District Magistrate so that the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under section 439 of this Code was not competent to revise an order passed under this Chapter—27 Cal 892, 25 Bom 179 Kamal Kufy v Udayrama 36 Mad 275; Palani v Rathna 26 M L J 208 Krishnaappa v Alamelu 5 L W 165; Vaidyanatha v Suppalu 1914 M W N. 792 26 All 144 31 All 150;

is treated in cases under this section—2 C L J 147 A Magistrate does not act without jurisdiction merely because he does not accept the decision in a previous case of rioting as to possession—Bhulan v Kumari 5 P L T 69 25 Cr L J 951

441. Suit for damages for improper proceedings —Where proceedings are initiated under this section by a party who is eventually unsuccessful it is not open to the successful party to sue for damages The damages in such a case are remote and are sufficiently compensated by any order for costs that might be made in the proceedings—Ram Das v Md Faqir, 20 A L J 205 A I R 1922 All 143

442 Effect of order under this section on a subsequent civil suit — An order under this section does not decide any question of title Therefore where a case under section 145 was compromised by the parties and the Magistrate passed an order in terms of that compromise it was held that the order simply settled the question of possession but did not determine the question of title and the parties were not therefore precluded by the order from having recourse to the Civil Court for the determination of that question—Gopi Das v Madho Lal 45 All 162 20 A L J 932

443 Striking off proceedings —Where proceedings under this section have once been started the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to strike them off He must pass an order either under subsection (5) or (6) of sec 145 or under sec 146—Trilochan v Jogestwar 20 Cr L J 464 (Pat) Saslee v Nathani 6 P L T 258 26 Cr L J 105

444 Fresh proceedings —When an order under clause (6) has been passed the proceedings terminate and a Magistrate cannot institute fresh proceedings so long as such order is in force—Sadhu v Mahammad Ali 15 C W N 568 12 Cr L J 32 When a final order has been passed and one of the parties has been declared to be in possession the order of the Magistrate is binding on all the parties, and the unsuccessful party cannot be allowed to disturb the possession of the other party without having recourse to a civil suit It is not proper for a Magistrate to initiate fresh proceedings at his instance—Aran Sardar v Hara Sundar, 27 C W N 171 24 Cr L J 97 But where the parties compromised and filed a petition of compromise and according to the terms thereof the Magistrate ordered the land to be in the possession of both sides as stated in the petition of compromise such an order was one falling under clause (5) showing that no dispute existed and not an order under clause (6) and the Magistrate could therefore institute fresh proceedings—Sadhu v Mahammad Ali, 15 C W N 568 12 Cr L J 32

When a party has been declared to be in possession as a result of proceedings under section 145 fresh proceedings under the same section cannot be started against him unless it can be shown that the previous order has been duly vacated or possession has been amicably surrendered. But subsequent proceeding can be started and fresh order made in respect of properties other than the one comprised in the first order—Bajil Lal v Harakh Singh 1 P L T 557 21 Cr L J 753

During pendency of High Court rule —During the pendency of a rule issued upon the District Magistrate to show cause why his order under sec 145 should not be set aside it is irregular and highly improper for a Subordinate Magistrate to institute fresh proceedings as the proceedings in the Lower Court with reference to the matter in dispute must be considered to have been stayed. When a rule is issued by the High Court on the District Magistrate staying further proceedings all Subordinate Magistrates are bound by it and would not be justified in instituting fresh proceedings during the pendency of the rule—4 C L J 418

Fresh materials —When an order striking off proceedings under this section is passed its effect is to destroy the proceedings and anything done thereafter under this section must start afresh upon fresh materials and not stand upon the basis of the earlier proceedings—20 Cal 867 6 C W N 923 Ahluji v Darbars 2 P L T 267 22 Cr L J 481 Ghulam Md v Crown 3 Lah 401

Power of High Court —The High Court cannot direct the revival of proceedings under sec 145 when they have been stayed by the Magistrate—30 Cal 112

445 Further Inquiry —Sec 437 (now 436) allows a further inquiry into a complaint which means under sec 4 (h) a complaint of an offence and since sec 145 is not directed to any offence at all sec 436 does not authorise a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to order a further inquiry into a case under sec 145—6 Cal 729

446 Review —There is no authority for holding that a Magistrate can review a final order passed by himself under this section—35 Cal 350 16 O C 192

447 Revision —Under sub-section (3) of section 435 before it was omitted by the Amendment Act of 1923 proceedings under this Chapter were not liable to revision by any Court whether by the High Court or by the Sessions Judge or by the District Magistrate so that the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under section 439 of this Code was not competent to revise an order passed under this Chapter—27 Cal 892 25 Bom 179 Kamal Kuti v Udavarma 36 Mad 275 Palani v Ruthna 26 M L J 68 Krishappa v Alaraju 5 L W 165, Vadjaratha v Suppalu 1914 M W 795 6 All 144 31 All 150.

And in order to exercise its revisional power in respect of orders passed under this Chapter, the High Court had to invoke the aid of sec 15 of the Charter Act (26 Cal 188, 27 Cal 892, 33 Cal 68, 27 Cal 259, 28 Cal 416, 24 All 315) or sec 107 of the Government of India Act (Nathu Ram v Emp, 15 A L J 270, Parameshwari v Kailashpati, 1 P L J 336; Thylae v Srirangaraya, 43 M L J 624; Moiram v Mritjan, 47 Cal 438; Ali Md. v Piggott 48 Cal 522) But this power could be exercised only by the Chartered High Courts, and not by the non chartered High Courts, e g, the Chief Courts and the Judicial Commissioners' Courts

The only cases in which the High Court could exercise its powers of revision under this Code (sec 439) were those in which the proceedings, though purporting to be proceedings under this Chapter were not really so, as for instance where there was an initial want of jurisdiction by reason of there being no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace or by reason of the Magistrate not being a first class Magistrate or where the Magistrate exceeded his jurisdiction by exercising powers not conferred by this section—24 Bom 527 U B R (1917) 33, 35, 7 Bom L R 475, 25 Bom 179 25 All 537 Thylae v Srirangaraya, 43 M L J 624, 5 O C 1 Udai Bhan v Ram Samujh 19 O C 136 18 Cr L J 100

Now by the Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 sub-section (3) of section 435 has been omitted and the effect of this amendment is to confer on the High Court the power of revision under this Code in respect of orders under this Chapter

But though the High Court is invested with powers of revision, still orders under this section should not be lightly disturbed it is only in very exceptional cases that the High Court will interfere—In re Lingaraja, 17 Cr L J 143 (Mad), Hardeo v Ram Charitar 17 Cr L J 286 (Pat) Orders passed by a competent Magistrate are not to be lightly interfered with by the High Court first because the object of such orders is to preserve peace and secondly because the aggrieved party has his remedy by a civil suit—Krishnappier v. Alamelu, 5 L W 165; 18 Cr L J 23 Proceedings under this chapter are of a special nature, and are such that the Magistrates may be allowed greater liberty in carrying out those provisions than they are allowed in trying ordinary crime The provisions of this chapter are concerned with disputes relating to immoveable property which are likely to cause a breach of the peace, and give Magistrates power to deal with matters of quasi civil nature because upon the Magistracy and the police is thrown the burden of maintaining the public peace In this view, it is undesirable that such orders should be interfered with in revision, unless they are made without jurisdiction and are obviously unreasonable or unjust—Sudalaimuthu v Enan 16 Cr L J 767 (Mad) Where a Magistrate duly empowered to act under this Chapter takes proper proceedings and passes an order the High Court has no power to revise the proceedings either under this Code or under section 15 of the Charter Act—31 All 150 or under section 107 of the Government of India Act—Matlakdhari v Jaisari 15 A L J 576 39 All 612 Sundar Nath v Emp 40 All 364, Sakhawat v Emp 17 A L J 321 41 All 302 Thus the High Court as a Court of Revision cannot interfere with the decision of a trial Court on the factum of possession so long as there is evidence in support of the finding—Abdul Sabar v Udha Lal 8 Lah L J 47 17 P L R 102

The District Magistrate cannot himself set aside the decision of the lower Court passed under sec 145 he must refer the case to the High Court under sec 438—Es ruddi v Otaruddi 26 Cr L J 1166 A I R 1925 Cal 1234

448 Grounds of interference —The High Court has the power to interfere where in a proceeding under this section necessary parties were left out or wrong persons were made parties—27 Cal 892 or where the Magistrate refused to receive the evidence tendered to him—29 Mad 561 Jhengar v Daynath 11 A L J 586 34 Cal 840 Pailall v Ganapati 19 Cr L J 579 (Pat) or where the Magistrate's finding of fact as regards possession was perverse and contrary to a mass of un rebutted evidence—Emp v Sarju Prasad 27 O C 290 25 Cr L J 1066 or where no order in writing such as is required by sub section (1) was recorded by the Magistrate—Hakam v Raha Ram 4 Lah 66 Jaku v Harnaman 1917 P W R 28 Mad Hasham v Md Jilani 20 Cr L J 174, 1907 A W N 49 Budhan v Ram Ralla Mal 1915 P L R 169 16 Cr L J 628 or where no copy of the preliminary order was served upon the parties or published in the manner laid down—Budhan v Jani Rakha —1915 P L R 169 16 Cr L J 68 33 Cal 68 or where the Magistrate adopted none of the procedure required under this section and passed an order without any reference thereto—Deuan Chand v Emp 1899 P R 2 Dhanu Ram v Bhole Nath 1902 P R 23 Ibdulla v Gunda 1907 P R 7 1915 P L R 169 Tara Chand v Behari 1916 P R 22 18 Cr L J 36 or where the order of the Magistrate was far too wide of the mark and opposed to law and justice—1912 P W R 33 or where the Magistrate refused to issue process for the attendance of material witnesses—30 Cal 508 (Note) or where no opportunity was given by the Magistrate to the applicant to produce his evidence—1 C L J 36n or where the Magistrate discarded the evidence altogether and based his decision merely upon his local inquiry —10 C W N 181 or where the proceedings were initiated by the Magistrate on a vague Police report—11 C W N 198, or where the Magistrate declared possession with a party who had long been out of possession—Shankar v Bhajaj 20 Cr L J 445 (Nag), or where the Magistrate passed an order in respect of a property which was not in dispute and declared the property to be in the possession of a person who was not a party to the proceedings—Radhamohan v Naimuddi 19 Cr L J 653 (Cal)

449 What the High Court can do in revision —The High Court, in the exercise of its power of revision is competent to consider the whole evidence—Reid v Richardson 14 Cal 361 and to find out whether there was evidence on which the Magistrate could come to the conclusion which he arrived at—14 Cal 169 and can pass the proper order which the Lower Court ought to have made. Thus where it is difficult to come to a conclusion as to the fact of possession the wise and proper course is to pass an order of attachment under section 146 and if in such a case the Magistrate has passed an order under sec 145 the High Court in revision can alter the order under sec 145 into one under sec 146 of the Code—Reid v Richardson, 14 Cal 361 22 Cal 297 Satyendra v Krishnodhone 20 C W N 1014 18 Cr L J 80 The High Court in revision can alter an order of the Magistrate under sec 145 into an order under sec 147—In re Amarsang 48 Bom 512 (515) The High Court has inherent power to give directions as to the disposal of property which was attached and has been dealt with by a subordinate Magistrate in the course of proceedings instituted without jurisdiction under this section—Abd Muhammad v Piggott, 48 Cal. 522 (F B) 32 C L J 270 22 Cr L J 213

Costs in revision —See note 478 under sec 148

146 (1) If the Magistrate decides that none of the parties was then in such possession, or is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was subject of dispute then in such possession of the subject of dispute, he may attach it until a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties thereto, or the person entitled to possession thereof,

Provided that the District Magistrate or the Magistrate who has attached the subject of dispute may withdraw the attachment at any time if he is satisfied that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace in regard to the subject of dispute

(2) When the Magistrate attaches the subject of dispute, he may, if he thinks fit, and if no receiver of the property, the subject matter in dispute, has been appointed by any Civil Court, appoint a receiver thereof, who, subject to the control of the

Magistrate, shall have all the powers of a receiver appointed under the Code of Civil Procedure

Provided that in the event of a receiver of the property the subject matter in dispute being subsequently appointed by any Civil Court possession shall be made over to him by the receiver appointed by the Magistrate who shall thereupon be discharged

Change —The two provisos and the italicised words in sub section (2) have been added by sec 29 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVII of 1923) For reasons see below

450 Conditions precedent —In order to give jurisdiction for an order under sec 146 it is necessary that there should be jurisdiction over the proceedings under sec 145 which again presupposes a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. If there was no dispute concerning any land there would be no jurisdiction of a Magistrate to proceed under secs 145 and 146—Ballam v Lal Babu 19 Cr L J 105 (Pat) Sec 146 is a continuation of sec 145 and therefore the initiation of proceedings under sec 145 is preliminary to an order under sec 146. Where the record showed that the Magistrate made an order under this section without following the procedure prescribed by sec 145 and without making an order in writing and that there was nothing to show that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed the attachment was set aside by the High Court—Azizuddin v Fmp 2 Cr L J 119

The legality of an order under sec 146 depends upon its having been preceded by legal proceedings under sec 145 and where the whole proceedings under sec 145 are illegal (e.g. by reason of the Magistrate's failure to comply with the requirements of clause 4 of sec 145) an order made in the case under sec 146 cannot stand on a better footing—Subbarama v Mariyi Pillai 16 M L T 5 15 Cr L J 559

451 Magistrate's duty to make inquiry and take evidence —It is the duty of the Magistrate before taking proceedings under this section to take evidence and make inquiry (see clause 4 of sec 145) in order to ascertain if possible who was in possession—Parthuram v Shivajatan 3 P L T 434 23 Cr L J 277 1 C I R 86. An order passed under this section without examining any witnesses although a number of them were present in Court is invalid—Siba Nath v Ramkishore 35 C L J 291 23 Cr L J 688. Unless and until a Magistrate has made the inquiry contemplated by sec 145 that is to say, unless he has received and considered the evidence produced by the parties the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to proceed under sec 146—Inayatulla v Amanat 10 L J. 242 15 Cr L J 470 Akeda v Hussain 15 P L T 15 Ambika v Wazdali 23 C W N 910. When sec 146 (1) speaks of the Magistra being unable to satisfy himself as to which of the parties was in actual possession, it contemplates that the Magistrate has considered the evidence fairly and judicially for the purpose of arriving at a decision—Khedan v. Hussain, 2 P. L. T. 15 22 Cr. L. J. 323 Where a Magistrate in a proceeding under sec. 145 made an order under sec. 146 on the ground that it was doubtful which of the parties was in actual possession, without judicially considering the important documentary evidence of possession placed before him, it was held that the order must be set aside and the case re-heard by another Magistrate—Ambica v. Wasedais, 23 C. W. N. 910: 20 Cr. L. J. 342

Where the Magistrate did not make the slightest attempt to satisfy himself as to the factum of possession, and attached the land without taking any evidence and making any local inquiry—Shoo Balak v. Bhagwan, 40 Cal. 103 16 C. W. N. 1033, or where the order of attachment was passed without examining the witnesses cited by the petitioner—2 Weir 110, or where the Magistrate discarded and rejected practically every piece of evidence that might have led to a correct finding as to possession—26 C. L. J. 39 or where the Magistrate omitted to receive the evidence produced by a party and passed his order merely on a consideration of the written statements of the parties—34 Cal. 840, his order was without jurisdiction. So also, where in a proceeding under sec. 145, the parties appeared on the day of hearing but did not file any written statement nor produced any evidence, and the Magistrate without granting time to the parties for the production of evidence or for filing written statements, found it impossible to come to a conclusion as to the fact of possession and passed an order under this section, the order was made without jurisdiction and therefore invalid—12 C. W. N. 896 But where the parties failed to adduce evidence even though sufficient time was allowed to them to do so, the Magistrate could proceed under this section—14 C. W. N. 80.

But it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to make a local investigation as contemplated by sec. 145. A Magistrate who attaches the property without such an investigation does not commit an error in procedure—Upendra v. Prasanna, 20 Cr. L. J. 17 (Cal.).

Effect of prior decree of Civil Court.—Where the petitioner had been put into possession of certain lands in execution of a decree obtained by him in a Civil Court establishing his right to them, the Magistrate was not competent to attach the lands under section 146. It was his duty to have found possession in accordance with the decree—32 Cal. 796 See Note 438 under section 145

452. Inability to decide the fact of possession.—The doubt upon which a Magistrate can act under this section must be the result of his inability to determine the question of possession upon the evidence offered by both parties and not a doubt in his mind entertained without receiving evidence and without inquiry—1 C L R 273 Khedan v Hussaini 2 P L T 15 Sheobalak v Bhagnat 40 Cal 105 Ambica v Wazedali 23 C W N 910 The Magistrate would not be justified in saying that it was not possible to ascertain who was in possession and in attaching the property merely because the parties did not appear. He ought to have made some inquiry into the question of possession—Paraturam v Shihjatan 3 P L T 434 In order to show the Magistrate's inability to decide the question of possession he ought to discuss the evidence in the case and give reasons for his inability—Khedan v Hussaini 2 P L T 15 Where the order under this section did not show that it was not possible on the evidence to decide as to the fact of possession but would rather seem to indicate that the Magistrate could not or would not decide whether the witnesses on either side were to be believed the order was set aside. This section is not meant to relieve the Magistrate from the duty of deciding the case on the merits but allows an order of attachment to be made only when it is not possible to decide which party is in possession—Neelamegan v Moorogappa 2 Wen 110 A Magistrate should be extremely reluctant to attach the property in dispute. In cases where the land is jungle or waste it is quite possible that the Magistrate may be unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of the parties. But where the land is admittedly subject to cultivation year by year and season by season the Magistrate will be only admitting his own weakness if he states that he cannot come to a decision. It is his duty to collect information and sift it and decide the fact of possession—Ram Balal v Rang Baladur 5 P L T 589 25 Cr L J 1295 A I R 1924 Pat 804 The Magistrate ought to make a reasonable effort to decide the question as to possession and ought not to attach the property so long as it is possible for him to decide which of the contesting parties was really in possession of the property and if he can decide that question in favour of one of the parties he should give effect to that decision by passing an order under section 145 (6)—Wazezul v Shobrat 4 P L T 441 74 Cr L J 754

Nature of possession—In a dispute between the wife of a lunatic and the manager of his estate as to the possession of certain property there was no doubt that the wife was in actual possession of the property but the only doubt existed as to the nature of the possession that is whether her possession was on her own behalf or on behalf of her lunatic husband. It was held that such a doubt as to the nature of the possession would not justify a Magistrate in taking action under this section—3 C I R 64

Portion of subject of dispute—Where there is a dispute as regards the possession of a fishery extending over several miles in length and the Magistrate is unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of the whole length in question he should ascertain so far as he can the possession of some portion or portions thereof. As regards the portion as to which he is able to say that so and so is in possession he should proceed under section 145 and only as to the remainder should he proceed under section 146—Upendra v. Prasanna 20 Cr L J 17 (Cal)

Rights of parties—The Magistrate can attach property only when he decides that none of the parties is in possession or when he cannot satisfy himself as to which of the parties is in possession but he cannot take action under this section merely because he is unable to satisfy himself as to which of the parties is entitled to possession or has a right to the property. Inability to decide the right to the property cannot justify an order of attachment of the property—In re Somnath 6 Bom L R 723

'Then'—i.e. at the date of the preliminary order passed under section 145 (1). See notes under section 145 (4)

453 When attachment can be made—When it is difficult for a Magistrate trying a case under section 145 to come to a conclusion as to the fact of possession the wise and proper course to be adopted is to pass an order of attachment under this section and not to pass any order under sec 145—Reid v. Richards 14 Cal 361. To entitle a Magistrate to make an order of attachment he must either decide that none of the parties are in actual possession or that he is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them is in possession—Nattu Ram v. Emperor 15 A I J 270 18 Cr L J 557. This section was intended to apply to a case in which on the evidence before him a Magistrate could not find possession with either of the parties—Jivanti v. Middleton 27 Cal 785

Where the Magistrate finds neither the first party nor the second party in possession but finds that actual possession is with a stranger who does not claim a right to be in possession the Magistrate should proceed to attach the property—Blagioin v. Imp 20 Cr L J 215 (Cal)

When both parties are in possession of the disputed property no order under this section can be made—Id. Koolayappa v. Shaikh Abdul Khadir 27 M. L. J 169 15 Cr L J 572. Where the Magistrate found that both parties were at the time of the order collecting rents from the ralyats this amounted to a finding that both parties were in possession and consequently the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to order attachment under this section—Rajendra v. Malomed Arzumand 9 C W N 837

454 Order of Attachment—An order under this section cannot be made in the absence of the parties or ex parte the proper course is to pass the order in the presence of both parties—Luchmee v. Bhusi 19 Cr L J 225 (Pat)

A Magistrate in passing an order under this section must give reasons for making the order—Ahmed v. Hussaini, 2 P L T 15. But no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to when the High Court will interfere with the judgment of a Magistrate under this section on the ground that the order is brief and does not state reasons at length. If the High Court is satisfied that the Magistrate has given full consideration to the evidence on the record it will not interfere merely on the ground that the order is a brief one—Kanai v Hyder Ali 37 C L J 177 24 Cr L J 575

Signature of Magistrate—Where in a proceeding under this section the Magistrate initialled the order instead of signing it it was held to be a mere irregularity not affecting the order—17 C L R 211

455 What property can be attached—In order that an order might be passed under sec. 145 or 146 the subject matter of the dispute must be clearly determined—11 C W N 198

The 'subject of dispute' referred to in secs. 145 and 146 must be read as referring to the whole or to any component part or parts of the property in dispute. If the component part in respect of which the dispute exists is distinct and separable from the rest the Magistrate is not bound to attach the whole property but may attach that part only. If however the subject matter in dispute is indivisible and must be dealt with as a whole it must be dealt with in such a way as to make in regard to it one order under this section—5 C W N 710 see also 22 Cal 497 cited in Note 427 under sec. 145

Where the dispute is as regards a narrow strip of land at present occupied by a hedge forming the boundary of contiguous lands belonging to the rival disputants the Magistrate should instead of attaching the land come to a decision on the evidence submitted to him with reference to the point of possession—4 W R 26

Temple—To attach a temple does not necessarily mean that the temple must be closed altogether. When third parties or the general community are interested in it it is the duty of the Magistrate when assuming charge of it in order to preserve the public peace to make the best arrangements possible to preserve the rights of such third parties or the public and to have the pooja of the temple performed—Sundara v Vallinayaga 2 Weir 110 In re Muttusami 2 Weir 112

Crops—The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to attach crops cut and stored the word 'crops' occurring in sec. 145 refers to standing crops alone—30 Cal 110

In a dispute between the rival landlords as to the possession of land, the Magistrate is not competent to attach the crops on the land belonging to the tenants—Denomoni v Mazafar Ali 5 C W N 105

Moveables—The Magistrate ordering attachment of immoveable property can take charge of all moveables found inside the immoveable property although he cannot attach the moveable property by itself under this section. Therefore where the Magistrate attached a muth and took charge of all the cattle that were found by him in the muth at the time of attachment it was held that the Magistrate acted legally—Mahant Bharat v Ram Charitar 1 P I J 356 18 Cr L J 287

Cultivation of attached land—A person who cultivates immovable property which has been attached by a Magistrate under this section commits the offence of criminal trespass and he is liable to be punished under sec 447 I P C—8 M L J 753. No suit for damages for the loss of profits resulting from the non cultivation of land owing to an attachment under this section lies against any party—6 Mad 426

456 Powers of Magistrate—A Magistrate attaching a property under this section has the power to make any order regarding the management of the property. The High Court will not interfere with such order—49 Cal 382. He can lease the land attached—17 W R 38 or after cancelling a lease already granted can grant a fresh lease—79 Cal 382

A Magistrate passing an order under this section is entitled to refuse to hand over the value of the produce of the property to any of the parties to the dispute but he has no power to treat the profits as derelict and as the property of the Government—Mohar Singh v Crown 1011 P L R 123 12 Cr L J 103

A Magistrate attaching a property under this section cannot hand over possession of the property to one of the contending parties on failure of the other to institute a suit for possession in the Civil Court—Rani Kurnar v Thakur Ojha 3 P I T 618 3 Cr I J 562

457 Possession by Magistrate—When a Magistrate attaches lands under this section, the possession of the Magistrate must be taken to be a possession on behalf of such of the rival parties as might establish a right to possession by a civil suit—32 Cal 250. That is the Magistrate's possession is not adverse to the true owner. The legal possession of the property is said to be in the true owner during the period of attachment—Raja of Venkatachiri v Isakapalli 26 Mad 410 49 Cal 544 22 C L J 283, 20 C W N 481. Sarat Chandra v Bibhabati 34 C L J 302

458 Decision of a competent Court—The attachment is to continue until a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties and therefore it is the duty of a Magistrate to withdraw the attachment and release the property as soon as it is brought to his notice that a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties or of the person entitled to possession—Maharaja of Venkatagiri v Srinivasa 17 M L T 392 16 Cr L J 481. The Magistrate is bound to abide by the subsequent decision of a competent Civil Court and to withdraw the attachment, even though the suit in the Civil Court was not inter partes (as for instance where the suit was instituted by a third party and the first party and some members of the second party were not made parties to it)—Asesh Kumar v Kishori Mohan 39 C L J 353 35 Cr L J 937 The fact that an appeal has been preferred against the decision of the Civil Court and is pending is no good reason for the Magistrate to keep the property any longer in attachment—Crow v Abdul Aziz 1917 P W R 46 19 Cr L J 261 Ramisri v Sri Krishna, 46 All 879 22 A L J 803 Maung Tia Zin v Maung Ba Gale 7 Bur L T 293 15 Cr L J 500

It is not necessary that there should be a decree in favour of all of the parties to enable the Magistrate to withdraw an attachment made under this section and if there is an adjudication by a Civil Court in favour of some at least of the parties that is sufficient for the purpose of enabling the Magistrate to wall out of the property—Vithoba v Navasinga 20 M L T 247 4 L W 55 17 Cr L J 331

A Magistrate is not entitled after the decision of the Civil Court to retain in his hands the profits derived from the attached property during the period of attachment—893 A W N 100

The expression competent Court means not only a Civil Court but includes a Survey Court—37 Cal 331

Under the Code of 1882 the words were Civil Court and therefore it was held in 15 All 394 that this section did not authorise a Magistrate to pass an order of attachment in a dispute between parties whose rights would have to be determined by a Revenue Court But this ruling is no longer good law and the Magistrate can release the property attached and hand it over to one of the parties as soon as the Revenue Court has given a decision in favour of that party—Ram Sri v Sri Krishna 46 All 879 (881) 22 A L J 803 25 Cr L J 1242 Surendra Bihari v A E 35 O C 212

But a mere entry in the Record of Rights does not amount to an adjudication by a competent Court of the rights of parties—Kutubpur v Jitenbra 26 Cr L J 1055 (Cal)

459 Persons bound by order of attachment—Judicial proceedings cannot bind a person who is not a party to them A final order under this section cannot be made against persons who were neither made parties to the proceedings under sec 145 nor were regarded as such by the Magistrate (though notices had been issued upon them to file written statements and they entered appearance but did nothing else)—3 C W N 329

460 Proviso—withdrawal of attachment—We have introduced a new clause which by an amendment of section 146 will enable a District Magistrate to withdraw the attachment of property at any time when he is satisfied that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

Where the petitioner presented an application to the Magistrate praying for the release of the attached house on the ground that the other claimant had died and that he (the petitioner) was his heir and the Magistrate refused the application as no judgment of a competent Court declaring the rights of parties was produced held that the Magistrate ought to have granted the application and released the property from attachment because by the death of the other claimant all likelihood of a breach of the peace had disappeared—Khushi Ram v Crown 1 Lah 451 This proviso now expressly provides for the case

But the Magistrate can cancel the order of attachment under the proviso only on the ground that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace. He cannot cancel the attachment on any other ground e.g. on the ground that the attachment is not practicable—Ram Dulare v Ajudhya 16 O C 192 14 Cr L J 605

461 Sub section (2)—Appointment of Receiver—A Magistrate is entitled to appoint a receiver under this sub section only after the termination of the inquiry as to possession conducted under sec 145 (4). The appointment of a receiver before the completion of the inquiry is without jurisdiction—Lakshminarayana v Gnanaprasanna 13 Cr I J 536 (Mad)

The passing of an order of attachment does not by itself justify the appointment of a receiver unless on a subsequent inquiry the appointment of a receiver is found necessary—Raza Hussain v Mehdi Hasan 25 O C 148 23 Cr L J 684

A receiver appointed under this section is entitled unless some special circumstance is established not only to the subject matter of the proceedings but also to all accretions to the property and can give good title to a tenant under him—14 C W N 681

Proviso — We recommend the addition of a proviso to section 146 (2) to meet the case of an overlapping appointment of a receiver by the Civil Court —Report of the Select Committee of 1916

462 Revision —By reason of the omission of sub section (3) of section 435 by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act of 1923 orders passed under this section are now liable to revision under this Code. See Note 447 under sec 145

463 Review —An order under this section is in the nature of a judgment and cannot be reviewed by the same Court—Lucina v Bhuss 19 Cr L J 225 (Pat) Raj Kumar v Thakur Ojha 3 P L T 648 Ram Dulare v Ajudhya 16 O C 192 see section 369 When a property is attached under this section the Magistrate has jurisdiction to release it from attachment but he has no jurisdiction to review his own order releasing the attached property—Ballam v Lal Babu 19 Cr L J 105 (Pat)

147 Whenever any such Magistrate is satisfied as afore said that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning the right of use of any land or water (including any right of way or other easement over the same) within the local limits of his jurisdiction he may inquire into the matter in manner provided by section 145 and may if it appears to him that such right exists make an order permitting such thing to be done or directing that such thing shall not be done as the case may be until the person objecting to such thing being done or claiming that such thing may be done obtains the decision of a competent Court adjudging him to be entitled to prevent the doing of or to do such thing as the case may be.

Provided that no order shall be passed under this section permitting the doing of any thing where the right to do such thing is exercisable at all times of the year unless such right has been exercised within three months next before the institution of the inquiry or where the right is 147 (1) Whenever any District Magistrate Sub divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class is satisfied from a police report or other information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists regarding any alleged right of user of any land or water as explained in section 145 sub section (2) (whether such right be claimed as an easement or otherwise) within the local limits of his jurisdiction he may make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied and requiring the parties concerned in such dispute to attend the Court in person or by pleader within a time to be fixed by such Magistrate and to put in written statements of their respective claims and shall thereafter inquire into the matter in the manner provided in section 145 and the provisions of that section shall, as far as may be applicable in the case of such inquiry.

(2) If it appears to such Magistrate that such right exists he may make an order prohibiting any interference

exercisable only at particular seasons or on particular occasions, unless the right has been exercised during the last of such seasons or occasions before such institution with the exercise of such right: Provided that no such order shall be made where the right is exercisable at all times of the year, unless such right has been exercised within three months next before the institution of the inquiry, or, where the right is exercisable only at particular seasons or on particular occasions, unless the right has been exercised during the last of such seasons or on the last of such occasions before such institution

(3) If it appears to such Magistrate that such right does not exist he may make an order prohibiting any exercise of the alleged right

(4) An order under this section shall be subject to any subsequent decision of a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction

Change —This section has been redrafted by sec 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923), and the substantial changes introduced by this redrafting have been shown by the italicised passages

The principal changes are — (1) The definition of the subject matter in dispute has been modified so as to avoid the difficulties which have been created by decisions raising doubts as to the applicability of the section to rights not resembling easements or to rights acquired by contract (2) the specific reference to rights of way has been omitted as it has been questioned whether it might not by implication exclude negative easements from the scope of this section, (3) the nature of the orders which a Magistrate may pass (see subsections 2 and 3) and their continuance pending the order of a competent Civil Court to the contrary (see subsection 4)

have been clearly defined —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) the words 'make an order in writing' respective claims" have been added in order to bring this section into a line with sec 145. Doubts have been expressed as to the procedure to be followed in cases under sec 147 and we have introduced amendments here to make it clear the procedure is to be that laid down in section 145 —Report of the Committee (1911)

464 Dispute —In order to establish the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to proceed under this section it is necessary that a dispute exist between two persons concerning the right to the use of any land or water. 22 W R 48. The dispute contemplated by this section must at any rate be some substantial dispute necessitating the interference, in some way or other, of the criminal authorities. It would not be sufficient that there should be a mere discussion or verbal altercation between persons claiming rights of the kind described. There must be an actual dispute. Cal 194. See Note 393 under sec 145.

If on entering on an inquiry a Magistrate finds that the rights of parties have been judicially ascertained by a decree of Civil Court he should not enter into any investigation as he cannot assume that a dispute will be continued on a question which has been set at rest by a judicial decision on the rights of parties—11 Bom 584.

465 Likelihood of breach of peace —An order cannot be passed under this section unless the Magistrate is of opinion that the dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace—6 M I J 103 Parasram v Govind 25 Cr L J 344 (Nag). In order to give jurisdiction to a Magistrate under this section he must be satisfied from Police reports or other materials that there is an imminent danger of a breach of the peace resulting from the dispute between the parties concerned. Where the materials before the Magistrate did not disclose the fact that there was an imminent danger of a breach of the peace any evidence that he might have taken later in the course of the trial could not give him a jurisdiction which he did not otherwise possess—23 Cal 557. But see 33 Cal 33 cited at p 293 and

466 Right to use land or water —This section applies to disputes as to the right to use any land or water as distinct from disputes as to title to or possession of the land itself for which provision is made in sec 145—Ram Dulare v Ajudhya 16 O C 192. 14 Cr L J 605.

In a Madras case it was held that the words land or water used in this section should be taken in their ordinary significance without any extended meaning given to them by section 145—Palaniyandi v Jeyappa 17 Cr L J 235 (Mad). In a Calcutta case also it was held that the word land in this section did not include crop or produce as in sec 145—Ali Mohammad v Fakrudin 2 C W N 1030. 22 Cr L J

The present amendment however expressly lays down that those words are to have the same meaning as in sec 145

Since this section as now amended includes rights claimed as an easement it therefore applies to rights to the use of land or water belonging to others See also Emp v Ganpat 4 C W N 779 The contrary view taken in 29 Mad 97 is no longer correct

Right to take from a hat —A dispute as regards the right to collect tolas (small perquisites) from a hat on one day every year is one concerning the right of use of any land within the meaning of this section—Sarat v Miralal 21 C W N 439 24 C I J 137 18 Cr L J 113

Rights arising out of contract —Prior to the present amendment of this section it was held that a dispute between a landlord and his tenant regarding the right of the latter to reconstruct a gola which had fallen down was not a matter properly coming within the operation of sec 147 The settlement of such a dispute involved issues of right which could properly be determined by a Civil Court The right of use of land contemplated by sec 147 was one of an entirely different description resembling a right of easement and not one arising from the terms of a contract between landlord and tenant—Emp v Ganpat 4 C W N 779 See also Arunachalam v Chidambaram 29 Vad 97 But this is no longer the law By reason of the present amendment the rights arising out of a contract will also fall under this section See notes under Charge above Before the present amendment the words of the section were the right of use of any land and water (including any right of way or other easement over the same) The words of the present section are more general

Right to use of water —A Magistrate can take action under this section if he is satisfied that a dispute regarding the right to irrigate from a tank is likely to cause a breach of the peace—O S C 61 Where it was found that the plaintiff had a right to the flow of water for purposes of irrigation from a certain channel passing through a village of the defendant who obstructed such flow by erecting bunds it was held that the Magistrate was competent under this section to direct the removal of the obstruction—Pasupati v Nandalal 5 C W N 67 Dalvir v Khodada 36 Cal 923 14 C W N 179 13 W R 51

Where Christians were prevented by Hindus from the lawful exercise of their right to take water from a well it was held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction under this section to pass an order prohibiting the Hindus from interfering with the exercise of that right—Hindus v Christians 21 M I J 486 11 Cr L J 721

Right to let off water —The right to let off water by the natural course in which it has always flowed and would always flow so as to prevent inundation of one's own land is a natural right of every land holder to the use and enjoyment of his own land Where the second party erected a bund on the boundary of the first party's village to prevent the flow of such water the Magistrate had jurisdiction to direct the removal of the bund—Doulat v Sna Pershad 15 C L J 267 12 Cr L J 319

Right to fish—There is nothing in this section which limits its operation only to easements. This section relates also to rights in the nature of easements for instance the right to fish in a bhil—Dukhi Molla v Halway 23 Cal 55 Kali Kissen v Anund Chunder 23 Cal 557

Right to ferry—A dispute regarding right to use a ferry comes within the scope of this section—Hartull d h v Bajrang 3 C W N 148

Right to take sandal paste from idol—A right to take sandalwood paste removed from the person of the idol is not a right to the use of any land or water within the meaning of this section and therefore this section does not apply to a dispute regarding such right—4 Bom I R 438

Right to worship—A right to perform the duties of a Pujari in a temple is not a right to the use of any land. It is the worship which is disputed and not the use of land. Therefore, a dispute regarding such a right can not be the basis of a proceeding under this section—37 Cal 578 Surendra v Sashi Bhusan 52 Cal 959 42 C L J 127. Where the matters in dispute cannot be adjudicated by a Civil Court (e.g. disputes relating to performance of worship and other religious ceremonies) Magistrates have no jurisdiction to deal with those matters under sec 147. In such matters if the Magistrate apprehends that there will be a breach of the peace he is to adopt the procedure prescribed by Chapter VIII and to take security—14 Bom 25. But in Mad Musaliar v Kunji 11 Mad 323, Kader Balcha v Kader Balcha 29 Mad 237 3 Bom L R 416, Sinnarami v Palani 48 M L J 528 26 Cr L J 1057 and Chidambara v Seigoda 27 M L J 587 15 Cr L J 671 a right to worship in a mosque or to officiate as Kazi therein or to perform a puja has been held to come within the operation of this section.

A dispute as regards the offerings made in a temple is a dispute as regards moveable property and therefore does not fall under this section—Ram Sarin v Raghunandin 38 Cal 387 13 C L J 445

Right of privacy—A right of privacy e.g. a right to enter upon the premises of another and close the windows and doors to ensure privacy is not a right to prevent the doing of anything in or upon any tangible immovable property within the meaning of this section. The remedy of the person claiming such right is by civil suit and by injunction—In re Gerdhadas Ratanlal 357

Right to use a ferry is not a right to the use of land and water and is not therefore contemplated by this section—In re Shankar 15 Bom I R 329 14 Cr L J 400. But it will now fall under this section.

Right of way—A Magistrate is competent to order the removal of an obstruction to a right of way caused by the owner of the land, be a likelihood of a breach of the peace in consequence of such obstruction—Lalit Chandra v. Tarini, 3 C. W. N. 335 In a dispute as to the right of way, the Magistrate should decide whether the complainant had been in use and occupation of the road, and if so, for how long, and if he finds him to be in possession should retain him in it, leaving the owner of the land to refer the question of the right to the easement to the Civil Court The Magistrate should not decide against the complainant because he may have another right of way leading to the same place—2 W. R. 64

Right to use pub. way—This section can be applied even when the right of way claimed is a right to a public path The terms of this section are wide enough to cover the cases of public as well as private right of way The Magistrate has therefore jurisdiction under this section to direct a person who has obstructed a public pathway by a fence, not to obstruct such pathway—Karuppanna v. Kandiam, 26 M. L. J. 223; 15 Cr. L. J. 362 A right to take a car in procession along a public road to a temple is a right of user of land falling under this section—In re Nasu-pa, 27 Bom. L. R. 1055 26 Cr. L. J. 1422 The Magistrate has jurisdiction under this section to pass order even against the right of passage through a public street But he ought not to pass such a prohibitory order, unless it is clearly proved that there is a right by custom or by grant or by a statute in one section of the public to prevent another section of the public from using the public street on particular occasions or for particular purposes, when such use is ordinarily and prima facie lawful—Sudhaimithu v. Inan, 16 Cr. L. J. 707 (Mad.) When the subject of a dispute is a public highway, a Magistrate has no power to object to the lawful use of it by any class of persons Except when danger to the public health is occasioned the conveyance of a corpse along a highway is not an unlawful use of the highway Therefore an order that the Hindus should not carry corpses through a street to which the Muhammadans object, is illegal—7 Mad. 49 The right to use a public way for carrying corpses is a natural and ordinary right of citizens, and it is open to question whether section 147 applies to cases of dispute concerning the exercise of such a right—6 M. L. J. 193

Right to prevent procession.—A Magistrate is not authorised to pass an order prohibiting a religious procession under this section, where he has not found that the right to prevent such a procession exists in the complaining party—Q. E. v. Madhadas, Ratanlal 518.

467. Easements—This section is not confined to easements acquired by uninterrupted enjoyment for 20 years provided by sec 26 of the Limitation Act—13 C. W. N. 859 This term includes profits a prendre—23 Cal. 55

This section is not limited in its operation only to easements but relates also to rights in the nature of easements, e. g., a right to fish—Dukhi

v Halway 23 Cal 55 or a right to moor boats and dry fishing nets on the land of another—Kalidumar v Bejoy 21 Cr I J 697 (Cal)

This section applies to positive as well as to negative easements. See the Statement of Objects and Reasons cited under heading Change supra 468 Preliminary order in writing.—This section as now amended requires that the Magistrate must record as under section 145 a preliminary proceeding stating the ground of his being satisfied as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace. The contrary rulings in 2 C W N 670 and 27 M L J 587 are hereby overruled.

The preliminary order under section 147 just as in the case of an order under sec 145 directing the parties to appear for the inquiry must direct them to appear before the Magistrate himself who issued the preliminary order. An order directing them to appear before another Magistrate is without jurisdiction and all proceedings on an inquiry so conducted are invalid—Misra Chaudhury v Narasingh 3 P L T 186 22 Cr L J 483

469 Inquiry as under Sec 145.—A case under this section is to be decided by the same procedure and on the same principles as a case under sec 145—Ravi Saran v Raghunandan 38 Cal 387. Section 147 clearly says that the procedure under this section must be as under sec 145 which includes the filing of written statements taking of evidence and if necessary local investigation. Therefore an order under section 147 passed on proceedings taken under sec 133 without any action in accordance with sec 145 is without jurisdiction—Abdool v Safar Ali 15 C W N 667 12 Cr L J 43. Where the petitioners set up a right of easement over a road which the opposite party attempted to close and the Magistrate instead of following the procedure laid down in this section went over to the office of the opposite party examined certain documents and correspondences in respect of the road and then passed an order declaring the road to belong to the opposite party and forbidding the petitioners to enter upon the road held that the procedure was wholly unjustifiable as he made inquiries in the absence of the petitioners and without giving them an opportunity of adducing their own evidence and examining witnesses and passed the order without coming to a distinct finding as to the alleged right of easement set up by the petitioners—Narendra v E I Jy, 5 P L T 419 25 Cr L J 455 A I R 1924 Pat 717.

When proceedings are started under sec 145 on the basis of a report but during the trial the Court finds it is a matter falling under sec 147 he can convert the proceedings into one under that section—Bandhu v Wahid Ali 26 Cr L J 558 (Cal). In re Anwar 15 Cr L J 512 (515) 26 Bom L R 436.

Long and protracted inquiry.—Question of title.—This section is likely to involve a long and complicated inquiry.

presence of a large number of people the proper course for the Magistrate to follow is to bind down under sec. 107 such of the persons as are likely to disturb the peace—Ka'ti Kissen v. Anand, 23 Cal 357. So also, where the settlement of a dispute involves a question of right which can only be determined by a Civil Court the proper course for the Magistrate is to proceed under sec. 107—Emp v. Ganpat 4 C W N 779, Anand Aslam v. Chidambaram 29 May 97 36 Cal 923. This section does not convert the Magistrate into a Civil Court which is to determine the rights between the parties or to discuss and consider any pre-judicial damage done to individuals—22 W R 44.

Inquiry by subordinate Magistrate—Where a District Magistrate on being satisfied that there exists a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace as regards the right to perform a religious ceremony refers the case to a Magistrate for inquiry the latter is bound under this section to inquire into the matter in the manner provided by Sec. 145—In re Dhyaneshwar 3 Dec 1 R 416. But see Note 414 under Section 145.

470. Notice to parties—The inquiry contemplated by this section is a judicial inquiry and the opinion to be formed must be a judicial one formed upon evidence legally before the Magistrate. The evidence before the Magistrate would not be legal if it were taken behind the back of persons who claimed or denied the right &c. if they had not been represented at the inquiry and had no notice of it—Da-hoo Lal v. Domi Lal 21 Cal 727. Where an order was passed under this section without giving notice to the party concerned the order was without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside—1909 F I R 103. Where the proceedings were originally started in respect of a portion of a pathway but subsequently the Court amended the proceedings by making them applicable to the whole pathway without notice to the party affected held that the final order was not binding on the party affected—Janaki v. Monmohan, 23 Cr L J. 674. A I R 1923 Cal 263.

Actual notice should be given to all the persons claiming or denying the right, notice to servants of such persons is not equivalent to notice to them—Dathoolal v. Domilal 21 Cal 727. The inquiry presumes not that one party only, but that both parties to the dispute will be afforded an opportunity of appearing and adducing evidence on all the material facts—In re Alfred Lindsay, 4 May 121.

471. Parties—In an inquiry under this section it is sufficient if persons who claim for themselves the right though that right be derived from others (e.g., right to fish in a dhul), are made parties. It is not necessary that the proprietors (of the dhul) should be added as parties—Dudhi v. Halooj 23 Cal 55.

A Magistrate is not competent to add parties to a proceeding under Sec 147 after making a preliminary order. An order made after the addition of parties is null and void only as against the added party but is binding on those to whom it is properly directed—Pasupati v Nando Lal 5 C W N 67. The Nagpur J C Court holds that the addition of parties after making the preliminary order is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the proceedings—Parasira v Gopal 25 Cr L J 353.

472 Evidence.—The inquiry contemplated by the section is a judicial inquiry and the opinion of the Magistrate must be a judicial one formed upon evidence legally before him—21 Cal 727. A party against whom proceedings are instituted is entitled to produce evidence to prove that the case does not fall within this section—1909 P L R 105.

An order passed merely on a written statement, without taking any evidence in proof of the allegation contained in the written statement, is bad in law—30 Cal 918. So also an order passed without giving the parties an opportunity of calling evidence is one without jurisdiction—20 Cr L J 120. See also 5 P L T 419 cited in Note 469 above.

But where the allegation of one party is admitted by the other no evidence is necessary in addition to the written statement—Haromohan v Gobind 7 C W N 351.

Local inspection.—In a matter under this section the Magistrate is bound to hear the evidence tendered by the parties. He cannot summarily deal with the case after local inspection—Imp v Ganpat 4 C W N 779. A decision of the Magistrate based substantially upon impressions obtained as a result of his local inspection is bad and liable to be set aside. But a decision based on the evidence as well as local inspection (the one corroborating the other) is not illegal—Mohammad Musa v Shyam Surdar, 2 P L T 681. 22 Cr I J 739. The Magistrate can make a local inspection even prior to taking evidence in the case. But the finding must be based on evidence duly recorded and not merely upon the impressions formed on local inspection—Aldil Hamid v Hasan Raza 4 P L T 297. 24 Cr L J 487.

473 User of right.—In the absence of a finding that the right has been exercised within the periods specified by the proviso to subsection (2) the final order under this section cannot be maintained—Sirkawal v Bhujia Singh 5 P L T 457. 25 Cr L J 996. Where the right is exercisable at all times of the year there must be a finding that the right was exercised within three months—Guru Prasad v Lachman 14 Cr L J 303 (Cal). 1909 P L R 105. Grant v Padarath 1 P L T 364. 22 Cr. L J 463. Where it is proved that the first party have had an uninterrupted use of water of a ak for a period of 20 years which they have enjoyed as an element and of right and the erection of a bund has led to dispute there is then a sufficient finding that the right in dispute has exercised within either of the periods mentioned in the proviso—Pasappa v Nanda Lal 5 C W N 67 Where the non exercise of the right within the period specified in the proviso was due to circumstances beyond the control of the party claiming the right & g where the non exercise was due to obstructions caused by the opponents of such party, the proviso to subsection (2) does not apply The proviso obviously contemplates a non exercise for reasons within the control of the persons claiming the right—In re Basappa 27 Bom L R 1038 20 Cr L J 1422

Burden of proof — The right to restrain another from exercising the ordinary proprietary rights over his own land & g the right to restrain another from cutting a bund on his own land and thus getting a liberal supply of water on his own land is of the nature of an easement different from the ordinary rights of owners of land The burden of proof that such a right exists lies on the party alleging it 11 Cal 32

474 Nature of order — The order under this section is one permitting a thing to be done or directing that a thing shall not be done This section does not enable the Magistrate to make a purely declaratory order It only enables him to prevent arbitrary interruption by any person of rights actually enjoyed which have been exercised by the public or by a person or a class or persons—5 Cal 194 This section is not intended to provide a substitute for a civil suit to declare the rights of parties but only empowers the Magistrate to order that possession shall not be taken by any party to the exclusion of the public until that party establishes his right in a Civil Court—6 W R 74

The words of subsection (2) do not give the Magistrate any power of directing one of the parties to do a positive act by way of mandatory injunction The power given by this clause is analogous to the power of a Civil Court to grant a temporary injunction by issuing a prohibitory order restraining any person from doing any act which interferes with the right of another Therefore where the second party raised a wall on her own land blocking the windows in the house of the first party and thereby shut out light and air from a room in that house the Magistrate had no power to order the second party to demolish the wall—Hari Mah v Hari Das 41 C I J 568 26 Cr L J 1265 30 C W N 238

Under subsection (3) a Magistrate is competent to make an order for the removal of an obstruction to a right of way if there be a likelihood of a breach of the peace in consequence of such obstruction—Lalit Chandra v Tarini 5 C W N 335, or an order for the removal of an obstruction to the right to the flow of water caused by the erection of lands—Pasappa v Nandalal 5 C W N 67 36 Cal 923 Manzur Hussain v Gouri Lal 20 Cr L J 209 (Pat) If the obstruction is caused to a public way or thoroughfare the Magistrate has no power to order for the removal of such obstruction under this section but should proceed under Chapter V (Sec 133)—In re Iutchmah 1 West 143 5 W R 5 In re Alfred Lindsay 4 Mad 171 16 M L J 33 and Sudharmitsu v Euan 16 Cr L J 767 (Mad) however it has been held that Sec 147 can be applied whether the right of way claimed is a right to a public path or a private path the terms of the section are wide enough to cover both cases and the fact that Sec 133 expressly provides for an order by the Magistrate directing the removal of obstruction to public pathways does not necessarily imply that a similar order cannot be passed in proceedings under Sec 147

This section does not enable the Magistrate to order the Police to remove the obstruction There is no indication in the Code that the Legislature intended the Magistrate to carry out an order under this section through the agency of the Police This section clearly contemplates orders directed to persons who are parties to the dispute—36 Cal 973 contra—Doulat v Siva Prasad 15 C L J 267 12 Cr L J 319 where it was held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to direct the complainant party to remove the obstruction with the assistance of the Police

Under subsection (3) a Magistrate has jurisdiction to make a prohibitory order (order directing that such thing shall not be done,) against a party who is found not to have the right which he claims Where the party claimed a right of passage over certain land which the other party denied and the Magistrate found that the right of easement did not exist the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass an order directing that the first party should not use the right of passage until he obtained the decision of a competent Court adjudging his right—Pyari Acharya v Harish Chandra, 23 C W N 956 20 Cr L J 251

Order must affect parties only—This section contemplates an order to be passed between parties to the proceedings only An order affecting persons who are not parties to the proceedings is not within the purview of this section and is therefore liable to be set aside as affecting jurisdiction—Pillai v Darya 20 Cr L J 110 (Nag)

Effect of order on subsequent suit—The fact that in a dispute relating to a right of way a Magistrate has passed an order in favour of the party claiming that right does not relieve that party from the onus of proving the claim in a subsequent civil suit brought to establish that right—L R 555

Duration of order—An order under this section is bad in form if it contains no restriction of time for which it is to operate—In re Ahmednagar 14 Bom 25

475 Revival of proceedings—Where during the proceedings under sec 147 the parties referred the dispute to a civil

whereupon the Magistrate made an order to the effect that further proceedings were unnecessary and they were therefore stayed but after the arbitration proceedings (which remained pending for one year) became ineffectual the Magistrate continued the proceedings under sec 147 held that the Magistrate's order staying further proceedings ousted his jurisdiction to continue the proceedings. Moreover the Magistrate could not revive the proceedings unless he had drawn up fresh proceedings and unless he was satisfied that there was a fresh dispute likely to cause a fresh breach of the peace after the arbitration proceedings ceased and he was not justified in assuming that the causes which originally existed still continued to exist—*Kalananda v. Change — Subsection (3) has been amended by sec 31 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (VIII of 1933) For reasons see Note 478 below

476 Local inquiry — Local investigation should only be ordered in cases where they are absolutely required by the Courts on subordinate points for a determination of the main issue in the case for instance in cases in which it is necessary to ascertain by measurement the disputed areas of land or to ascertain whether particular lands are identical with the lands detailed in documents and in such cases only. When however, any fact can be elicited by evidence, that evidence should be heard by the Court itself — Cal H C Cr No 41 of 1866. The scope of local inquiry is extremely limited. It should be restricted solely to some question relating to the feature of the property about which the dispute has arisen, and should not be directed to any matter which can be proved before the Magistrate by oral evidence such as the question of actual possession — In re Baihunt, 3 C L R 134. Lachmi Narain v Mukhran, 24 Cr L J 307 (Pat). The object of local inspection is to understand and appreciate the topography of the land in dispute in order to aid the Magistrate in appreciating the evidence offered by the Court but the local inspection cannot take the place of legal evidence much less the result thereof can be used as a basis for the decision — Ram Ratan v Tarak Nath, 13 Cr L J 412 A I R 1922 Pat 249. Thus in a case where the levels and the fall of water are concerned, local inspection is imminently necessary — Doulat v Siva Prasad 15 C L J 267. So also where rights of irrigation and rights of taking water through particular reservoirs are concerned, a local inspection is immediately necessary — Abdul Hamid v Hasan 4 P L T 297 24 Cr L J 487.

There is no hard and fast rule that in every case under this chapter a local investigation must be held whether the parties desire it or not — Upendra v Prasanno 20 Cr L J 17 (Cal). For instance it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to hold such an investigation whenever he is unable to ascertain as to which party is in possession — Ibid.

The term 'local inquiry' in this section contemplates delegation of judicial functions the mere making a survey of the disputed land and preparing a map thereof do not amount to a local inquiry under this section, because they are not judicial but purely ministerial acts and such acts can be entrusted to a person other than a Magistrate e g to a pleader Commissioner (or even an amin). The report of such a person cannot be read as evidence under subsection (2) but he must be called as a witness and examined and cross examined as to his report—Chulai Mahlo v Su vendra, 1 Pat 75 3 P L T 17 23 Cr L J 152

Who can make the inquiry —The trying Magistrate can himself make the local inquiry Though as a rule it is better to have the local investigation carried out by some other person there is nothing in law to prevent the presiding Magistrate from conducting the inquiry himself, provided he records what he saw and does not act upon hearsay evidence—Doulat v Sita Persad 15 C L J 267 Abdul Hamid v Hasan 4 P L T 297

This section empowers the presiding Magistrate to depute a subordinate Magistrate to make the inquiry but the person deputed must be a Magistrate not a Kanungoe—7 C L R 352 If however the trying Magistrate deposes a Kanungoe to make an inquiry his report cannot be taken as evidence in the case like the report of a sub-Magistrate but the Kanungoe (like any other private person who has seen the place) must come into the witness box and depose on oath as to what he saw—Achambit v Sarada 12 Cr L J 480 (Cal)

The deputed Magistrate must make the inquiry himself he cannot delegate it to some body else—Jaiwant v Rana Rao 20 Cr L J 107 (Nag)

Recording evidence by the deputed Magistrate —The local inquiry authorised by this section is not merely a local inspection by the sub-Magistrate but includes the act of recording evidence by such Magistrate in the course of the inquiry But the recording of evidence by the sub Magistrate does not absolve the trying Magistrate from the duty imposed upon him by Sec 145 (4) of receiving any evidence produced before him by the parties and taking any further evidence he may think necessary Where a first class Magistrate recorded no evidence himself but acted solely upon the evidence taken by a sub Magistrate at a local inquiry the former must be deemed to have acted without jurisdiction but this defect or irregularity will be cured by sec 537 and the High Court will not interfere—Muthusamy v Kalinga 33 M L J 78 18 Cr L J 715

477 Report of the deputed Magistrate —Subsection (2) provides that the report of the deputed Magistrate may be read as evidence in the case but it is not necessary to examine such Magistrate on oath as a witness—Achambit v Sarada 12 Cr L J 480 (Cal)

When a local inquiry is instituted and the result reported such report becomes a part of the proceedings in the case and the party affected by it is entitled to be acquainted with the result of it and to have an opportunity of rebutting the report if he thinks necessary so to do—Jaiwant v Rama Rao 20 Cr L J 107 (Nag) 21 W R 25 If a Magistrate makes a local inquiry he must make a note of what he saw and must place it on the record so that the parties may be in a position to know what impression the Magistrate has got by the local inquiry. It is possible that the Magistrate may have formed a wrong impression and if the results of his inspection are recorded, the parties would be in a position to know if there has been an error, and to remove the wrong impression formed by the Magistrate—Abdul Hamid v. Hasan 4 P L T 297, 24 Cr L J 487.

Decision based on report—A Magistrate cannot base his decision merely on the report of the subordinate Magistrate, without examining any witness—Pilambar v. Saroda, 13 Cr L J 777 10 A L J 465, Ram-ratan v. Taraknath, 25 Cr L J 412 (Pat). In Muthusami v. Kalinga, 17 Cr L J 478 (Mad) and Piziruddin v. Totiyennissa 14 Cr L J 302 (Cal) however, the Magistrate deciding the case on the basis of the report of the inquiry was held to have acted within his jurisdiction. Where the trying Magistrate based his order on the report of the sub-Magistrate and on the evidence recorded by him during the local inquiry, and both parties were quite content to abide by the result of the sub-Magistrate's inquiry, and no objections were advanced before the trying Magistrate against the sub-Magistrate's finding, it was held that the order of the trying Magistrate was not without jurisdiction and should not be interfered with in revision—Muthusami v. Kalinga 33 M L J 78 18 Cr L J 715.

478 Costs—Before this section was amended by the 1923 Amendment Act, it was held that the only costs which a Magistrate could award under this section were those incurred for witnesses or pleaders' fees or both. He could not make an order for any other costs e.g. costs on account of damage to crops—32 Cal 602. So also, he could not include in the costs the penalty paid by one party on behalf of the other under section 44 (3) of the Stamp Act in respect of an improperly stamped document produced in evidence in a proceeding under sec. 145 of this Code—Popuri v. Tummalagunta, 13 M L T 224 13 Cr L J 297.

Under the present section as amended the word "includes" shows that the Magistrate is able to award costs other than those incurred for witnesses or pleaders' fees.

In awarding costs for witnesses and pleaders' fees, the Magistrate should not include additional costs incurred for extra fees and for travelling and other expenses of a like nature incurred for bringing pleaders or counsels from a distance—9 C W N 887.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to award only the actual costs incurred, and the order must give particulars as to how the Magistrate arrived at the figure, otherwise the order is bad—Uday Narain v. Satish, 14 C W N 1311. The order awarding costs is a judicial order and therefore must be based on proper materials, there must be materials on the record to show that the Magistrate arrived at the figure as the result of the calculation of the costs incurred by the party. An order arbitrarily awarding a round sum of Rs 50 or Rs 100 as costs without there being anything on the record to show that the said amount was actually incurred is bad in law and must be set aside—Jhama v Thakur 1 P L T 369 21 Cr L J 675

Hira Mahton v Raj Kumar 3 P L T 484 23 Cr L J 508 Akhu v Darbari 2 P L T 267 So before making an order as to costs it is necessary and proper that the Magistrate should hold an inquiry as to what expenditure in costs was actually incurred—Nemdhari v Ram Tahal 17 Cr L J 348 (Pat)

If the costs are such as would fall within the scope of this section the High Court will not consider whether they are excessive or deficient—Bansilal Syed Mohd Akbar 15 C W N 811 12 Cr L J 376

The costs will be recoverable as fines See Sec 547 The words 'All costs' have been omitted as unnecessary because a general provision to that effect has been made in sec 547

Costs in revision —The costs referred to in this section are the costs incurred in the magisterial proceedings Magistrates have power under this section to direct by whom any costs incurred by parties in proceedings before them under this Chapter are to be paid So also the High Court in revision can pass any order which the Magistrate himself could have passed i e the High Court can in revision direct the costs incurred before the Magistrate to be paid by one party to another But the High Court cannot in revision of proceedings under Ch XII direct the costs incurred before the High Court in revision to be paid by one party to another Even the award of costs cannot be treated as incidental or consequential to the disposal of a revision petition within the meaning of sec 423 (1) (d) for it does not necessarily follow from an order passed in revision—Verappa v Arudayammal 48 Mad 262 (F B) 48 M L J 106 26 Cr L J 707 A I R 1925 Mad 438

But the Bombay High Court is of opinion that the High Court can award the costs incurred in the hearing of the revision petition such power is given by sec 439 read with sec 423 (d)—Jiba Bai v Chandulal 7 Bom L R 1353 A I R 1926 Bom 91

Who can order costs —Only the Magistrate who passes the final order under Sec 145, 146 or 147 can pass an order awarding costs though the actual assessment may be made by his successor This cannot be interpreted as authorising the successor of the Magistrate who passed the final order under sec 145 to award costs to the successful party Where the Magistrate making the final order declaring possession left the district and his successor made an order granting costs the order as to costs was set aside as made without jurisdiction—13 O C. 66

The Magistrate passing the order as to costs must be the Magistrate passing the decision in the case—Nagar Chandra v Siddhartha 47 Cal 974 24 C. W N 672 But he may or may not be the Magistrate who initiated the proceedings under this chapter—Where the proceedings under this chapter are initiated by one Magistrate and the final order is passed by another it is the latter Magistrate who can award costs—9 Mad 373

Time of awarding costs—An order for costs should ordinarily be made at the time of the original order and in the presence of parties—4 Cal 757 13 O C 66 The award of costs under this section should be made by the Magistrate at the time of giving his decision unless for any reason the consideration of the matter is reserved for any future stage of the proceedings—22 Cal 387 There is no hard and fast rule which lays down that an order for costs must necessarily be made at the time the judgment is delivered—Doulat v Siva Prasad 15 C L J 267 The order for costs may be made within a reasonable time after the passing of the judgment—Nafar v Siddhartha 47 Cal 974 24 C W N 672 In the usual course an award should almost invariably be contemporaneous with the decision of the main question and the order passed thereon But the fact that the award of costs has not been made at the very time of the decision of the case does not necessarily render the award invalid and when the circumstances of a case really require it the disposal of the question of costs may be postponed—Vythinaatha v Mayandi 29 Mad 373

If the other awarding costs is not passed at the time of passing the decision in the case it must be passed within a reasonable time after the disposal of the case and in the presence of both parties—Vythinaatha v Mayandi 29 Mad 373 Nafar v Siddhartha 47 Cal 974 Doulat v Siva Pershad 15 C L J 267 What is reasonable time must depend upon the circumstances of each case—47 Cal 974 An order awarding costs made long (three months) after the original order and without giving notice to the parties affected and without allowing them an opportunity to appear and show cause is bad—24 Cal 757 Palamandi v Sammandi 16 L W 613 24 Cr L J 80 (Mad) But an order awarding costs made ten days after the passing of the order under sec 145 (6) is not illegal by reason of the delay—Chadhari v Ramsingh 19 Cr L J 390 (Pat)

478 A Assessment of costs—If he can assess costs—Where the Magistrate who passed the decision under Sec 145 had already awarded the costs it is not necessary that the costs should be assessed by the same officer who decided the case—22 Cal 384 Another Magistrate (e g his successor) has jurisdiction to assess the amount of costs—23 Cal 37 (dissenting from 21 Cal 609) 22 Cal 384 Barsi v Sjed Mohd, 15 C W N 811 Sulbiah v Chokkalinga 27 M L J 613 15 Cr L J 676 Though a Magistrate did not himself pass the order under sec 145 still he has jurisdiction to assess costs—10 C W N 1030

the assessment of costs should be contemporaneous with the order awarding costs. But there is no inflexible rule that the costs must be assessed at the time of passing the decision in the case—22 Cal 384. Once an order as to costs is made, the amount of costs may be subsequently assessed—Emp v Medapali 14 M L T 195 14 Cr L J 570. But the assessment must be made within a reasonable time after the award of costs. An assessment of costs more than two years after the date of the order awarding the costs is bad in law—71 Cal 609.

Application by legal representative for assessment of costs—Where through the negligence of the Court's officers the amount of costs was not included in the final order directing payment of costs to the petitioner, and nearly three years after the legal representative of the petitioner (the petitioner having died in the interval) applied to the Magistrate's successor in office for the costs being assessed it was held that the application was sustainable and the applicant was entitled to have the costs assessed. Although this Code contains no special provision for bringing on record the representatives of the deceased parties still the Courts have power within reasonable limits to invent rules of procedure for that purpose unless the Legislature prohibits them from doing so. Courts should always lean in favour of that view of the law which would enable a party who has got an order in his favour to obtain the fruits of that order and not in favour of highly technical objections which render the Court's order infructuous and a mere piece of waste paper—Subbia v Chockalinga 27 M L J 613 15 Cr L J 676.

Notice to parties—An order awarding costs should be made in the presence of parties—Vythinaitha v Majandi 29 Mad 373. An order awarding and assessing costs without allowing all the parties affected an opportunity to appear and show cause is bad—24 Cal 757. A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order under this section making the party liable for a certain sum as costs without notice to him so that he may have an opportunity of contesting the same—28 Cal 302. Bansi v Syed Mohd, 15 C W N 811, Dwarka v Nathani 19 Cr L J 764 (Pat).

Even an order setting aside a previous order as to costs cannot be passed without giving notice to the opposite party—10 C W N 1030.

Revision—Orders under this section are now open to revision. See Note 447 under sec 145. The ruling in 9 C W N 887 is no longer correct.

149. Every police-officer may interpose for the purpose of preventing, and shall, to the best of his ability, prevent, the commission of any cognizable offence

Police to prevent cognizable offences

478B Scope —This section provides for the prevention of cognizable offences only. Section 23 of the Police Act (Act V of 1861) appears to give wider powers for the prevention of offences in general.—S L B R 329

The word 'interpose' in this section connotes the idea of actively intervening and not merely a prohibition by word of mouth. The word is not wide enough to cover all orders given by police officers. It was not intended by the Legislature that the police officer would be empowered to order a certain thing to be done or not to be done with the consequence of the disobedience being punishable under sec 188 I P Code. To hold that under sec 149 Cr P Code a police officer can pass any order he thinks desirable would be to hold that his word is law. If his powers were to be so wide it would be unnecessary for the Magistrate or the police to take any precautionary measure in advance. It would be quite sufficient to send down a Sub Inspector to the scene and let him pass all sorts of sweeping orders the disobedience of which would entail conviction. Such wide powers vested in a police officer would interfere unreasonably with the ordinary liberty of private citizens and could not have been contemplated by this section.—Emp v Raghunath 47 All 205 6 Cr L J 599 A I R 19-5 All 165

150. Every police officer receiving information of a design to commit any cognizable offence shall communicate such information to the police-officer to whom he is subordinate, and to any other officer whose duty it is to prevent or take cognizance of the commission of any such offence.

Information of design to commit such offences

As to the powers and duties of a police officer see secs 82-85

151. A police-officer knowing of a design to commit any cognizable offence may arrest, without orders from a Magistrate and without warrant, the person so designing if it appears to such offi that the commission of the offence cannot be otherwise prevented

By sec 151, a Police officer may arrest without warrant, if it appears to him that the commission of an offence cannot otherwise be prevented. Should he do so his subsequent procedure must be regulated by sec 60—Bengal Police Manual, 2nd Edition p 374

152 A police-officer may, of his own authority interpose Prevention of injury to prevent any injury attempted to be to public property. committed in his view to any public property, moveable or immoveable, or the removal or injury of any public landmark or buoy or other mark used for navigation.

153 (1) Any officer in charge of a police station may, Inspection of weights without a warrant, enter any place within and measures the limits of such station for the purpose of inspecting or searching for any weights or measures or instruments for weighing, used or kept therein, whenever he has reason to believe that there are in such place any weights, measures or instruments for weighing which are false

(2) If he finds in such place any weights, measures or instruments for weighing which are false, he may seize the same, and shall forthwith give information of such seizure to a Magistrate having jurisdiction

478C. This section expressly authorises an inspection of the weights and measures by an officer in charge of a Police station In comparing the weights used in the bazar some reasonable allowance should be made for wear and tear and of the rough and ready methods of bazar shop keepers—
Crown v Nanah Chand 1913 P R 20 15 Cr L J 11

This section does not apply to the Police in the towns of Calcutta, Bombay and Madras because similar provisions have been made in Calcutta by secs 55 and 56 of the Calcutta Police Act (Bengal Act IV of 1886) in Bombay by sec 4 of the Bombay City Police Act IV of 1902, and in Madras by sec 32 of the Madras City Police Act III of 1888

See Act XXXI of 1871 relating to weights and measures of capacity, and the rules framed under sec 11 of that Act As to offences relating to weights and measures see Chapter XIII I P Code

PART V.

INFORMATION TO THE POLICE AND THEIR POWERS TO INVESTIGATE.

CHAPTER XIV

This Chapter, except sec 155, does not apply to the Police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay. Sec 155 only applies to the Police of Calcutta and Bombay—Q E v Nilmadhab 1, Cal 595 Q E v Visram Babaji, 21 Bom 495. For Section 154, see Note 509 under that section.

154 Every information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence if given orally to an officer in charge of a police station, shall be reduced to writing by him or under his direction, and be read over to the informant; and every such information, whether given in writing or reduced to writing as aforesaid shall be signed by the person giving it and the substance thereof shall be entered in a book to be kept by such officer in such form as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf.

479 Scope—This section enables a Station House Officer to receive and record the information of the commission of a cognizable offence outside his station limits though he has no power under Sec 157 to conduct an investigation in respect of such offence—Nandamuri v Emperor, 1914 M W N 382 15 Cr L J 62. But see 1915 P R 12 (cited in Note 488 under sec 157).

480 First Information—The word information in this section means something in the nature of a complaint or accusation, or at least information of a crime given with the object of putting the police in motion in order to investigate as distinguished from information obtained by the Police when already investigating a crime. When the information which is first given to the police is of such a vague and indefinite character that it cannot be treated as coming under section 154 so as to make it incumbent upon the officer in charge of the police station to start an investigation, and he may reasonably require more information before doing any further information given to him in such circumstances may within section 154 In such a case such further information will not fall within section 162 The information referred to in section 154 may come from more than one source and more than one such information may be recorded at or about the same time under this section but once the police have taken active steps to investigate any written statements taken by them fall within section 162 and are inadmissible in evidence—Gansa Oraon v K E 2 Pat 517 4 P L T 462 24 Cr L J 641

The information referred to in this section is the first information of the offence by whomsoever given The first information is that information which is given to the police first in point of time and not that which the police may select and record as first information—K E v Bhutnath 7 C W N 345 Thus where upon information given by the Chowkidar of an offence which was duly recorded in the station diary the Sub ins pector went to the Hospital to see the dying man and took down his dying statement and filed it as the first information it was held that the state ment of the Chowkidar and not that of the dying man, was the first in formation of the offence—A E v Daulat 6 C W N 921 Where a per son reported to a police officer that he had seen a certain woman with her throat cut and the officer did not make a record of the fact but subsequent ly treated an information lodged by the woman's father as the first informa tion in the case held that the unrecorded information and not the informa tion given by the woman's father was in fact the first information—Clan Erika v K E 1 Pat 401 3 P L T 771 A I R 1922 Pat 535 The information given by a Chowkidar to the effect that the mother of the ac cused had told him that the latter had assaulted his younger brother whilst under the influence of drink and that he (the Chowkidar) had seen blood stains on the younger brother's head was entered in the station diary but not signed by the Chowkidar and the police officer proceeded to the scene of occurrence and there took down the statement of the wife of the accused and took her thumb impression thereon held that the Chowkidar's information was the first information in the case and that the statement made by the wife of the accused to the investigating officer was not admissible in evidence (sec 162)—Gansa Oraon v K E, 2 Pat 517.

A statement made by a witness during investigation after the police off cer has actually arrived at the scene and himself seen what has happened is not first information—Chittar Singh v Emp 47 All 280 23 A L J 14 A I R 1925 All 303 A statement by a witness to the police officer in the course of an investigation under this chapter and recorded under sec 161 is not first information—Sullan v Wellbourne A I R 1925 Rang. 364 26 Cr L J 1532 The first information is the information given out immediately after the occurrence and reported to the Police and not the information which has been elicited in the course of the investigation The first information is the basis upon which an investigation under this chapter commences. It is erroneously thought that the information on which an investigation is commenced is not the first information of the offence, and that when in the course of investigation something has been elicited which shows that an offence has been committed a first information can be recorded. This is certainly not what the law contemplates. In nearly every trial it is important that it should be known to the judicial officer what were the facts given out immediately after the occurrence and reported to the police, and the object of a first information is to render him so acquainted—King Emp v Bhut Nath, 7 C W N 345 Peary Mohan v Weston, 16 C W N 145 13 Cr L J 65 Autor Singh v Emperor, 17 C W N 1213 14 Cr L J 642. The first information is the basis of the case, and whether it be true or false, it at any rate usually represents what was intended by the informant to be the case set up by him at the time. All Criminal Courts should bear in mind the importance of examining, when there appears to be any necessity to do so, the first information of an offence reduced to writing in accordance with this section. In view of the notorious tendency in this country to improve upon the original statement of facts to strengthen the case as it proceeds and sometimes to add to the persons originally named as the offenders, it is of great importance to know what was said at first. This is specially the case where the Court has to deal with evidence of recognition or where the facts of the crime are established but the question whether all the persons charged with its commission actually participated in it appears to admit of doubt—C P Cr, Part II No 9.

Where the first information was recorded by a police officer some hours after he had begun investigation of the case, but there was no previous information recorded and reduced to writing by him the report falls under this section—Dargahi v Emp, 52 Cal 193 26 Cr L J 1213 A I R 1925 Cal 831. But a statement recorded several days after the commencement of the investigation and after there has been some development is not only not the first information but has very little or no value at all as the original story, because it can be made to fit into the case as then developed—Emperor v Hampu, 11 C W N 554 Peary Mohan v Weston, 16 C W N 145 (Midnapur Damage Suit) 13 Cr L J 65.

An information given to a village Magistrate which it was his bounden duty to pass on to a Police Station House officer who recorded it must be considered as having been given to the latter and recorded as first information under this section and cannot be regarded as a statement recorded during the course of an investigation under sec 16 — S Mad 565.

A statement which is merely the reproduction by the person making it of the statement said to have been made by another person is not first information and not admissible in evidence as such and although the evidence given by that person who furnished the information to the informant could be contradicted by the evidence of the latter, it could not under Sec 155 (3) Evidence Act, be contradicted by what the police recorded as the first information—Emperor v Dina Bandhu, 8 C W N 218.

481 Evidentiary value —The first information recorded by the police is of considerable value at the trial because it shows on what materials the investigation commenced and what was the story then told —Emp v Kampu Auki, 11 C W N 554 In every trial it is important that it should be known to the judicial officer what are the facts given out immediately after the occurrence and reported to the police, and the object of the first information is to render him so acquainted For that purpose the diary in which the first information was recorded as well as the memorandum, if any, made by the police of what the informant said, is admissible in evidence—King Emp v Bhutnall, 7 C W N 345

But although the first information is a document of considerable importance which is in practice always and very rightly produced and proved in criminal trials yet it is not a piece of substantive evidence and can be used only as a previous statement admissible to corroborate or contradict the author of it—Autor Singh v Emp, 17 C W N 1213 14 Cr L J 642 Chillar v Emp, 23 A L J 14 47 All 280 26 Cr L J 554 A report of the commission of an offence made at a thana may be used in a criminal trial to corroborate or cross examine a witness, though such reports are no evidence of the existence of facts therein mentioned —Q E v Ram Sukh, 1897 A W N 47

As the first information report can only be used by the prosecution for the purpose of corroborating in the witness box the person who supplied the information contained in the document, it follows that if the informant himself can only speak from hearsay, the report cannot be used to corroborate such inadmissible evidence of the witness—Sajjan Singh v Emp, 6 Lah 437 26 Cr L J 1489 A I R 19 5 Lah 418

Information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence given orally to an officer in charge of a Police station and reduced to writing by him under this section becomes a public document under section 74 Evidence Act, and its contents may be proved by a certified copy under Sec 77 of that Act—Abdul Rahman v Q E, U B R (1892—1896) 24

Officer in charge of a police station —As to the powers of superior Police officers under this section, see Sec 551 In the absence of the Sub Inspector or Head constable a constable left in charge of a Police station cannot accept any complaint or prepare and submit the first information report of any crime reported to him unless the Local Government shall have given him powers under section 4 (p)

482 Shall be reduced to writing —The object of a first information being to show what was the manner in which the occurrence was related

when the case was first started, it should always be carefully and accurately recorded—Peary Mohan v Weston, 16 C W N 145 If the information be given orally, it must be recorded in plain and simple language, as nearly as possible in the informants own words The use of technical or legal expressions or high flown language or of lengthy and involved sentences is forbidden—Beng Pol Code, p 372 It is of the utmost importance in recording the first information, that the actual words of the complainant should be used and not an Urdu translation of them The recorder should take down the complaint as it is made and not merely his own impression of what the complainant meant to say—Reg and Ord N W P, p 268

Power to question the informant —If the information whether given orally or presented in writing be not complete in itself the Police officer should elicit by interrogation such further information as may be necessary—Beng Pol Code p 372 See also C P Pol Man p 147

483 Shall be signed —The informant's statement when complete should be read over to him and he must sign it The report should show that this has been done In heinous cases the statement should be read over to the informant in the presence of one or more respectable and uninterested witnesses who should also be asked to sign it—Beng Pol Code p 372

Procedure in the case of written informations —If the information be tendered in writing it will be endorsed with the date of presentation, and the person tendering should be required to sign it (if he has not already done so) If the written information relates to facts with which the person tendering it is acquainted and which he is able and willing to state orally the mere incident that a written report is presented does not make it unnecessary to take down the information from the reporter's own lips If the person who brings the written information knows nothing of the facts to which it refers he should be required to state the circumstances under which he brought it—C P Pol Man, p 147

484 Punishment —As to punishment for giving false information to the Police see secs 182 203 211 I P C Even if the information is not reduced to writing under this section the person giving the false information may be convicted for preferring a false charge under sec 211 I P C—27 Mad 127

A police officer refusing to enter in the Diary a report made to him concerning the commission of an offence and making instead an entry totally different from the information given is punishable under sec 177 I P C—Q E v Md Ismail Khan 20 All 151

As to punishment for refusal by the person giving information to sign the statement made by him see sec 180 I P C

155 (1) When information is given to an officer in charge of a police station of the commission, within the limits of such station, of a non cognizable offence, he shall enter in a book to be kept as aforesaid the substance of such information and refer the informant to the Magistrate

(2) No police officer shall investigate a non cognizable case without the order of a Magistrate of the first or second class having power to try such case or commit the same for trial, or of a Presidency Magistrate

(3) Any police officer receiving such order may exercise the same powers in respect of the investigation (except the power to arrest without warrant) as an officer in charge of a police-station may exercise in a cognizable case

484A Scope —This section applies to the Police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay see Queen Emp v Nilmadhab 15 Cal 595 Q E v Visram Babaji 21 Bom 495

485 Investigation into non-cognizable cases —Under this section a Police officer cannot investigate a non cognizable case and can not submit a report with reference to it without the order of a Magistrate. If he receives information relating to the commission of a non cognizable offence he should enter the substance of it in the diary and refer the informant to a Magistrate. If a Police officer of his own motion as where he has seen the alleged offence committed makes a formal report or complaint in respect of a non cognizable offence it will amount to a complaint within the meaning of sec 4 (h) for there is no provision by which he can in such a case make a Police report—H E v Sada 26 Bom 150. But see Note 16 to section 4 (h) under heading Report of a Police officer

A Police officer who has been ordered by a Magistrate to investigate a non cognizable offence cannot legally delegate the duty of making the investigation to a chief constable—Q E v Kalidas Ratanlal 488

It is incumbent upon a police officer who investigates a non cognizable case under the orders of a Magistrate to keep the diary for which provision is made in sec 172 infra—Hira Lal v Crown 1918 P R 16 P. L R 63 19 Cr L J 517

The power to arrest without warrant is expressly taken away by this section from the Police in the investigation of a non cognizable offence —U B R (1897 1901) 31

After the investigation is over it is the duty of the Police to submit a report to the Magistrate under sec 173. Where information was given to the Police of the commission of a non-cognizable offence and the Magistrate ordered the Police to investigate the case and report and the Police without submitting any report instituted proceedings against the informants under sec 211 of the I P C for giving false information and the accused were convicted it was held that the conviction was illegal the Police should not be allowed to prosecute without submitting the report of the original case to the Magistrate and without having that case disposed of by the Magistrate—Emp v Appa Rao 17 Bom L R 69 16 Cr L J 161

486 Magistrate's power to direct investigation.—In 12 Bom 161, it is laid down that this section is conversant only with the powers of Police officers but it confers no power or authority on Magistrates to direct a local investigation by the Police or to call for a Police report. Magistrates can do so only under sec 202 after taking cognizance of the case. But this view is quite unintelligible and renders sub section (2) meaningless. In Emp v Ishuauath 8 Bom L R 589 4 Cr L J 183, it has been correctly held that a Magistrate has jurisdiction under sub section (2) of this section to refer a matter to the police for investigation and report even without a complaint and without examining the complainant. So also in In re Asadulla 6 M I T 259 11 Cr L J 156 the Magistrate was held competent to order an investigation without first taking cognizance of the offence under sec 190.

156 (1) Any officer in charge of a police station may, without the order of a Magistrate investigate any cognizable case which a Court having jurisdiction over the local area within the limits of such station would have power to inquire into or try under the provisions of Chapter XV relating to the place of inquiry or trial

(2) No proceeding of a police officer in any such case shall at any stage be called in question on the ground that the case was one which such officer was not empowered under this section to investigate

(3) Any Magistrate empowered under Section 190 may order such an investigation as above mentioned

487 Scope.—The reference to Chap XV in this section does not limit the application of this section to offences only but the investigat

may extend to cases within the scope of section 55—Emp v Bhasan, 1893 A W N 174

This section only empowers the Magistrate to direct investigation and a Court of Session has no power to do so—A E v Al 1910 P R 11

If there is a delay in the investigation by the Police it is the duty of the committing Magistrate and failing him of the Sessions Judge to inquire fully into the circumstances of the delay and to consider its bearing on the prosecution story—Q E v Majest 2 Bom L R 109

157 (1) If from information received or otherwise, an officer in charge of a police-station has cognizable offence reason to suspect the commission of an offence which he is empowered under Section 156 to investigate he shall forthwith send a report of the same to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of such offence upon a police report and shall proceed in person or shall depute one of his subordinate officers not being below such rank as the Local Government may by general or special order prescribe in this behalf to proceed to the spot investigate the facts and circumstances of the case and if necessary to take measures for the discovery and arrest of the offender

(a) when any information as to the commission of any such offence is given against any person by a person who is not a police officer and the case is not of a serious nature the officer in charge of a police-station need not proceed in person or depute a subordinate officer to make an investigation on the spot,

(b) if it appears to the officer in charge of a police-station that there is no sufficient ground for entering on an investigation he shall not investigate the case

(2) In each of the cases mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of the proviso to sub-section (1) the officer in charge of the police-station shall state in his said report his reasons for not fully complying with the requirements of that sub-section, and in the case mentioned in clause (b) such officer shall also forthwith notify to the informant if any, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Local Government the fact that he will not investigate the case or cause it to be investigated

Change —The italicised words have been added by sec 32 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act VIII of 1923

Not below such behalf —This provision did not exist in the Bill of 1914 but the Select Committee which sat on the Bill in 1916 added the words not below the rank of a Sub Inspector. This amendment however did not meet with the approval of the Joint Committee and they made the present amendment. In view of the general objection to the amendment which confines investigations to officers not below the rank of a Sub Inspector we have made an amendment which enables Local Governments to specify a lower rank. We recognise that police work in some provinces might be severely hampered by the above restriction — Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

And if necessary to take measures —These words have been substituted for the words and to take such measures as may be necessary. Under the old law the taking of measures necessary for the discovery and arrest of the offender was incumbent on the police officer under the present law the police officer has an option to take measures for the arrest of the offender if necessary. This amendment makes it clear that the Police have a discretion in arresting a person accused in a cognizable case — Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

And in the case investigated — This amendment provides that if the Police do not investigate a complaint the complainant shall be informed to that effect — Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). The words in such manner as may be prescribed by the Local Government have been added by the Select Committee of 1916.

Secs 154 and 157 —Whereas every information covered by the former section (154) must be reduced to writing as provided in that section it is only that information which raises a reasonable suspicion of the commission of a cognizable offence within the jurisdiction of the Police officer to whom it is given which compels action under the latter section (157) although of course a report would be sent to the Magistrate — Puny Cir Chap XLV page 171

From information received —These words refer to the information given in Sec 154 — Jagdan v Mahadeo 14 C W N 326 Andamuri v Emp 1914 M W N 382 15 Cr L J 622

488 Investigation of offence outside jurisdiction —There is nothing in this section to prevent the police of one police station from conducting an investigation within the jurisdiction of another police station

Therefore where the police Inspector of T circle during the investigation of a burglary sent some constables to the house of the accused situated in another police circle and the constables locked the house in question and kept guard of the house it was held that the Inspector of T circle did not act ultra vires—Natha Singh v Crown 1915 P R 12 16 Cr L J 551

489 Report —The report required by this section is the first report of the offence which an officer in charge of a Police station is required to make to a Magistrate as soon as he receives information of an offence and before entering on its investigation. It is to be made direct to the Magistrate in order that he may have an early information and be in a position to act if necessary under Sec 159—Bombay Police Manual, page 91

A report under this section is necessary for taking proceedings under sec 159—Mouli v Naurangi 4 C W N 351. The Police report under this section would give the Magistrate jurisdiction to enter upon an inquiry. But he may determine as he thinks fit either to take no further steps or to take cognizance of the offence under Sec 190 (b) or to proceed under Sec 203—Anonymous 2 Wcir 119

Failure to send a report as required by this section is a serious breach of duty which may lead to failure of justice. Such conduct on the part of the police would lead to a grave suspicion that the police were collecting false evidence—Crown v Bal el Khan 4 S I R 38 11 Cr L J 498

Report whether a complaint —A report submitted in the usual way under secs 157 and 173 is not intended to be and could not be a complaint within the meaning of Sec 195—6 O C 1

Report whether public document—Right of accused to get copies before trial —The report made by a Police officer in compliance with this section is not a public document within the meaning of sec 74 of the Evidence Act and consequently an accused person is not entitled before trial to have a copy of such report—Arumigam v Karuppayi 20 Mad 189

158 (1) Every report sent to a Magistrate under S 157 Reports under S 157 shall if the Local Government so directs, how submitted be submitted through such superior officer of police as the Local Government by general or special order, appoints in that behalf

(2) Such superior officer may give such instructions to the officer in charge of the Police station as he thinks fit, and shall, after recording such instructions on such report, transmit the same without delay to the Magistrate

159 Such Magistrate, on receiving such report, may direct an investigation or, if he thinks fit, at once proceed, or depute any Magistrate subordinate to him to proceed, to hold a preliminary inquiry into, or otherwise to dispose of, the case in manner provided in this Code.

490. Magistrate's power to hold investigation or inquiry—An inquiry can be made under this section only on a police report submitted within the terms of section 157, i. e. on a preliminary report made before the completion of the police investigation or inquiry, but if the report is submitted after investigation, the Magistrate is not empowered to act under this section. Thus, where information was laid before the police charging a person with criminal trespass into a house with intent to have improper intercourse with a female therein, and the police reported that they did not believe that the object was to commit the offence stated but that they were not disinclined to believe the charge of trespass, it was held that as the report was made after investigation into the offence, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to act under this section—Mauli v. Naurangi, 4 C W N 351

The inquiry which a Magistrate is competent to hold under this section is a preliminary inquiry. Therefore where a report of the commission of an offence has been made by the police after full inquiry into the truth of the information given them as to the commission of the offence, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make any further inquiry into the same offence—In re Kandhiya Lal 1899 A W N 87

An inquiry under this section can be made only on the submission of a police report, if, however, a complaint is made to the Magistrate he is bound to proceed under sec 200—Loke Nath v. Sanjasi Charaz, 7 C W N 923

Where a case comes before a first class Magistrate under the provisions of secs 157 and 159, he can depute a sub Deputy Magistrate to hold an investigation or a preliminary inquiry. The latter can also, under sec 164 (1), record a statement of a witness made before him in the course of the police investigation—Harendra v. Emp 40 C L J 313 26 Cr. L. J 307

491. When Magistrate cannot try the case—When a Magistrate took an active part in the capture of parties charged with the commission of an offence, and then tried them himself on that charge, he is not competent to try the case again—State v. ...

Magistrate whose evidence should be recorded and form part of the record in the case. The proper course however for the Magistrate to have taken in such a case would have been to decline to try the case and to ask that it should be taken up by some other Magistrate—20 W R 76

160 Any police officer making an investigation under this

Chapter may by order in writing, require the attendance before himself of any person being within the limits of his own or any adjoining station who, from the information given or otherwise appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case and such person shall attend as so required 492 Order in writing —The order to attend under this section must be in writing. In the absence of an order in writing a person required orally to appear before a police officer as a witness cannot be convicted under section 174 I P C for disobedience of such order—In re Veerasamy 1 Weir 86. So also where a Police Inspector sent a constable to bring two persons for inquiring of them about an offence and the order was not in writing the persons need not accompany the constable. If the persons accompanied the constable they could not be said to have been in lawful custody of the constable and any person inducing those two persons not to accompany the constable could not be held guilty of rescuing them from lawful custody—Q E v Pursholam Ratanlal 850

493 Require the attendance —An officer in charge of a police station may require the attendance of persons whose evidence is necessary and the persons summoned are bound to obey the order but in no case can the police compel a witness by force to attend before him—7 W R 3 Ratanlal 850. See also Bengal Police Manual 2nd Ed p 378

Detention —A police officer has no power to arrest or to detain even for a single moment any person whose evidence is required for the purpose of investigation—7 W R 3

Security bond to appear —There is no provision in this Code authorising a police officer to take security bond for the production of any person before the police, and the Magistrate has therefore no power to alter it and impose fresh conditions under it—11 Cal 77. But see 1913 P R 22 cited under secs 497 and 499

494 Who may be required to attend —Accused —This section applies only to the case of persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case : i.e. witnesses or possible witnesses only. An order under this section cannot be made requiring the attendance of an accused person, with a view to his answering the charge made against him. The intention of the legislature seems to have been only to provide a facility for obtaining evidence and not for procuring the attendance of the accused who may be arrested at any time if necessary—Q E v Saminada 7 Mad 274 Emp v Ratan 4 Bom L R 644 Therefore where the accused person refused to obey an order under this section and was therefore taken into custody by the police it was held that the Police was guilty of wrongful confinement although the police was justified in arresting without warrant upon the original charge made against the accuse 1—2 Weir 121

Woman —It is an unusual course for the Police to take a number of women away from their village to the police station on the pretext that they wished to examine them The examination should be properly conducted at the women's own houses—9 C W N 199

Shall attend —If a person fails to attend before a police officer making an investigation under this chapter he is liable to be prosecuted for an offence under section 174 I P C —24 Cal 320

495 Magistrate's power to interfere or issue warrant —A Magistrate has no power to issue a warrant for the arrest and production of a person in order that such person may give evidence before the Police during an investigation under this chapter—24 Cal 30 He cannot interfere with the exercise of discretion given to a police officer to summon witnesses though he might offer his suggestions or advise the Police officer as to a particular course of action—In re Sankalchand Ratanlal 133

161 (1) Any police officer making an investigation under this Chapter or any police officer not below such rank as the local Government may by general or special order prescribe in this behalf acting on the requisition of such officer may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case

(2) Such person shall be bound to answer all questions relating to such case put to him by such officer other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge or to a penalty or forfeiture.

Change —The italicised words have been added by sec 33 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) This amendment is similar to that made in section 157 (1)

Scope —The provisions of this section should not be utilised in any but heinous cases Heinous cases include cases triable exclusively by a Court of Session and those cases in which special diaries are submitted through the Magistrate either to the Commissioner only or both to the Commissioner and to the Deputy Inspector General or Inspector General of Police—Beng Pol Code p 43*

496 Examination of accused before arrest —When a police officer has evidence before him upon which he is bound to arrest a person he should not preliminary to his arrest obtain a statement from that person professedly under this section and reduce it to writing—27 Cal 295

497. Statements of witnesses —Not privileged under sec 172 — Where a Police officer making an investigation under this section took statements from the persons who were afterwards called as witnesses the accused person would be entitled to call for and inspect such documents and cross examine the witnesses thereon as such statements would not amount to a portion of the diary referred to in sec 172—Bika v Q E, 16 Cal 610 Sheru Sha v Q E 20 Cal 642 Emp v Rudra Singh 1896 A W N 193 9 C P L R 33 U B R (1897 1901) 29 Contra—Q E v Mannu 19 All 390 Q E v Nasiruddin 16 All 207

It is not necessary that the statements of witnesses recorded under this section should be in the form of alternative question and answer It is enough if the statement so recorded is substantially an answer to the questions put to the witnesses—Q E v Bagwanthia 15 All 11, 1896 P R 7

The statements need not be signed by the witnesses It is not illegal for a police officer obtaining the signature of witnesses to a statement under this section to authenticate his record of such statement but there is nothing to compel them to sign it—Q E Bagwanthia 15 All 11

investigation under this section is privileged and cannot be made the foundation of a charge of defamation—16 Mad 235 nor can he be made liable in an action for damages for any words spoken during such investigation—28 Cal 794

Witness not bound to speak the truth —Under the Code of 1882 a witness was bound to answer truly all questions put to him under this section but the effect of the omission of the word truly from the Code of 1898 has been to do away with the legal obligation to speak the truth—Nga Pyn v Emp, 10 Bur L T 259 18 Cr L J 844 Therefore witnesses cannot be prosecuted for giving false evidence under this section—23 Mad 544 Nga Po v A E 9 Bur L T 203 18 Cr L J 98 The Select Committee (1898) observed — It seems to us unfair that a man should be liable to be convicted of giving false evidence on the strength of or by the aid of a statement supposed to have been given to a Police officer but which is not given on oath which he has not signed and which he has had no opportunity of verifying such statement may be hurriedly taken down as rough notes the police officer is not trained in taking evidence and the notes are often faked out by another officer They bear no resemblance to depositions and ought to have no weight as such attached to them The provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the Penal Code appear to us to afford a sufficient safeguard against false information

162 (1) No statement

Statement to be made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall if taken down in writing, be signed by the person making it, nor shall such writing be used as evidence. Provided that when any witness is called for the prosecution whose statement has been taken down in writing as aforesaid, the Court shall, on the request of the accused, refer to such writing and may then, if the Court thinks it expedient in the interests of justice, direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof and such statement may be used to impeach the credit of such witness in the manner provided by the Indian Evidence Act, 1872

162 (1) No statement

Statement to be made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter shall if reduced into writing, be signed by the person making it, nor shall any such statement or any record thereof whether in a police diary or otherwise, or any part of such statement or record, be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided) at an inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made

Provided that when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid the Court shall on the request of the accused refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, in order that any part of such statement, if duly proved, may be used to contradict such witness in the manner provided by section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 Where any part of such statement is so used, any part thereof may also be used

Provided that when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid the Court shall on the request of the accused refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, in order that any part of such statement, if duly proved, may be used to contradict such witness in the manner provided by section 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 Where any part of such statement is so used, any part thereof may also be used in the re-examination of such witness, but for the purpose only of explaining any matter referred to in his cross examination :

Provided, further, that if the Court is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject matter of the inquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice, and is inexpedient in the public interests, it shall record such opinion (but not the reasons therefor) and shall exclude such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to any statement falling within the provisions of Section 32, clause (1), of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872

Change —Sub section (1) of this section with its proviso has been thoroughly redrafted by sec 34 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

Legislative history of the section and reasons for the change —
 "The amendment of section 162 has been discussed at great length by the Committee. It has been the subject of amendment before and of constant difficulty in the Courts. We therefore propose to recast the section, and we think that a note as to its previous history will be instructive

Under the original Code of 1861 (section 145) a Police officer could examine potential witnesses and reduce their statements to writing but the writing was not to be part of the record or used as evidence. The Code of 1872 maintained the above provisions merely adding (section 119) that no person when examined by the Police should be bound to answer incriminating questions. The only material change made by the Code of 1882 (section 162) was that instead of the provision that the statement when so reduced to writing should not be used as evidence, it provided that no statement made by a witness if reduced to writing should be used as evidence against the accused, thus making it clear that the provision in question was intended for the benefit of the accused

"The new section did not lay down in terms that the accused might not use the written record of a witness' statement for the purpose of his defence, and indeed it rather suggested that he was entitled to do so. Accordingly cases occurred in which the accused demanded to see the statements which the police had taken down, in order that he might use, for the purpose of his defence, anything that appeared therein to his advantage, and the Calcutta High Court ruled that he was entitled to do so. The Allahabad High Court, on the other hand, held that the writings in effect formed part of the police diary and were therefore privileged from inspection, and this was the position which stood to be dealt with when the Amending Act of 1898 was under consideration. There was evidently a good deal to be said on both sides as will appear from the report of the Select Committee (1898) on the Bill which is quoted in extenso below.—

"The question involved (namely, whether the accused is entitled to inspect statements taken down by the police under section 161) is full of difficulty. In the first place, it is essential in the interests of public justice that the sources of police information should be kept secret. If the names of informers or detectives and the nature of their information be disclosed, the detection of crime would be seriously crippled. In the second place, it is unfair to a witness that his evidence should be discredited on the strength of an alleged statement made to a policeman, which he may have had no opportunity of verifying or correcting. Such statements must necessarily be often taken down hurriedly and may be incorrectly copied out. They are not taken down as depositions, or with regard to the rules of evidence, but merely to aid the police in the course of their investigation. But in the third place, it may be most important for the accused to show that a witness called for the prosecution is telling a story substantially different from that which he told when first questioned by the police. We have endeavoured to reconcile these conflicting interests by reverting to the language of the Codes of 1861 and 1872, and adding a proviso compelling the Court, on the application of the accused, to refer to such statements, and then empowering it in its discretion to allow him to have copies of them. We then provide for the mode in which these statements are to be used. It is clear that a witness ought not to have his credit impeached on the strength of a statement alleged to have been made to a policeman, unless and until it is shown that he has made that statement'.

"The result was not altogether a happy one. It will be noticed that the section deals mainly with the writing and enacts that it shall not be used in evidence, with a proviso that the Court may in its discretion direct the accused to be furnished with a copy of it—presumably only in order that the accused may know that there is something in the writing which may help his defence—and goes on to say that the statement (i. e. what the witness said to the Police officer) may be used in the ordinary course to impeach the credit of the witness, obviously implying that for this purpose it must be duly proved.

"It seems clear that all that the amendment of 1898 intended to effect was to make it clear that the accused had no right to call for or see the record of any statements taken down by the police under section 161, unless the Court thought that in the interests of justice he should be allowed to do so. It did not purport to deal with, and has left untouched, the further question whether or not a statement made by a witness under section 161, as apart from the written record of the statement, might be used by the prosecution for the purpose of corroborating one of their witnesses under section 157 of the Evidence Act and this is at all events one of the principal difficulties with which we have to deal now.

"The re draft of the section which we propose will make it clear that the statements taken under section 161 (and not merely the written records of such statements) are not to be used in any way or for any purposes except as allowed by the proviso. Having regard to the fact that the making of such statements is compulsory under section 161 and to the way in which and the circumstances under which, they are usually recorded we do not think that they are of any corroborative value where the witness merely repeats the same statement in Court, and that they ought not therefore to be allowed to be used for the purpose of corroboration under section 157 of the Evidence Act. If the really material fact to the prosecution is that a statement was made to the police on a particular date or at a particular place this fact will of course still be provable in the ordinary course and it will be open to the Courts or to a jury to make any proper deduction from this fact and the action which was taken on it. The amendment will also we think, make it clear that if the accused wishes to rely on anything in the previous statement of a witness to the police, of which he has been allowed by the Court to have a copy, he will have to prove it in the ordinary way. If the witness admits this in cross-examination, it will of course be sufficient, if he denies the contradiction and the police officer who took it down is called by the prosecution, the previous statement of the witness on the point may be proved by him, if he is not called by the prosecution, the Court would no doubt itself in most cases call him, or if the accused is calling evidence in his defence, it may be worth his while to call the Police officer."

it is clear that unless the previous contradictory statement is proved in some way in accordance with law, it ought not to depreciate the witness's statement on oath. It will be observed that under our amendment if any part of the previous statement of the witness is used for the purpose of cross examination by the accused any other part of it may be used by the prosecution within the proper limits of re-examination. This is we think the only way in which the previous statement ought to be allowed to be used by the prosecution.—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

501 Use of statement.—Prior to the present amendment a distinction was drawn between writing and the statement embodied in the writing—36 Cal 281 and the result was that the writing i.e. the document containing the statement could not be used as evidence against the accused, but the statement could be proved against him—Lalji v Emp 1886 P R 15, Emp v Hanmaraddi 39 Bom 58 16 Bom L R 603, K L v Nilahanta 35 Mad 247 22 M L J 490 Rus'ani v King Emp 7 A L J 468 (per Karamat Husain J) In 32 Bom 111 it was remarked that the distinction between the writing and the statement was a distinction of form rather than that of substance and that therefore a statement could not be admitted or used in evidence against the accused.

The present section as now amended prohibits the statement also to be used for any purpose except as expressly provided in the first proviso and the above rulings are no longer good law. See the observations of Macpherson J in Badri Choudhury v A L 6 P L T, 620 A I R 1926 Pat 20 27 Cr L J 362.

Under the old section the police officer who recorded the statement could use it to refresh his memory—19 All 390 21 All 159 11 Bom 637 32 Bom 111 (per Batty J) 22 Bom 596 11 B H C R 120 9 Cal 455 Ratanlal 503 (Contra—33 Cal 1023) Under the present law such use of a statement is not permitted.

A statement made by a witness to the police can be used only to contradict the witness, it cannot be used to corroborate his evidence before the Court, such a procedure is distinctly opposed to the provision of the law in this behalf—Emp v Jyibhai, 22 Bom 596, A L v Kumaramuthu, 25 M L T 379 20 Cr L J 354, 13 O C 7. Section 157 of the Evidence Act lays down that in order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact is admissible in evidence but this general rule is controlled by the special provisions of sec 162 Cr P Code. This section as it existed prior to its amendment in 1923 expressly prohibited the use of the record containing the statement of a witness to the police as evidence against the accused, and the controversy as to the admissibility of such statement by oral evidence has now been set at rest by the amendment made in 1923 which has substituted the words "nor shall such statement or any record thereof be used for any purpose at any inquiry or trial" for the words "nor shall such writing be used as evidence." The result is that not only is the record of the statement of a witness taken under sec 161 excluded from evidence, but also the proof of such statement by oral evidence for the purpose of corroborating the testimony of the witness for the prosecution—Rakha v. Crown, 6 Lah 171 26 P L R 304 A I R 1925 Lah 399

This section does not prevent the prosecution, after a witness has made a statement, from asking him simply whether he made that statement to the police, or when a witness has made a statement in his evidence, from asking the Sub-Inspector whether in fact the witness had made that statement to him. In doing this, there is no use of the statement recorded by the police during their investigation. the witnesses or the sub Inspector are merely asked as to a certain fact—Guhli Afian v Emp, 4 Pat 204. A I R 1925 Pat 450

Where a Magistrate used the statements made before the chief constable during the police inquiry, without conforming to the provisions of this section and without affording the accused an opportunity of cross-examining the constable, and considered those statements as corroborative of the evidence given by the witnesses at the trial, and convicted those whose names were mentioned both in Court and in those statements, and acquitted those whose names were not mentioned therein, it was held that such use of the statements being grossly irregular and having seriously prejudiced the accused, the whole trial was bad, and that the irregularity was not cured by sec 537—Emp v Babaji, 9 Bom L R 366. 5 Cr L J 353

Statements of witnesses taken in the course of police investigation must not be signed, even if they are signed contrary to the provisions of this section, they do not thereby become statements taken under sec 154 and do not become admissible as first information. The police by violating the provisions of section 162 and thus committing an illegality cannot make admissible statements which are inadmissible under the law—In re Narayana Menon, A I R 1925 Mad 106 25 Cr L J 401

It is also illegal for a Magistrate to use as evidence against the accused the statements made by prosecution witnesses before the police by comparing them with their depositions and as a result of that comparison, to convict him—Emp v Laxman 9 Bom L R 895 Emp v Narayan, 32 Bom 111, 1886 P R 17

The statement cannot be used to make up for the deficiency in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses—Q L v Haribai, Ratanlal 935; 28 Cal 348

A statement taken from an accused person under this section in course of the police investigation is no evidence against him and he

not to be made to sign it—Mallela v Emp 1917 M W N 875 19 Cr L J 38

501A Statement of accused —This section refers only to statements of persons examined as witnesses by the police in the course of investigation and not to statements made by accused persons as such—Rannun v K E. A I R 1926 Lah 88 Garpati v Emp 6 N L R 180 12 Cr L J 60. A statement made by an accused person to the police which is not in the nature of a confession is not inadmissible in evidence—Sikandar v Crown 1918 P R 36 10 Cr L J 83 Jogwa Dianup v Emp 5 Pat 63 In a recent Nagpur case it has been held that this section covers statements made by the accused to the police officer before his arrest. Such statements are inadmissible and the investigating officer cannot be made to disclose them in his examination as prosecution evidence—Sircosainarayan La. v Emp 8 N L J 217 A I R 1926 Nag 1. The Sind Court holds that the words statement of any person refer to the statement of a person examined as a witness in the course of police investigation and do not include the statement of an accused person in respect of whom such investigation is being held—Adho v Emp 26 Cr L J 897 A I R 1925 Sind 257 Umer Daraz v Emp 26 Cr L J 778 A I R 1925 Sind 237

502 First Proviso—Scope —The proviso deals with one case and one case only the case of witnesses called for the prosecution whose statements have been taken down in writing as aforesaid. And the only concession it makes to the accused is to allow him upon his request and subject to the Court's discretion (under the second proviso) to have access to a copy of the recorded statement and thereupon to use it for one purpose and one purpose only viz to break down the evidence of the prosecution witnesses already standing against him. On the face of it the proviso does not cover the case of a witness for the defence whose statements may have been recorded by a policeman nor allows the prosecution to impeach the credit of such a witness by examining him upon any written statement he may have made to the police—Emp v Narayan 37 Bom 111 1, All 25 U B R (1918) 84 A E v Vithu 26 Bom L R 965 A I R 1924 Bom 510. According to the recently amended provisions of section 162, statements of witnesses recorded by the investigating officer can only be used to assist the accused in particular by showing that a witness who in Court deposes to certain facts has in such a statement at an earlier stage given an account or made statements which are contradictory to the testimony which he gives in Court. They cannot be used in cross examining the witnesses not merely to show contradictions but at large for the purpose of showing that the statements did not corroborate or assist the story as put forward in the first information report—Badr's Chowdhuri v A E 6 P L T 620 A I R 1926 Pat 20 27 Cr L J 362

The first proviso to this section makes an exception in favour of the accused but it is an exception most jealously circumscribed under the proviso itself. Any part of such statement which has been reduced to writing may in certain limited circumstances be used to contradict the witness who made it. The limitations are strict (1) only the statement of a prosecution witness can be used and (2) only if it has been reduced to writing, (3) only a part of the statement recorded can be used (4) such part must be duly proved (5) it must be a contradiction of the evidence of the witness in Court (6) it must be used as provided in section 145 of the Evidence Act that is it can be used only after the attention of the witness has been drawn to it or to those parts of it which it is intended to use for the purpose of contradiction and there are others. Such a statement which does not contradict the testimony of the witness cannot be proved in any circumstances and it is not permissible to use the recorded statement as a whole to show that the witness did not say something to the investigating officer—Ibid (per Macpherson J)

The words 'if duly proved' in the proviso clearly show that the record of the statement cannot be admitted in evidence straightway but that the officer before whom the statement was made should ordinarily be examined as to any alleged statement or omitted statement that is relied upon by the accused for the purpose of contradicting the witness—A. E. v. Vithu 26 Bom L R 965 A I R 194 Bom 510

There is no presumption as to the genuineness of the statements of witnesses entered in the police diaries and unless they are duly proved, the evidence given in Court cannot be contradicted by them—Labb Singh v Emp 6 Lah 24 26 Cr L J 1153 A I R 1925 Lah 337

The words 'such statement' means the statement reduced to writing and does not cover any statement—Lenkatasubbia v Emp 48 Mad 640 48 M L J 195. The application of the new section is confined as the old section was to the written record the new section is designed to confer on the accused person a legal right which the old section did not give of having a copy of such written statement for the purpose of using it to contradict the witness and as regards proof and use of oral statement the law is unaltered and is as it was before. All oral statements which were previously admissible under the Indian Evidence Act and the use of which was not prohibited by the Cr Pro Code are still admissible and may be used—Ibid

503 Right of accused to get copy of statement —Under the first proviso as it stood before the present amendment the words 'may if the Court thinks it expedient' (see the old section cited parallel) show that the accused was not entitled as a matter of right to obtain access to a copy of the written statement. His right to obtain such copy was left to the discretion of the Court—Emp v Narayan 32 Bom 111 Q E v Nasiruddin 16 All 207 The accused could get a copy only if the Court thought it expedient in the interests of justice to furnish him with such copy—Dadan Gazi v Emp 33 Cal 1023 In re Thiruvengada 26 M L J 182 15 Cr L J 289

Under the present law, the words shall direct would seem to give the accused a right to obtain the copies See Venkatasubbiah v Emp 48 Mad 640 48 M L J 195 But such right has again been curtailed by the second proviso

The application to get a copy of the recorded statement must be made at the time when the prosecution witness whom it is desired to test by reference to his recorded statements appears on the box But if after all the prosecution witnesses have been examined the defence applies to the Court to summon the Inspector of Police to appear with his diary, the application may be refused But even in such a case the Court ought to send and peruse the statements recorded in the diary and if on such perusal it thinks that it would be expedient in the ends of justice (and that otherwise a gross miscarriage of justice may result) to allow the accused to use such statements it would be open to the Court to furnish the accused with copies of the statements even at such a late stage and recall the witnesses and permit cross examination—Dadan Gazi v Emp 33 Cal 1023 The stage at which an accused person is entitled to ask for copies of statements made by the prosecution witnesses to the police in the course of the investigation is the stage when the witness had made a statement which lays him open to contradiction by his former statement to the police Consequently the accused is not entitled to the copies before cross examination is opened at all—In re Peramasami 22 L W 784 27 Cr L J 100 A I R 1926 Mad 183

Where the accused was furnished with materially inaccurate copies of the statements of a prosecution witness recorded in the police diary, and on discovering the mistake he applied to have that witness recalled for the purpose of re cross examination in order generally to impeach his credit but the Court refused the application held that the accused was entitled to have the witness recalled and the Court committed an error of law in refusing the application—Sadananda v Ramasray, 21 Cr L J 289 (Pat)

504 Second proviso —This proviso did not occur in the Bills of 1914 and 1921 nor in the Reports of the Committees but was added during the Debate in the Assembly It has been noted above that the first proviso removed the discretion of the Court to grant copies of statements to the accused and made it obligatory on the Court to show such statements to the accused to help him in his defence As soon as that proviso was passed Government viewed it with grave concern and apprehended that the proviso would make the prosecution of an accused person most difficult and would hamper justice in as much as a statement made before the police by a witness might contain such highly important matter that its disclosure to an accused might be prejudicial to the State. The Government therefore strenuously opposed the proviso and Sir Henry Moncreff Smith moved for its deletion leaving the whole section unamended. Mr Rangachariar and other non official members opposed the motion and said that by passing the proviso they had done nothing but to give the accused fair justice grant him a right which had been denied to him for so long and put a stop to what amounted to secret trial if there was any confidential matter it might be entered in another diary by the investigating police officer.

The official members maintained that the disclosure of the full statement would in the majority of cases be harmful. It contained the sources of police information and also more than was involved in the case of the accused. For instance if a dacoit was caught a witness might give evidence which might lead to the detection of other members of a gang. Would it not be harmful to the interests of the State to disclose such evidence in full to an accused? The recording of evidence in separate diaries would be dangerous because it would result in an incomplete statement and the Magistrate would not have the benefit of the police investigation as a whole.

A hot debate then ensued and both sides were equally uncompromising. At last Sir Henry Stanyon who disagreed with the view of the Government suggested that if the Government could propose an amendment which while granting the above right to the accused also provided safe guards against the disclosure of the contents of a statement which it might be prejudicial to the State to reveal the House would accept such a compromise.

The second proviso is the result of this compromise. See the Legislative Assembly Debates February 14 1923 pages 2224 2243.

505 Subsection (2) —Dying declarations —The dying statement of a deceased must be taken in the presence of the accused person if not so taken the writing cannot be admitted to prove the statement made. The statement may however be proved in the ordinary way by a person who heard it and the writing may be used for the purpose of refreshing the witnesses' memory.—Emp v Samiruddin 8 Cal 211 6 C W N 921 1886 P R 13.

It is advisable where a dying declaration is elicited by questions to set out the questions and answers and if possible it should be taken in the presence of the accused who should then be allowed to cross examine if he likes.—King Emp v Madura 6 C W N 111 1886 P R 13.

Where the document containing the dying declaration was not signed by the deponent and the Police officer was not bound by law to take it down in writing held that the proper method of proving the oral statement of a dying man was by the oral evidence of any person who heard it that person being allowed to refresh his memory by reference to the notes he made or read at the time—Bhagwan v Emp 10 N L R 19 15 Cr L J 243

163 (1) No police officer or other person in authority shall offer or make or cause to be offered or made any such inducement, threat or promise as is mentioned in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 Section 24

(2) But no police officer or other person shall prevent, by any caution or otherwise any person from making in the course of any investigation under this Chapter any statement which he may be disposed to make of his own free will

506 Person in authority —This term is not defined in the Act But [it must not be used in any restricted sense so as to mean only a person who has control over the prosecution of the accused The test would seem to be whether the person had authority to interfere with the matter and any concern or interest in it would be sufficient to give him that authority—Reg v Navroji 9 B H C R 358

The following are persons in authority —Honorary Magistrate—1 W R 24 a Magistrate or Sessions Judge recording a confession—Emp v Asghar 2 All 260 Q E v Uzzer 10 Cal 775 Village Magistrate—26 Mad 38 Police Patel—3 Bom 1 40 Bom 20 Panchayatdar—9 C W N 474 11 C W N 904 a travelling auditor of a Railway Company is a person in authority as regards one of its booking clerks—Re v Navroji 9 B H C R 358

507 Inducement, threat or promise —Section 24 of the Evidence Act runs thus —

A confession made by an accused person is irrelevant in a criminal proceeding if the making of the confession appears to the Court to have been caused by any inducement threat or promise having reference to the charge against the accused person proceeding from a person in authority and sufficient in the opinion of the Court to give the accused person grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him

'All oppression and trickery in regard to obtaining confession are to be avoided by the Police under pain of the severest penalties and the practice of employing private individuals to worm out confession from accused persons is strictly prohibited. Nothing so clearly shows want of detective tact, talent and resource and of patient industry in a Police officer as the resort to foul means to obtain confession. The most ignorant and clumsy can make out a case if he can torture the culprit till he tells him all about it. True detective talent and sagacity manifest themselves in patient and unremitting industry in weaving round the culprit such a network of undoubted facts and damning circumstances gathered from a variety of sources that he cannot escape.—Mad Pol Man p 9.

An admission obtained from a prisoner by persuasion and promise of immunity by the Police ought not to be received in evidence.—9 W R 16

A confession which is the direct outcome of the confessing accused being given to understand that if he confessed there was a reasonable prospect of his receiving a pardon is irrelevant under section 24 of the Evidence Act. It cannot be used either against the person making the confession or against his co-accused. But where after making such a confession the accused again makes a statement under sec 364 during the trial in which after stating that he has now no hope of obtaining a pardon he affirms the confession previously made such statement is relevant and may be used against himself.—Imp v Tari 43 All 633 21 A L J 385 24 Cr L J 785

164 (1) Every Magistrate not being a police officer may record any statement or confession made to him in the course of an investigation under this Chapter or at any time afterwards before the commencement of the inquiry or trial

Power to record statements and confessions

164 (1) Any Presidency Magistrate, any Magistrate of the first class and any Magistrate of the 2nd class specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government may, if he is not a police officer, record any statement or confession made to him in the course of an investigation under this Chapter or at any time afterwards before the commencement of the inquiry or trial

Power to record statements and confessions

(2) Such statements shall be recorded in such of the manners hereinafter prescribed for recording evidence as is, in his opinion, best fitted for the circumstances of the case. Such confessions shall be recorded and signed in the manner provided in S 364, and such statements or confessions shall then be forwarded to the Magistrate by whom the case is to be inquired into or tried

(3) A Magistrate shall, before recording any such confession, explain to the person making it that he is not bound to make a confession and that if he does so it may be used as evidence against him, and no Magistrate shall record any such confession unless upon questioning the person making it, he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily, and, when he records any confession, he shall make a memorandum at the foot of such record to the following effect —

"I have explained to (name) that he is not bound to make a confession and that if he does so, any confession he may make may be used as evidence against him and I believe that this confession was voluntarily made. It was taken in my presence and hearing and was read over to the person making it and admitted by him to be correct, and it contains a full and true account of the statement made by him

Magistrate "

Explanation—It is not necessary that the Magistrate receiving and recording a confession or statement should be a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case

Change—The changes in the section as shown by the italicised words have been introduced by section 35 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) The reasons have been thus stated :

'We think that confessions and statements should not be recorded under the section by third class Magistrates at all or by second class Magistrates unless specially empowered We consider that a statutory obligation should be laid on a Magistrate acting under the section to warn an accused person about to make a confession that the same may be used against him and we think that the certificate prescribed by sub section (3) should record the fact that the warning had been given —Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

508 Object of section—The object of police proceedings is to collect information as a preliminary step to the production of evidence in judicial proceedings against an accused person For this purpose, any person may be examined and any statement may be reduced to writing by the Police But no statement made to the Police can be used in evidence against the accused To these provisions the present section seems to be supplementary The Magistrate may prepare what the Police may not a record of any statement be it a confession or not which is made to him before judicial proceedings commence—Lalu v Emp, 1893 P R 2

This section does not enable a police officer who has obtained a statement incriminating the accused made by some person to send such person to a Magistrate practically under custody to have him examined and his statement recorded before the judicial inquiry or trial for fixing him down to that statement in the subsequent judicial proceedings—Q E v Jadub, 27 Cal 295

509 Scope of section—This section under the old law did not apply to the Police in the town of Calcutta Therefore it did not apply to a statement made by a person in custody to a Magistrate in Calcutta in the course of an investigation made by the Police in the town of Calcutta—Q E v Nilmadhab 15 Cal 595 Nor did this section apply to the town of Bombay—21 Bom 495

The present section has been made applicable to confessions recorded in Presidency towns by reason of the reference to Presidency Magistrates at the beginning of the section But it should be noted that even in spite of this amendment the application of this section to Presidency towns is extremely limited Sub-section (2) (a) of sec 1 of this Code expressly lays down that nothing contained in this Code in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary shall apply to the police in the town of Calcutta

(or Bombay) The only sections in Chap XIV which are applicable to the Police of Calcutta (or Bombay) are sec 155 and sec 156 (3) and sec 164 so far as Presidency towns are concerned applies only to confessions recorded under those two sections. That is section 164 applies to confessions made in the course of investigations held by the Calcutta Police only where the Police investigation is either an investigation in a non cognizable case held under the orders of a Presidency Magistrate as contemplated by sec 155 or is an investigation into a cognizable case held under the orders of a Presidency Magistrate as contemplated by section 156 (3) —Emp v Panch Kari 29 C W N 300 52 Cal 67 26 Cr L J 782

Native State —A confession made to a Magistrate of a Native State who duly recorded and certified the same according to the provisions of this Code would be admissible in evidence in a British Court—Badan v K E 1909 P R 2 Q E v Nagla 22 Bom 235 12 All 595 In Bhola v A C 1907 P R 8 it was held however that a confession so recorded by a Magistrate in a Native State was not entitled to the same weight as a confession recorded by a Magistrate in British India in strict compliance with the terms of this Code and Courts should hesitate to convict the accused upon such a confession standing alone. See also 2 Weir 125 where it is held that a confession made before a Foreign Court even if it is certified according to the provisions of this section cannot be used in evidence unless it is sworn to like confessions made to private individuals. See also Emp v Dhanka 16 Bom L R 261 15 Cr L J 433, where it is held that the Magistrate of a Native State recording a confession must be examined to prove the confession before it can be used as evidence.

A Magistrate having jurisdiction in a district in British India cannot record a confession in a place in a Native State in connection with an offence committed in his district—Mahar Singh v Emp 19 A L J 355 22 Cr L J 567

510 Who can record statement or confession —The power to record statements and confessions under this section is given to Magistrates not being Police officers. Magistrates who are also police officers (e.g. patels in Bombay) are not competent to record statements or confessions —Q E v Bhima 17 Bom 485. So also Police officers having magisterial powers have no power to record statements—Q v Huribole 1 Cal 207

Where a Tahsildar having powers of a Magistrate and being invested by the Local Government with power to take cognizance of offences upon complaint or police report was conducting an inquiry on complaint received, held that he must be deemed to have been doing so as a Magistrate and not as a police officer—A E v Gulab 11 A L J 286 35 All 260

A third class Magistrate has no power to record a statement under sec 164. A statement so recorded by him is not evidence in a stage of judicial proceeding, and if it is contradicted afterwards before a Magistrate having jurisdiction and holding a preliminary inquiry, it will not furnish an alternative charge of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding—Emp v Shettappa, 14 Bom L R 753 13 Cr L J 709

An Honorary Magistrate, who is a member of an independent Bench with third class powers cannot record a confession or statement—29 Cal 483. The ruling in Ghinna v Emp, 3 P L J 291 19 Cr L J 135, in which it was held that an Honorary Magistrate of the third class not empowered to sit singly had nevertheless power to record a confession, is rendered obsolete by the present amendment.

Where a case comes before a first class Magistrate under secs 157 and 159, he can depute a Sub Deputy Magistrate to hold an investigation or a preliminary inquiry. The latter can, under the provisions of this section, record a statement of a witness made before him in the course of the police investigation and therefore this is admissible as a statement made in the course of an investigation—Harendra v Emp, 40 C L J 313 A I R 1923 Cal 161 26 Cr L J 307

A Magistrate who directs the police investigation is not incompetent to record a statement or confession under this section. On the other hand, it is the duty of the Magistrate who directs a police investigation or holds a preliminary inquiry under this Code to record statements under Sec 164, it is his duty to see that the accused confesses voluntarily, and to record his confessions truly—Emp v Maisri, 5 S L R 31 12 Cr L J 489

A confession or statement under this section may be recorded by a Magistrate who afterwards conducts the inquiry or trial—Barindra v. Emp 37 Cal 467. A Magistrate is not debarred from recording the confession of an accused person under this section merely because it may be afterwards his duty to hold a preliminary inquiry—Ratanlal 121. A confession freely made to a Magistrate and recorded under this section is not inadmissible if the Magistrate thought proper, or if it so happened that he was the only Magistrate to take the case and commit it to the Sessions Court—Emp v Lal Shesha 3 C W N 387. The decision in 5 Cal 954 is no longer good law.

511 May record?—The Magistrate may record the statement or confession. It is not obligatory on the Magistrate to do so. There is nothing in law to support the proposition that in order to make an oral extrajudicial confession admissible in evidence it must be reduced to writing. The confession may be proved by the evidence of the Magistrate—Feroz v Crown, 1918 P R 11, Emp v Maruti 21 Bom L R, 1064

(per Hayward J. Shah J. contra) 21 Cr L J 65 Tangudupalli v Emp., 45 Mad 230, 42 M L J 37, 23 Cr L J 680. Contra—Legal Remembrancer v Lalit Mohan 49 Cal 167 where it is held that a confession not recorded as provided by this section cannot be proved by the evidence of the Magistrate.

512 Statement or Confession—The word 'statement' means the statement of a witness and does not mean the statement of an accused person. This section does not provide for recording any statement of an accused person other than a confession: the reason is that the section relates to a stage of the case viz the Police investigation stage at which statements of the accused which are other than voluntary confessions and which are to be elicited by his examination are not intended to be obtained from him—Q E v Bhairab 2 C W N 702. In other words this section provides for the recording of two classes of things viz (1) the statement of a person who appears before the Magistrate as a witness and (2) the confession of a person accused of an offence—2 Bom 643, 5 S L R 174.

Contra—The Punjab Chief Court has held that the distinction that is made in this section is between statements that are confessions and statements that are not and not between persons by whom statements of either character are made and this distinction is made merely to prescribe the different modes of recording (subsec. 2) and that it is nowhere expressed or implied in this section that the statement of an accused person cannot be recorded unless it is a confession—Lalu v Emp 1893 P R 2. The Calcutta High Court also has recently laid down that the word statement is not limited to a statement made by a witness: a statement made by an accused and not amounting to a confession is a statement within the meaning of this section—Abdul Rahim v Emp 41 C L J 474, 26 Cr L J 1279. See also Legal Remembrancer v Lalit Mohan 49 Cal 167 where it is laid down that under this section there can be no distinction between a statement made by an accused and a confession made by him and that a statement made by an accused that he had committed a murder must be recorded as provided by this section. The Patna High Court is also of opinion that this section contemplates a statement made by an accused person before a Magistrate which is not a confession but is wholly of an exculpatory nature—Golam Abd. v Emp 4 Pat 327, 6 P L T 598, 26 Cr L J 878.

513. At what stage can statement and confession be recorded—A statement or confession must be recorded under this section in the course of an investigation under this chapter or at any time afterwards but before the commencement of the inquiry or trial. Therefore, where the Magistrate recorded confessions of the accused before he took cognizance of the case and before the examination of the prosecution witness began, it was held that the confessions were duly recorded under this section—Barindra v. Emp., 37 Cal 467. This section refers to a confession or statement recorded during an inquiry before the Police and not during an inquiry by the Magistrate. Therefore, where during an inquiry under section 202, the Magistrate recorded a statement made by a person against whom the complaint was filed, it was held that the statement could not be regarded as having been recorded under this section, because the statement was made during an inquiry by the Magistrate and not during an inquiry before the Police. Such a statement was not admissible against the accused without further proof—Sat Narain v. Emp., 32 Cal 1085 (1089).

514. Procedure.—Under this section, in the course of the investigation, the Magistrate is entitled to record any voluntary statement made by the accused person, but he is not entitled to examine the accused person in respect of the facts of the case. That power is given by sec 342—Gya Singh v. Mohamed, 5 C. W. N. 864. Nor is the Magistrate competent to put constant questions to the deponent as though he were a witness, in order to elicit the truth out of his mouth—Emp. v. Baji, 5 C. P. L. R. 13.

It is an improper procedure for a Magistrate, during the investigation of a criminal case by himself, to take the statements of witnesses on solemn affirmation out of Court and in the absence of the accused, with the avowed object of proceeding criminally against the witnesses in case they should subsequently deviate from such statements in open Court—Reg. v. Jetha Ganesh, Ratanlal 66.

A Magistrate should not, before recording a confession, look into a police report to see what the accused had stated to the Police—Jogibvan v. Emp., 13 C. W. N. 861.

The Magistrate should not hold out any inducement. Where after the prisoner had made a long confessional statement, he was told by the Magistrate that if he stated all that he knew, he would then be examined as an approver and witness, it was held that the conduct of the Magistrate was highly improper—In re Kosa Govindan, 2 Weir 137. See also 45 All 633 cited under sec 163.

The Magistrate must not put any question to the accused tending to incriminate him—In re Rayappan, 2 Weir 136.

A statement cannot be said to be properly recorded under this section if a police officer is present at the time and is allowed to put questions to the accused—Indarsain v. Emp., 21 Cr. L. J. 418 (Lah.). Jogibvan v. Emp., 13 C. W. N. 861. "It is not proper to allow the Police officer who brought the prisoner to be present while the confession is being recorded by a Muharrir and to suggest questions to be put to the confessing prisoner"—Cal. G. R. & C. O. page 8, Emp. v. Ramanand, 1885 A. W. N. 221.

There is no warrant or justification for the intervention of a third party (e g a police officer or another Magistrate) as the questioner, directly or indirectly, of a confessing prisoner—Jogjiban v Emperor, 13 C W N 861

Confessions should be recorded in open Court. A Magistrate acts improperly in recording the confession at a late hour in the night (viz at 11 30 p m) after the accused had been subjected to interrogation by a police officer for 3 or 4 hours and had broken down under the continued questioning—A L v Pramzha 30 C L J 503 21 Cr L J 266 But of course the fact of the confession being recorded late at night is by itself not a sufficient proof against its voluntariness—Abdul Salim v Emp, 42 Cal 573 (598)

Power to administer oath —The person making a statement under this section is a witness within the meaning of Sec 5 of the Oaths Act and therefore one to whom oath might be administered and a charge of perjury can be framed under sec 193 I P C against the person making a false statement on oath under this section—16 Mad 421 Emp v Tasa aduh 1908 A W N 73 29 Mad 89 Contra—7 Cal 455 1893 P R 2 (per Plowden J) 10 C P I R 16

Mode of examination of accused —The proper mode for a Magistrate to examine an accused person under this section is to ask him if he wishes to make any statement or confess or. If he says no the Magistrate should not proceed to interrogate him but if such person wishes to make any statement the Magistrate should write down the statement or confession and ask the accused such questions as may be necessary to ascertain clearly what his meaning is—Impress v Baji 5 C P L R 13 Kesho Singh v A L 20 O C 136 18 Cr L J 742

The examination of an accused person must not be conducted after the manner of cross examination of an adverse witness by Counsel. It must not be inquisitorial forcing the prisoner to make incriminating statements—Empress v Agra 1887 A W N 166 Nor should the examination be made with a view to elicit the truth out of his mouth by constant questions as though he were a witness—Emp v Baji 5 C P L R 13. It is not permissible to question the accused closely and at great length for the purpose of extracting statements to be afterwards used as evidence—Kesho Singh v A L, 20 O C 136

515 Retracted confession —A retracted confession cannot be given any weight unless it is well corroborated by reliable evidence—Rama v K L 3 Pat 872 A I R 1925 Pat 191 But in some other cases it has been laid down that a retracted confession if proved to have been voluntarily made can be considered along with the other evidence of the case. No binding rule can be laid down such as that a retracted confession must be supported by independent reliable evidence corroborating it in material

particulars The Court should treat the value of a retracted confession as a matter of prudence rather than of law—Q E v Gharya 19 Bom 728 Q E v Gangia 23 Bom 316 21 Mad 83 Jawan v Crown 1914 P R 30 Limp v Indra Chandra 2 C W N 637 Manna Lal v K E 27 O C 40 A I R 19 5 Oudh 1 It is not illegal to base a conviction upon the uncorroborated confession of an accused person (subsequently retracted) provided that the Court is satisfied that the confession was voluntary and is true in fact—Jawan v Crown 1914 P R 30 15 Cr L J 626 Experience and common sense show that in the absence of corroboration in material particulars it is not safe to convict on a confession, unless from the peculiar circumstances on which it was made and judging from the reasons of the retraction there remains a high degree of certainty that the confession notwithstanding its having been resiled from is genuine—Jawan v Crown 1914 P R 30 18 All 78 If a Judge believes that a confession though subsequently withdrawn contains a true account of the prisoner's crime, the Judge is bound to act so far as the prisoner is concerned on the confession which he believed to be true—29 All 434, 20 All 133 The weight to be given to such a confession depends upon the circumstances under which it was generally given and the circumstances under which it was retracted including the reasons given by the prisoner for his retraction—1903 P R 16 21 Mad 83 Manna Lal v K E, 27 O C 40 25 Cr L J 49 Thus where a confession was made under police coercion and subsequently withdrawn it is certainly inadmissible in evidence—Motifan v Crown 6 C W N 380 Sriram v Limp v A L J 100 2 Cr L J 59

Where a confession is retracted it is the duty of the Court that is called to act upon it especially in a case of murder to enquire into all the material points and surrounding circumstances and satisfy itself that the confession cannot but be true—K L v Durgota 3 Bom L R 441

Where in the course of the investigation of an offence a witness makes a statement of a confessional nature which is recorded by the Magistrate under this section as a statement and not as a confession and subsequently in the course of the preliminary inquiry before the committing Magistrate he retracts that statement it is admissible in evidence against that witness on a prosecution for perjury—In re Maddala Ramanujamma 39 Mad 277

516 Subsection (2) —Mode of recording —The confession is to be recorded in the manner provided by sec 364 & c in the form of questions and answers The Magistrate is bound to record every question that he asks It is of great importance that this provision of the law should be obeyed otherwise it may be impossible to tell how far a witness voluntarily deposes to a matter and how far it was extracted from him by questioning

even in the nature of cross examination. If the confession is not recorded in this manner, the record is defective—Hasan Ali v K E 23 A L J 719 26 Cr L J 1209 A I R 1906 All 22. Where a confession is recorded not in the form of questions and answers as required by section 364 but in a narrative form the defect is not a fatal one and the confession is admissible in evidence provided that the accused is not prejudiced by the irregularity. Section 533 would cure the defect—Fekoo v Empress 14 Cal 539 Emp v Munahi 8 Cal 616 Ahid rai v E p 9 C L J 55 Emp v Sagambar 12 C L R 120 Emp v Deo Dat 45 All 166 20 A L J 915 Emp v Anta 1890 A W N 60 Nga Po Sin v Emp U B R (1897 1901) 47.

Where however the confession was not recorded in the manner prescribed in section 364 but there was only a summary record of what the accused said as to his defence after pleading not guilty and where it more over appeared that the confession was not voluntary it was held to be inadmissible in evidence—Nga San v Emp 11 Cr L J 41 (Bur).

Language—This section read with section 364 is imperative as to the language in which a confession is to be recorded, and section 533 does not provide for any non compliance with the law in this respect. Sec 364 lays down that the confession is to be recorded in the language in which it was made or if that is not practicable in the language of the Court or in English. And it would be for the prosecution to establish the impracticability of recording the statement in the language in which it was made—Jai Narain v Q E 17 Cal 86 15 Cal 595 Bawa v A L 10 O C 112 Q E v Ramjan L B R (1893 1900) 70. Thus where the Magistrate could not write well the language in which the confession was made and there was no Mohurrir with him the record of the confession in English was held to be valid and admissible in evidence—2 Cal 817 Empress v Bachanna 1891 A W N 55 see also Ahid ram v Emp 9 C L J 55. Where the confession was recorded in a language different from that in which it was made it should be presumed in the absence of anything to the contrary that the Magistrate found it impracticable to record the confession in the language in which it was made—Lal Chand v Q E 18 Cal 549 Contra—Bawa v A E 10 O C 112 6 Cr L J 94 where no such presumption was made.

In 21 Bom 495 it was held that although it was practicable to record the statement in the language of the accused the failure to do so would not make the statement inadmissible in evidence if the accused was not injured as to his defence on the merits by such irregularity. So also is the view taken in Emp v Fernand 4 Bom L R 785 and En peror v Deo Dat 45 All 166 (188) 20 A L J 915.

When a Magistrate is unable to record a confession in the language in which it is made he should not employ a Police officer to write it down

The employment of a Police officer even as a scribe in recording a confession is objectionable—Ahudiram Bose v Emp 9 C L J 55

If the statement of the accused is conveyed to the Court through an interpreter it is not necessary that the Magistrate should record the statement in the language used by the accused the record must be in the language in which it is interpreted—5 Cal 826

Although the terms of sections 164 and 364 are imperative still if the Magistrate instead of recording the confession himself employed a clerk to do so, it was held that the irregularity would be cured by sec 533 by examining the Magistrate—Badan Singh v A E 1909 P R 2

Where the confessions were neither recorded in the language of the accused nor were signed by the accused nor certified by the Magistrate, held that there was a total non compliance with the provisions of this section and sec 533 would not cure such grave irregularities—Q E v Iran, 9 Mad 224

See also Note 1038 under sec. 364

Signature —The object of requiring the signature of an accused person to the record of his confession is probably to furnish a strong test as to whether the confession was voluntary and free and to afford him a locus penitentiae before the completion of the record of indicating that the confession was not voluntary or was made under improper influence—Reg v Bai Ratan, 10 B H C R 166 The signature is taken as a voucher of the authenticity of the statement and not as an admission of its correctness—Ahudiram v Emp 9 C L J 55

The confession of the accused if not signed by the accused or attested by his mark is not admissible in evidence—Reg v Bai Ratan 10 B H C R 166 but under sec 533 parol evidence may be given of the terms of the confession and those terms if and when proved may be admitted and used as evidence in the case if the defect (non signature) is such that it has not affected the merits of the defence—Q E v Raghu 23 Bom 221 So also, if the accused subsequently signed the confession without objection as soon as the non signature was noticed the defect would be cured by sec 533 by the evidence of the Magistrate as to the authenticity of the statement—Ahudiram v Emp 9 C L J 55

If the accused is able to write his thumb impression will not be sufficient—Sadananda v Emp 32 Cal 550

The Magistrate must sign the record of confession as well as the memorandum—Emp v Lal Shaikh 3 C W N 387

517 Subsection (3)—Confession must be voluntary —A confession in order to be admissible in evidence must be made voluntarily and without pressure—A E v Gurbu 11 A L J 286 35 All 260 In re Pisani, Weir 137 No statement should be recorded under this section unless the

even in the nature of cross examination. If the confession is not recorded in this manner, the record is defective—Hasan Ali v. K E, 23 A L J. 719 26 Cr L J 1209 A I R 1926 All 22. Where a confession is recorded not in the form of questions and answers, as required by section 364, but in a narrative form, the defect is not a fatal one, and the confession is admissible in evidence, provided that the accused is not prejudiced by the irregularity. Section 533 would cure the defect—Fekoo v Empress, 14 Cal 539, Emp v Munahi 8 Cal 616 Akudiram v Emp, 9 C L J 55, Emp v Sagambar 12 C L R 120 Emp v Deo Dat, 45 All 166 20 A L J 915, Emp v Anta, 1892 A W N 60, Nga Po Sin v Emp, U B R (1897 1901) 47.

Where, however, the confession was not recorded in the manner prescribed in section 364, but there was only a summary record of what the accused said as to his defence after pleading not guilty and where it moreover appeared that the confession was not voluntary, it was held to be inadmissible in evidence—Nga San v Emp, 11 Cr L J 41 (Bur).

Language—This section read with section 364, is imperative as to the language in which a confession is to be recorded, and section 533 does not provide for any non compliance with the law in this respect. Sec 364 lays down that the confession is to be recorded in the language in which it was made or if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court or in English. And it would be for the prosecution to establish the impracticability of recording the statement in the language in which it was made—Jai Narain v Q E, 17 Cal 86, 15 Cal 595 Bawa v A L, 10 O C 112, Q E v Ramjan L B R (1893 1900) 70. Thus where the Magistrate could not write well the language in which the confession was made, and there was no Mohurrir with him the record of the confession in English was held to be valid and admissible in evidence—23 Cal 817 Empress v Bachanna 1891 A W N 55 see also Akudiram v Emp 9 C L J 55. Where the confession was recorded in a language different from that in which it was made, it should be presumed in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the Magistrate found it impracticable to record the confession in the language in which it was made—Lal Chand v Q L, 18 Cal 549 Contra—Bawa v A L, 10 O C 112 6 Cr L J 94, where no such presumption was made.

In 21 Bom 495 it was held that although it was practicable to record the statement in the language of the accused the failure to do so would not make the statement inadmissible in evidence if the accused was not injured as to his defence on the merits by such irregularity. So also is the view taken in Emp v Fernand 4 Bom L R 785 and Emperor v Deo Dat, 45 All 166 (168) 20 A L J 915.

When a Magistrate is unable to record a confession in the language in which it is made he should not employ a Police officer to write it down

The employment of a Police officer even as a scribe in recording a confession is objectionable—Khudiram Bose v Emp 9 C L J 55

If the statement of the accused is conveyed to the Court through an interpreter it is not necessary that the Magistrate should record the statement in the language used by the accused the record must be in the language in which it is interpreted—5 Cal 826

Although the terms of sections 164 and 364 are imperative still if the Magistrate instead of recording the confession himself employed a clerk to do so, it was held that the irregularity would be cured by sec 533 by examining the Magistrate—Badan Singh v A E 1909 P R 2

Where the confessions were neither recorded in the language of the accused nor were signed by the accused nor certified by the Magistrate held that there was a total non compliance with the provisions of this section and sec 533 would not cure such grave irregularities—Q E v Iran, 9 Mad 224

517 Subsection (3)—Confession must be voluntary —A confession in order to be admissible in evidence must be made voluntarily and without pressure—K E v Gulabu 11 A L J 286 35 All 260 In re Pisari, Wcir 137 No statement should be recorded under this section unless the person making it is a free agent and voluntarily agrees to have his statement taken down—1918 P R 16 A Magistrate acting under this section must question the accused in order to be affirmatively satisfied of the voluntariness of the confession and in case of doubt he ought not to record it or give the certificate—25 Bom 168 Nehal Emp 15 Cr L J 116 (Lah) The Magistrate should ascertain whether the confessional statement is made voluntarily at the beginning of the statement and not at the end—In re Rayappan - Weir 136 A Magistrate should not proceed to record a confession unless he first has reason to believe that the person is about to make it voluntarily and he should therefore begin by enquiring into the point whether the confession is voluntarily made Where a Magistrate recorded a confession of an accused without first satisfying himself as to its being voluntary and then at the end of it put one comprehensive question as to the nature of the confession it was held that he had not complied with the provisions of this section—Queen Emp v Appa, 1 Bom L R 357, Kandhai v Emp, 1 O L J 407 15 Cr L J 633 In Pulin Tanti v Emp, 40 Cal 873 (876) it was held that the fact that the Magistrate instead of asking the accused about the voluntary nature of the confession at the commencement of the confessional statement asked him at the end was merely a defect of form which did not alter the character of the confession

'It is desirable that Magistrates should act with deliberation in examining persons brought before them for the purpose of making confession and should as far as possible satisfy themselves that the confession is voluntary—and this not merely from the declaration of the accused, but from an attentive observation of his demeanour'—Cal G R & C O page 8

When a confession made by the accused is alleged by him to have been obtained by ill treatment or other improper inducements the Court should carefully inquire into the truth of such allegation—Reg v Kashi Nath, 8 B H C R 126 and it will not be presumed that it was so induced—Reg v Balaant 11 B H C R 137 and if the Court sees any ground of exclusion mentioned in sec 24 Evidence Act (inducement threat promise), it may reject the confession though at the time of record it appeared to be a voluntary confession—Umar v Emp 1887 P R 51 Emp v Dewan Kahar 4 P L T 186 But the Court cannot, merely on surmise or conjecture hold that the confession was procured by inducement threat or promise There must be in the confession itself or in the evidence or in the surrounding circumstances something to justify the inference that the confession was really not a voluntary one—Emp v Dewan Kahar, 4 P L T 186

When it appeared that an accused person was illegally confined in solitary confinement for about a fortnight that the police had access to him that pressure was brought to bear upon him through his father mother and brother that the desirability of a confession was pressed upon him by the District Magistrate as a means of saving himself and his relatives from threatened pains and penalties that his father was illegally detained in kajut for a long time without any charge that he then made a confession which was recorded without legal precautions and in the immediate presence of a police officer who put incriminating questions to the accused and helped in amplifying the confession held that such confession was not voluntary and was not admissible in evidence—Jogjnan v Emp 13 C W N 861 10 Cr L J 125

Mere subsequent retraction of a confession duly recorded and certified is not enough to show that it was not made voluntarily—Q F v Basanta 25 Bom 169

Questions to be put to accused—Under the present Amendment the Magistrate should not only question the accused about the voluntariness of the confession but should also warn him that he is not bound to make any confession and that if he makes any it will be used as evidence against him This Amendment supercedes the ruling in Q F v Ure v 10 Cal 775 (in which it was held that the Magistrate ought not to give any warning to the accused to the effect that what the accused was going to say would be evidence against him)

If the procedure of this section is not followed prior to the recording of a confession the statement of the accused cannot be admitted in evidence against him or his co-accused—Balan Singh v Emp 1 Lah I J 39 17 Cr L J 731 Unless it is proved that the Magistrate explained to him that he need not make any confession and that it might be used against him the confession is not admissible in evidence—Bahadur v Crown, 6 Lah 183 26 Cr L J 1238 4 I R 195 1 Lah 432

The Magistrate should not be content with a few formal questions The section contemplates that the Magistrate shall hear the confession first without making any record and shall then put questions to ascertain whether the confession is voluntary and then if he has reason to believe that it is voluntary he may record the confession writing out in full every question put by him and every answer given by the accused and following the provisions of sec 364 The questioning of the accused before recording a confession is a matter of substance and not of mere form and if it has been omitted the omission is a fatal one and cannot be cured by any evidence under sec 533—Ananda v Parbat 3 I B R 173 Shree Sin v K 1 3 I B R 113 4 Cr L J 385 Farid v Crown 1 Lah 375 (3 Cr

No Magistrate shall record any such confession unless upon questioning the person making it he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily It is the invariable practice of the Deputy Magistrates in this to ignore entirely this provision of the Code It is considered as to make use of a stock phrase which in this instance runs 'I am a Magistrate, if you want to make any statement of your own accord you may do so, do not make any statement which you have been tutored by others to make' and then follows the story of the crime without any answer whatever to the Magistrate's formula. To my mind a Magistrate might just as well say to the accused "hocus pocus" or "abracadabra" Such phrases would be as much a compliance with the terms of S 164 (3) as any formula now in vogue. What is meant by the Code is that the Magistrate should ask the accused some such question as 'Why are you confessing? Are you sorry for your crime or is it that some one has told you that you will gain something by a confession?' and refuse to proceed with the recording of the confession until he has had a satisfactory answer to his question. The attention of the Magistrates has been drawn several times to this defect in the procedure but the comments of the Court have invariably been completely ignored. In my view the Local Government should take steps to see that Magistrates understand the requirements of S 164 (3) and that if Magistrates fail to observe them, they are severely reprimanded—per Roe J in Ragho v Emp 18 Cr L J 721 (Pat). Where a Magistrate questioned the accused person thus 'It appears that you have committed murder and absconded by escaping from custody, you have now come what have you to say?' held that the question was extremely improper—In re Pisari 2 Weir 137.

In order to ascertain whether the confession is voluntary, the Magistrate is bound to question the accused closely as to his motive in making a confession, and if he fails to do so he has no jurisdiction to say that he is satisfied as to the voluntary nature of the confession—18 Cr L J. 721 ((Pat). In a more recent case of the same High Court, however, it has been held that it is not necessary that the Magistrate should have questioned the accused as to his motives in making the confession, though as a rule of prudence it is better that he should do so—Emp v Deuan Kahar, 4 P L T 186 24 Cr L J 497.

It would be going much too far to say that a Magistrate recording a statement or a confession under this section cannot and should not ask a single question of the deponent. But it is equally certain that his position when recording such statement or confession is merely that of a recording Magistrate, and that he is in no sense inquiring into the case and that he is not an investigating officer. He would be justified in, and ought in the ordinary performance of his duties, to clear up any matter which is ambiguous on the face of the statement, but he is wholly unjustified in exacting, by questions from the deponent any facts which the deponent has not spoken to in his Court. Everything must depend on the nature of the questioning and the object of it and the mere fact that an answer was elicited by a question does not make the proceedings improper or the statement inadmissible as a confession—Hasan Ali v A E 23 A L J 719 26 Cr L J 109 A I R 1906 All 2.

No express form of question is prescribed and the extent to which the Magistrate should question the accused must largely depend on the particular facts of each case. There are cases which on the face of them attract the suspicion of a Magistrate and there are others which do not attract any suspicion at all and it is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule on the subject. The Court must in each case satisfy itself that the Magistrate honestly believed and took steps to ascertain that the confession was a voluntary one—Thibu v Emp 4 P L T 279 24 Cr L J 649. It is desirable that the Magistrate in recording the confession should put various questions to the accused to enable him to decide whether the confession is a voluntary one or not but there is nothing in law which lays down that a Magistrate cannot satisfy himself as to the voluntariness of the confession by putting a single question to the accused—Emp v Dewan Kahar 4 P L T 186 24 Cr L J 497.

518 Police custody.—A confession obtained after the accused had been in custody for some time is always open to grave suspicion—9 All 528 Mohjan v Crown 6 C W N 380. When a Magistrate records the confession of a person who has been in police custody he should ascertain and record the period during which the accused had been in custody to satisfy himself whether the confession is voluntary or not—Q E v Naranjan 25 Bom 543. But where an accused was actually produced before the Magistrate as soon as he was arrested and was produced before him the next day for recording the confession Ibid that the confession should not be ignored on the ground that the Magistrate did not ask him how long he was in Police custody—Emp v Dewan Kahar 4 P L T 186. The fact and duration of Police custody has a material bearing on the question whether a confession is voluntary or not—Jogindan v Emp 13 C W N 861. The unjustifiable violence used by the Police to the accused for his arrest his illegal detention in police custody for more than 24 hours after his arrest and the marks on his person—all these must be held to have vitiated the voluntary character of his confession and it was therefore inadmissible in evidence—Q F v Appa 1 Bom I R 357. But a confession cannot be rejected on the sole ground that the accused had been a long time in police custody—Q E v Mahadhu Ratanlal 720. The Punjab Chief Court holds that even if the accused is in the custody of a police officer when he makes the confession yet the confession being made before a Magistrate is not excluded from being given in evidence by anything contained in sec 26, Evidence Act when proved by the evidence of the Magistrate—Feroz v Crown 1918 P R 11 19 Cr L J 651 (following 1881 P R 21).

A prisoner in police custody who was brought before a Magistrate to have his confession recorded did not cease to be in police custody merely because at the time of recording the confession there was no police officer in the room when it was found that a police officer was waiting outside the room where the confession was being recorded—O E v Lakshmya Ratanlal 853 (856)

The memorandum annexed to a record of confession is not a conclusive evidence of the fact that the confession was voluntarily made so as to preclude the Court of Appeal from inquiring into the nature of the confession to see whether it was voluntary or not—Jogulan v Emp 13 C W N 86r 10 C I J 125

(2) A police officer proceeding under sub section (1) shall if practicable conduct the search in person

(3) If he is unable to conduct the search in person, and there is no other person competent to make the search present at the time, he may require any officer subordinate to him to make the search and he shall deliver to such subordinate officer an order in writing specifying the document or thing for which search is to be made, and the place to be searched, and such subordinate officer may thereupon search for such thing in such place

(3) If he is unable to conduct the search in person and there is no other person competent to make the search present at the time, he may after recording in writing his reasons for so doing require any officer subordinate to him to make the search and he shall deliver to such subordinate officer an order in writing specifying the place to be searched and so far as possible the thing for which search is to be made and such subordinate officer may thereupon search for such thing in such place

(4) The provisions of this Code as to search warrants shall so far as may be apply to a search made under this section

(4) The provisions of this Code as to search warrants and the general provisions as to searches contained in Section 102 and Section 103 shall so far as may be apply to a search made under this section

(5) Copies of any record made under sub section (1) or sub-section (3) shall forthwith be sent to the nearest Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence, and the owner or occupier of the place searched shall on application be furnished with a copy of the same by the Magistrate

Provided that he shall pay for the same unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost

Change —The changes in this section as shown by the italicised words have been introduced by sec 36 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) For reasons see below

521 Sub section (1)—General search —The old section spoke of 'any document or thing which meant a specific document or thing which might be the subject of a summons or order under section 94 it did not authorise a general search on the chance that something might be found—Bajrang Gope v Emp 38 Cal 304 Pran Khan v K E 16 C W N 1078 Emp v Brishbbhan 13 A L J 979 38 All 14 Divakar v Ramamurti 35 M L J 127 19 Cr L J 901 The section spoke of a particular document or thing which was necessary to the conduct of an investigation into an offence and did not authorise a general search e g for arms generally—Clarke v Brojendra Kishore 36 Cal 433 or for stolen property generally—Bisser Misser v Emp 41 Cal 261 nor was the requirement of this section fulfilled by framing the warrant as one for stolen property relevant to the case—Pran Khan v K E 16 C W N 1078 13 Cr L J 764

This has been made clear by the present amendment by the addition of the specific words and specifying in such writing to be made These words were added during the Debate on the motion of Mr Ranga chariar who observed as follows I think that it is a vicious thing to allow a police officer to have power to conduct a general search without knowing what it is he is going to search for but merely to see if he can find something incriminating in a person's house Even the wording of the clause itself (that such a thing cannot in his opinion be otherwise obtained without undue delay) contemplates that the man himself has some information and that he must know what it is that he is after and it is necessary that he should record this in writing and forward the record to the Magistrate so that it will be a check upon irresponsible general searches which have frequently disgraced the police administration in various parts of the country —Legislative Assembly Debates 31st January 1923 p 1754

This section is not restricted to a search for what is stolen and believed to be stolen property but it permits a police-officer to make a search of anything necessary for the purposes of an investigation into any offence—Emp v Param Sukh 23 A L J 1037 A I R 1926 All 147

522 Within the limits —A Station House officer has no power to make a search beyond the local limits of his own circle—Mir Sha v Crown 8 S L R 1 16 Cr L J 15 Krishna Aiyar v Emp 24 M L T 96 20 Cr L J 145 Such a search is illegal and resistance to such search is not an offence—Madho Sonar v Emp 13 A L J 691 16 Cr L J 589 But see sec 166 (3) which now authorises a Police officer, under certain circumstances to make a search within the limits of another police station

523 Who shall conduct the search —Sub section (2) lays down that the officer in charge of a police station or the investigating officer must 'conduct the search in person'. But this does not mean that the officer must himself make the search: he ransack boxes examine the room, dig up the floor or otherwise seek for the property. Nor is it necessary that all these processes should take place under his very eye. Therefore where the Inspector remained outside the house while the actual search was being made inside by two constables it was held that the search was not illegal. All that the section means is that the officer should go to the spot and exercise a general superintendence over the search in contradistinction to the cases where he is unable to go to the spot and deposes a subordinate by a written order to conduct the search in his place—Sadagopala v Satrugna 23 M L J 445 (dissenting from 17 M L J 323 where a search made by a constable inside the house while the Inspector was seated outside was held to be illegal as not being conducted in person by the Inspector).

The Magistrate cannot conduct the search under this section. This section speaks of a search made by a Police officer and not by a Magistrate—Clarke v Brojendra 36 Cal 433. The Magistrate can conduct a search only under section 105 which section has not been made applicable here.

524 Sub section (3)—Order in writing —If the officer cannot himself go to the spot he can depute a subordinate but the deputation must be by an order in writing. A constable making the search without such a written order does not lawfully exercise the power of a public servant, and resistance to such search is not an offence—Q v Narain 7 N W P H C R 209. Idu Manjal v Fmp 6 C L J 753. Mir Sha v Crown 8 S L R 1. Madho Sonar v Emp 13 A L J 691.

525 Sub section (4)—Necessity of Search warrant —A subordinate Police officer may however without a warrant enter a house in search of a person who is charged with having committed a cognizable offence but he is not empowered to enter a house without a search warrant in search of property—Reg v Ickhatarau 7 B H C R 50.

Witness to the search —Prior to the present amendment it was held that the failure to call inhabitants of the locality as witnesses to the search did not make the search illegal because the provisions of section 103 did not apply to a search under this section—Sadagopala v Satrugna 23 M L J 445. This ruling is now rendered obsolete by the present sub section (4) which makes the general provisions of searches under sections 102 and 103 applicable to searches under this section.

Damages for illegal search —A police officer cannot investigate into a non cognizable case without the order of a Magistrate (sec 155) nor can he make a search in respect of it because he can make a search only in those cases which he can investigate Therefore a police officer making a search in a non cognizable case without being authorised by a Magistrate is liable to be sued for damages—24 Cal 691

Where a Police officer makes a search for specific stolen property bona fide the person whose premises are searched is not entitled to damages —Divakar v Ramamurthi 35 M L J 127 19 Cr L J 901

A police officer not having jurisdiction over the place searched who takes part in a search conducted by another police officer authorised by the Code to conduct the search cannot be said to exceed his jurisdiction and is not liable in damages as one making an illegal search—Asan v Masilamani, 42 Mad 446 36 M L J 252 20 Cr L J 422

Subsection (5) —This subsection and its proviso did not exist in the Bills or Reports but were added during the Debate on the motion of Mr Rangachariar who in moving this amendment observed as follows —

The object of this amendment is that as soon as a search is made, an immediate report should be made to the nearest Magistrate The second object is that the person whose house is searched should have copies of the records made under sub sections (1) and (3) Subsection (4) as it stands enables the provisions of section 103 to apply that is, the general rules relating to searches are made applicable Under section 103 the occupier of the place where the search was made gets only a list of the articles taken but what I want him to get is the reason for the search which has to be recorded in writing which has to be sent to the Magistrate and he gets a copy thereof See the Legislative Assembly Debates 31st January 1923 page 1755

166 (1) An officer in charge of a police station or a police

When officer in charge of police station may require another to issue search warrant	officer not being below the rank of a Sub-Inspector making an investigation may require an officer in charge of another police-station, whether in the same or a different district, to cause a search to be made in any place, in any case in which the former officer might cause such search to be made, within the limits of his own station
---	--

(2) Such officer, on being so required, shall proceed according to the provisions of section 165, and shall forward the thing found, if any, to the officer at whose request the search was made

(3) Whenever there is reason to believe that the delay occasioned by requiring an officer in charge of another police station

to cause a search to be made under sub section (1) might result in evidence of the commission of an offence being concealed or destroyed, it shall be lawful for an officer in charge of a police station or a police officer making an investigation under this Chapter to search or cause to be searched, any place in the limits of another police station in accordance with the provisions of Section 165 as if such place were within the limits of his own station

(4) Any officer conducting a search under sub section (3) shall forthwith send notice of the search to the officer in charge of the police station within the limits of which such place is situate, and shall also send with such notice a copy of the list (if any) prepared under Section 103 and shall also send to the nearest Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence, copies of the records referred to in section 165 sub sections (1) and (3)

(5) The owner or occupier of the place searched shall, on application, be furnished with a copy of any record sent to the Magistrate under sub section (4)

Provided that he shall pay for the same unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost

Change —The changes have been introduced by sec 37 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923)

Not being below the rank of Sub inspector — In the Bill as introduced an investigating officer could not be below the rank of Sub Inspector We have proposed to some extent to remove this restriction but we are inclined to think that the powers conferred by section 166 should not be exercised by a police officer making an investigation who is below the rank of Sub Inspector We realise however that there may be administrative difficulties in this connection and if such difficulties are pointed out by Local Governments we should be prepared to retain this clause unamended —Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

Sub sections (3), (4) — These two sub sections are proposed to be added in order to give power in certain circumstances to an officer in charge of a Police station to search or cause to be searched places within the local limits of another police station —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Sub-section (5) —This sub-section and the proviso as well as the words and shall also and (3) in the last three lines of subsection (4) did not exist in the Bills or the Reports but were added on the motion of Mr. Rangachariar during the Debate in the Legislative Assembly The reason for this amendment is the same as that for a similar amendment made in sec 165 See the Legislative Assembly Debates January 31st 1923 page 1757

167 (1) Whenever it appears that any investigation under this Chapter cannot be completed within the period of twenty four hours fixed by Section 61 and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well founded the officer in charge of the police station shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case, and shall at the same time forward the accused (if any) to such Magistrate	167 (1) Whenever any person is arrested and detained in custody and it appears that the investigation * * * cannot be completed within the period of twenty-four hours fixed by Section 61, and there are grounds for believing that the accusation or information is well founded the officer in charge of the police station or the police officer making the investigation if he is not below the rank of Sub-Inspector shall forthwith transmit to the nearest Magistrate a copy of the entries in the diary hereinafter prescribed relating to the case and shall at the same time forward the accused (* *) to such Magistrate

(2) The Magistrate to whom an accused person is forwarded under this section may whether he has or has not jurisdiction to try the case from time to time authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as such Magistrate thinks fit, for a term not exceeding fifteen days in the whole. If he has not jurisdiction to try the case or commit it for trial and considers further detention unnecessary, he may order the accused to be forwarded to a Magistrate having such jurisdiction

Provided that no Magistrate of the third class, and no Magis

trial of the second class not specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government shall authorise detention in the custody of the police

(3) A Magistrate authorizing under this section detention in the custody of the police shall record his reasons for so doing

(4) If such order is given by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or Sub divisional Magistrate he shall forward a copy of his order with his reasons for making it to the Magistrate to whom he is immediately subordinate

Change —The italicised words in subsection (1) and the proviso in sub section (2) have been inserted by sec 38 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 The reasons are stated below

526 Scope —Prior to the present amendment the first six lines of this section ran thus — Whenever it appears that any investigation under this chapter cannot be completed etc : & this section applied only to investigations under this chapter and gave no authority to a Magistrate to remand an accused person to custody in proceedings under Chapter VIII in order to enable the police to arrest other persons jointly accused with him—Emp v Basya 5 Bom L R 27 Raghuandan v Emp 32 Cal 80 8 C W N 779 In re Sublarayya 39 Mad 928 36 All 262 These rulings are no longer good law because the words under this chapter have now been omitted by the Amendment Act of 1923

527 24 hours fixed by sec 61 —Having regard to the provisions of this section and of sec 61 and to the requirements of justice the intention of the Legislature is that the accused persons should be brought before the Magistrate competent to try or commit with as little delay as possible —Q E v Engadu 11 Mad 98

Not below the rank of Sub Inspector — In sec 167 however which confers a power to ask for a remand we would confine the operation to investigating officers not below the rank of sub Inspector —Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

528 Forward the accused to the Magistrate —Before a Magistrate remands an accused person to police custody the accused must be produced before him—Pearj Mohan v Heston 16 C W N 145 13 Cr L J 65 Where the accused is not brought before the Magistrate it is illegal for him to remand the prisoner on the application of the police—Crown v Shera 1867 P R 39

529 Sub section (2)—Magistrate's power to detain —Under this section a Magistrate on a mere perusal of the entries in the Police diaries may from time to time authorise the detention of the accused for a not exceeding 15 days on the whole. Thereafter he can, under sec 344 by a warrant, remand the accused for any term not exceeding 15 days at a time if there is sufficient evidence to suspect that the accused has committed an offence and that further evidence may be obtained by such remand—36 Cal 166

An application for remand to police custody must be made personally by the chief Police officer present to the chief Magisterial officer present, unless this is impossible owing to the absence of one of the officers concerned or through some other exceptional cause—Peary Mohan v Weston, 16 C W N 145 13 Cr L J 65

The power under sec 167 is given to detain the prisoners in custody while the police make the investigation and before the inquiry, but the custody mentioned in sec 344 is quite different and is intended for under-trial prisoners, i e when the inquiry or trial has begun or is about to begin—Q E v Engadu 11 Mad 98 In re Arishnaji 23 Bom 32, In re Nagendra Nath, 51 Cal 402 (412)

Under the proviso to this sub section newly added the power of detention is confined to first class Magistrates and to second class Magistrates specially empowered. The reason is that the period of detention is just the time which is taken advantage of by inexperienced Magistrates for extorting confessions and other things. Therefore the power of detention should be given only to experienced Magistrates. We consider that the Bill does not go far enough in its restriction of the Magistrates who should be authorised to remand to police custody. We would confine the power to first class Magistrates and to second class Magistrates specially empowered—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

530 Period of detention.—The period for which a Magistrate can authorise the detention of the accused in police custody is under this section 15 days on the whole—In re Krishnaji, 23 Bom 32, Reg v Surhaja 5 B H C R 31, 1902 P R 24 Q E v Engadu 11 Mad 98, 19 W R 36

In ordering further detention when there are good reasons for it a Magistrate should invariably limit the term as much as possible to what may be necessary for the object in view—Emp v Kampu Kuki, 11 C. W. N 554

531. Subsection (3)—Grounds of detention.—Where a Magistrate orders the detention of an accused person in police custody, he must record sufficient reasons for the same—In re Arishnaji 23 Bom 32, Peary Mohan v Weston, 16 C W N 145. Before he orders the detention of an accused person he should ascertain how long the accused had been under police surveillance or influence and in recording the reasons for detention

he should note all the information that he is able to obtain on the subject—Emp v Madar, 1885 A W N 59

By requiring the Magistrate to record his reasons in case of sanctioning detention in police custody, the law contemplates that the Magistrate should consider whether on the facts placed before him there are good grounds for allowing such detention. There must be at least something to satisfy the Magistrate that the presence of the person arrested would, during the police investigation, assist in some discovery of evidence—Emp v Kampu Kuki, 11 C W N 554. The reasons which are to be recorded must be reasons showing the particular necessity which exists in each particular case for leaving the prisoner in the hands of the Police. Under no circumstances should an accused person be remanded to police custody unless it is made clear that his presence is actually needed in order to serve some important purpose connected with the completion of the inquiry—Emp. v Madar, 1885 A W N 59

Thus, when the accused had confessed before the Magistrate and had pointed out some of the properties stolen and was waiting to do more, but was unable to do so because the Police were by law unable without a special order to detain him it was held that an order for detention should be made—Emp v Kampu, 11 C W N 554. If in a case into which the police are enquiring, the suspected persons have voluntarily offered to conduct the police to a place where the stolen property may be found but such an offer cannot be carried into execution within the limited period of 24 hours, the power to detain under this section may be rightly exercised—Q E v Rugonath, 3 N W P H C R 275

But the fact that the accused is wanted by the police for the purpose of pointing out the places through which he passed on his way to commit a dacoity, or for the purpose of obtaining his identification in the village is not a sufficient reason for sanctioning detention—Amir Khan v K E, 7 C W N 457. So also, it would be improper for a Magistrate to sanction the detention of a person in police custody so that he may be forced to give a clue to the stolen property—Q E v Rugonath, 3 N W P H C R 275, or on a mere expectation that time will show his guilt—1872 P R 17, or simply for the purpose of verifying his confession recorded under section 164—Lmp v Radhe Halwai, 7 C W N 220

168 When any subordinate police officer has made any investigation under this Chapter, he shall report the result of such investigation to the officer in charge of the police-station.

Report of investigation by subordinate police officer.

532. It was held that a report made by a subordinate Police Officer under this section was not a public document within the meaning of section

74. Evidence Act, and an accused person was not entitled to a copy of it before trial—20 Mad 189 But now see sec 173 sub section (4)

169 If, upon an investigation under this Chapter, it appears to the officer in charge of the police station or to the police-officer making the investigation, that there is not sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the forwarding of the accused to a Magistrate, such officer shall, if such person is in custody, release him on his executing a bond, with or without sureties, as such officer may direct, to appear, if and when so required, before a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence on a police report and to try the accused or commit him for trial

Change —The words or to the police officer making the investigation have been added by section 39 of the Crim Pro Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 'In the case of sec 169 we agree that the power contemplated by the section should be exerciseable by investigating officers and we see no reason in this case to restrict the power to officers not below the rank of Sub-inspector With regard to section 170, however, we consider that the direct responsibility for sending up a case should rest with the officer in charge of the police station' —Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

533 Power of Police Officer —This section does not authorise a police officer to entertain an application for withdrawal of a complaint Permitting a complainant to withdraw is a judicial act the exercise of which is vested in the Magistrate under Secs 248 and 345 and the police have no authority to interfere in such matters—Anonymous, Ratanlal 91

Re arrest —The admission to bail by the Police under this section is a purely provisional arrangement, and therefore if the Magistrate considers that the evidence does establish a prima facie case of a non bailable offence, the accused should be re-arrested and forwarded to the Magistrate in custody—Anonymous Ratanlal 121

170. (1) If, upon an investigation under this Chapter, it appears to the officer in charge of the police-station that there is sufficient evidence or reasonable ground as aforesaid, such officer shall forward the accused under custody to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence upon a police report and to try the accused or commit him for trial or if the offence is bailable and the accused is able to give security shall take security from him for his appearance before such Magistrate on a day fixed and for his attendance from day to day before such Magistrate until otherwise directed.

(2) When the officer in charge of a police station forwards an accused person to a Magistrate or takes security for his appearance before such Magistrate under this section he shall send to such Magistrate any weapon or other article which it may be necessary to produce before him and shall require the complainant (if any) and so many of the persons who appear to such officer to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case as he may think necessary to execute a bond to appear before the Magistrate as thereby directed and prosecute or give evidence (as the case may be) in the matter of the charge against the accused.

(3) If the Court of the District Magistrate or Sub divisional Magistrate is mentioned in the bond such Court shall be held to include any Court to which such Magistrate may refer the case for inquiry or trial provided reasonable notice of such reference is given to such complainant or persons.

(4) * * * * *

(5) The officer in whose presence the bond is executed shall deliver a copy thereof to one of the persons who executed it and shall then send to the Magistrate the original with his report.

Change — Subsection (4) has been recently omitted by the Crim Pro Code Amendment Act II of 1926. The reasons for the omission have been thus stated — Subsection (4) of section 170 provides that the day fixed appear he may forwarded witnesses shall be bound down to appear before the Magistrate on the date when the a is expected to arrive at the Court if he is forwarded in custody. It been found to be inconvenient and it is understood is not free followed in practice —Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India 1925 Part V p 214)

534 Shall forward —As soon as it appears to the investigating police officer that there is sufficient ground for forwarding the accused the police officer is bound to forward the accused and has no option but to do so—Govinda v Enp 16 N L R 9 21 Cr L J 769

On a day fixed —A recognisance taken from a prisoner binding him to attend the Court to answer a charge against him should specify a particular day for his attendance—Q v Pooran 11 W R 47

The police should not bind over witnesses to appear and give evidence long after the prisoner is brought before the Magistrate—6 W R 52

535 Right of accused to copy of charge sheet at the beginning of trial —It was held under the old law that a Magistrate was entitled to refuse to give the accused at the commencement of the trial a copy of the Police charge sheet containing the whole of the prosecution evidence and extracts from the police diaries—19 Mad 14 but this is no longer good law in view of the new subsection (4) of sec 173 which now entitles the accused to get a copy of the charge sheet before trial

Complainants and witnesses not to be required to accompany police officer	171. No complainant or witness on his way to the Court of the Magistrate shall be required to accompany a police officer
---	--

Complainants and witnesses not to be subjected to restraint	or shall be subjected to unnecessary restraint or inconvenience or required to give any security for his appearance other than his own bond
---	---

Provided that Recusant complainant or witness may be forwarded in custody	if any complainant or witness refuses to attend or execute a bond as directed in Section 170 the officer in charge of the police-station may forward him in custody to the Magistrate who may detain him in custody until he executes such bond or until the hearing of the case is completed

536 Unnecessary restraint —Where a witness was kept under police surveillance for about four days it was held that there was no warrant in the law to keep a witness under such unnecessary restraint and that under such circumstances the evidence of the witness could not be accepted as given voluntarily—4 C W N 49

172 (1) Every police-officer making an investigation under this Chapter shall day by day enter his ^{Diary of proceedings in investigation.} proceedings in the investigation in a diary, setting forth the time at which the information reached him, the time at which he began and closed his investigation, the place or places visited by him, and a statement of the circumstances ascertained through this investigation

(2) Any Criminal Court may send for the police diaries of a case under inquiry or trial in such Court and may use such diaries not as evidence in the case, but to aid it in such inquiry or trial. Neither the accused nor his agents shall be entitled to call for such diaries, nor shall he or they be entitled to see them merely because they are referred to by the Court, but if they are used by the police-officer who made them, to refresh his memory or if the Court uses them for the purpose of contradicting such police officer the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 Section 161 or Section 145, as the case may be, shall apply

537 Diary to be kept properly —Though Police diaries are not evidence in the case against the accused still it is very essential for criminal trials that they should be properly kept in the manner provided by the Code and Magistrates should enforce the observance of law in this respect—1867 P R 39 See also Punj Cir p 174

It is incumbent upon a Police officer who investigates a case under this chapter to keep the diary as provided by this section and the omission to keep the diary deprives the Court of the very valuable assistance which such diaries can give if legitimately used—Hiralal v Crown 1918 P R 16 19 Cr L J 517

Court may send for diaries —Sessions Judges should not issue a general order directing the Police diaries in all cases committed for trial to the Court of Session and in every criminal appeal to be transmitted to them. They are only authorised to send for the diaries of cases under trial before them if they think it necessary in such cases to peruse the diaries—Q E v Manna 19 All 390 (T B)

538 Use of diary —

Diary not an evidence in the case —Police diaries are not original evidence of the matters contained therein—Dal Singh v K E 44 Cal 876 (P C) 21 C W N 818 Q E v Zahir Husain 21 All 159 In re Nira-

vals 2 Weir 143 Anonymous 2 Weir 142 The Court should not take the facts and statements contained in the diaries as the material which would help it to come to a finding for this would be using the diary as an evidence in the case—10 C W N 600 nor should the Court make a summary of the contents of the diary and make it a part of the judgment for that would also make the statements contained in the diary virtually a part of the evidence in the case—Emp v Nand Lal 1894 A W N 155 The use of the diary as evidence in the case either for or against the accused is strictly forbidden by sec 162 Even the consent or desire of the accused cannot legalise the use of the diary as evidence in the case—Manna Lal v A E 27 O C 40 A I R 1925 Oudh 1

The diary may be used not as evidence but only for the purpose of assisting the Court in the inquiry or trial or as suggesting means of further elucidating the points which need clearing up and which are material for doing justice between Crown and the accused—Dal Singh v Emp 44 Cal 876 (P C) Q E v Jadab 27 Cal 295 19 All 390 Achhaibat v Emp 2 P L T 223 Emp v Nand Lal 1894 A W N 155 Sundar Singh v Emp 23 Cr L J 251 (Lab) or for the purpose of seeking for sources and lines of enquiry and for the names of persons who may be in a position to give material evidence—Ibid

Entries made in a personal diary kept by a police officer who did not start investigating and did not carry on the investigation of the case do not fall within the provisions of this section and the diary is not inadmissible in evidence Kala v Emp 6 Cr L J 579 A I R 1925 Cal 959

Use by Police officer for refreshing memory or by the Court to contradict the Police officer—A criminal Court may permit the Police officer who made the special diary to look at it for the purpose of refreshing his memory or may use it for the purpose of showing contradiction between the statements recorded in the diary and the evidence which the police officer is giving in Court A special diary cannot be used to enable any witness other than the Police officer who made it to refresh his memory by looking at it and it cannot be used to contradict any witness other than such Police officer—Q E v Mannu 19 All 390 Dal Singh v Emp 44 Cal 876 (P C) It is illegal to use police diaries for the purpose of contradicting the evidence of prosecution witnesses—Emp v Chunn 1883 A W N 37

The object of subsection (2) is to enable the Court to direct the police officer who is giving his evidence to refresh his memory from the notes made by him in the course of his investigation of the case or to question him as to contradictions which may appear between statements so recorded and the evidence he is giving in Court If used for the latter purpose the provisions of secs 145 and 161 of the Evidence Act shall apply The Court may also use the diaries in the course of the trial for the purpose of clearing up obscurities in the evidence or bringing out relevant facts which the Court thinks are material in the interests of a fair trial. If the statements in question, however, have not been made evidence in accordance with these statutory provisions, no Court has the right to refer to them subsequently for the purpose of coming to a judicial decision upon the case which is under trial or inquiry—Mohammad v Emp, 26 Cr L J, 1308: A I R. 1926 Lah 54

The accused is not entitled to insist that a Police officer should refer to the diary to refresh his memory—8 Cal 154, nor is the Judge bound to compel the witness to look at the diary to refresh his memory—8 Cal 739 But see Mohiuddin v K E, A I R 1924 Pat 829, where it is held that if a Sub-Inspector does not remember what the witnesses stated at the investigation, and refuses to refresh his memory from the diaries, the Court should compel him to look into the diaries

The diary is permitted to be used for the limited purpose of contradicting the Police officer and not for the purpose of corroborating him—Ashhatbat v Emp 2 P L T 223 22 Cr L J 374 But where independently of the police diary wrongly relied upon by the Court below, there was ample legal evidence to corroborate the prosecution case and to sustain the conviction the High Court in revision condoned the irregularity and refused to interfere—Ibid A Magistrate should not refer to an entry in a diary which is not used by a prosecution witness to refresh his memory as corroborative of his evidence but an error of this kind is not a sufficient ground for interference by the High Court when the Magistrate has found the accused guilty after considering the other evidence in the case—In re Cuthalikhutti, 1 L W 229 15 Cr L J 256

539 Accused not entitled to copy of diary—Inspection—Neither the accused nor his agent is entitled to a copy of the special diary or of any part of it His right is limited to inspection only in certain cases Where the diary is used by the Court for the purpose of enabling the Police officer who made it to refresh his memory or for the purpose of contradicting him the provisions of sec 161 of the evidence Act apply and the accused or his agent is entitled to see (but not to get a copy of) such diary and to cross-examine such Police officer thereupon—Q E v Maunu 19 All 390

The right of the accused to inspect the police diary is limited to that portion of the diary from which the police officer who gave evidence refreshed his memory He is not entitled to an inspection of anything more—Lachmi v K E, 2 Pat 74

540 Contents of the diary—Statements under sec 161—Statements made to a police officer by a person whom he is examining under sec 161 should not be recorded in the special diary—33 Cal 1023, 20 Cal 642 Contra—19 All 390

173. (1) Every investigation under this Chapter shall be completed without unnecessary delay and as soon as it is completed the officer in charge of the police station shall—

Report of police officer

(a) forward to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence on a police report a report in the form prescribed by the Local Government setting forth the names of the parties the nature of the information and the names of the persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case and stating whether the accused (if arrested) has been forwarded in custody or has been released on his bond and if so whether with or without sureties and

(b) communicate in such manner as may be prescribed by the Local Government the action taken by him to the person if any by whom the information relating to the commission of the offence was first given

(2) Where a superior officer of police has been appointed under Section 158 the report shall in any cases in which the Local Government by general or special order so directs be submitted through that officer and he may pending the orders of the Magistrate direct the officer in charge of the police station to make further investigation

(3) Whenever it appears from a report forwarded under this section that the accused has been released on his bond the Magistrate shall make such order for the discharge of such bond or otherwise as he thinks fit

(4) A copy of any report forwarded under this section shall on application be furnished to the accused before the commencement of the inquiry or trial

Provided that the same shall be paid for unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost

Change —Clause (b) and subsection (4) have been added by sec 40 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 The principal change effected is to prescribe that the Police shall communicate the result of their investigation to the person by whom the first information was given—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) For reason of subsection (4) see below

541 Police report—It is the duty of the Police to make a report in every investigation under this Chapter Where the accused gave information to the Police of the commission of a non cognizable offence and the Police obtained the authority of a Magistrate under section 155 to investigate the case and without making any report instituted proceedings against the accused under section 211 I P C which ended in his conviction it was held that the conviction was illegal in the absence of a Police report under this section—Emp v Appa Ragho 17 Bom L R 69 16 Cr L J 161

There is no legal limit to the number of investigations which can be held into a crime and when one has been completed by the submission of a report under this section another may be begun on further information received—Divakar v Ramamurthi 35 M L J 127 19 Cr L J 901

The report must set forth the nature of the information A report which omits to set forth the information is defective and a Magistrate taking cognizance of a case on such report acts illegally—37 Cal 49

It is sufficient if the Police report contains the names of the parties the nature of the information and the names of the persons acquainted with the circumstances of the case The report need not state whether in the opinion of the police the accused are guilty or not Where the police sent up their report wherein they mentioned the names of two persons and stated that certain witnesses spoke against them on account of enmity but that if the Court thought that there was evidence against them the Court might issue warrant held that the report was a police report within the meaning of this section—Mehrab v Emp 17 S L R 150 A I R 1924 Sind 71 26 Cr L J 181

On receipt of a police report under this section the Magistrate can take cognizance of the case under sec 190(b) If instead of doing so he proceeded to make over the case to a subordinate Magistrate for enquiry and report as if he had taken cognizance of the case on a complaint held that the proceedings of the Magistrate were irregular—Abdullah v A E 40 Cal 834 17 C W N 1004 14 Cr L J 297

Order to strike off case—A Magistrate's order directing a case reported to him by the Police under this section to be struck off is not a judicial order dismissing a complaint and cannot be reviewed by the Sessions Judge under sec 437 (now 436)—Q F v Asurm Ratanlal 51

Sub section (4)—This sub section did not exist in the Bills or Reports but was added during the debate on the motion of Mr Rangachar

who observed as follows This amendment relates to the supply to the accused person of a copy of the charge sheet in the case in which he is being prosecuted There has been considerable difficulty in this matter on account of the rulings of various Courts that copies of charge sheets should not be furnished to accused persons Some Courts went to the length of holding that till the accused begins his defence a copy of the charge sheet should not be furnished to him It has worked a great hardship The accused has to grope in the dark as to what case he has to meet who the prosecution witnesses are and what their evidence is going to be This amendment is therefore very necessary Before a case begins or the inquiry or trial commences an accused person ought to be furnished with a copy of the charge on which he is being prosecuted Just as he is furnished with a copy of the complaint on which he is being prosecuted so also this charge sheet is the information on which the Magistrate takes cognizance and it is but right that the accused should be granted a copy of it —Legislative Assembly Debates 31st January 1923 pages 1763—1764

Before the enactment of this sub section it was held that the report made by a Police officer under this section not being a public document within the meaning of Sec 74 of the Evidence Act the accused was not entitled to get a copy of the report before trial—20 Mad 189 19 Mad 14 But these cases are now overruled by the new sub section (4)

174 (1) The officer in charge of a police station or some other police officer specially empowered by the Local Government in that behalf, on receiving information that a person—

- (a) has committed suicide or
- (b) has been killed by another or by an animal or by machinery, or by an accident or
- (c) has died under circumstances raising a reasonable suspicion that some other person has committed an offence, shall immediately give intimation thereof to the nearest Magistrate empowered to hold inquests and, unless otherwise directed by any rule prescribed by the Local Government or by any general or special order of the District or Sub divisional Magistrate, shall proceed to the place where the body of such deceased person is and there, in the presence of two or more respectable inhabitants of the neighbourhood, shall make an investigation, and draw up a report of the apparent cause of death, describing such wounds fractures bruises and other marks of injury as may be found on the body, and stating in what manner, or by what weapon or instrument (if any) such marks appear to have been inflicted

(2) The report shall be signed by such police officer and other persons or by so many of them as concur therein, and shall be forthwith forwarded to the District Magistrate or the Sub divisional Magistrate

(3) When there is any doubt regarding the cause of death, or when for any other reason the police officer considers it expedient so to do he shall, subject to such rules as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf, forward the body, with a view to its being examined to the nearest Civil Surgeon, or other qualified medical man appointed in this behalf by the Local Government, if the state of the weather and the distance admit of its being so forwarded without risk of such putrefaction on the road as would render such examination useless

(4) In the Presidencies of Fort St George and Bombay, investigations under this section may be made by the head of the village, who shall then report the result to the nearest Magistrate authorised to hold inquests

(5) The following Magistrates are empowered to hold inquests namely, any District Magistrate Sub divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class and any Magistrate especially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government or the District Magistrate

Change —In subsection (5) the words 'or Magistrate of the first class' have been newly added by sec 41 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 By this amendment, all first class Magistrates have been generally empowered to hold inquests

Magistrates empowered —In the Punjab all Magistrates of the 1st and second class have been specially empowered to hold inquests under this section—Punjab Gazette, 1883 pp 23 32 In Bombay, 'Magistrates (except Honorary Magistrates) all District Super and Assistant Superintendents of Police are empowered to this section—Bombay Government Gazette 1872 p 1325, Ibi'

District Magistrates should inform District Superintendents of Police which of the subordinate Magistrates have been authorised under section 37 read with sec 174 Cr P C to hold inquests. The District Superintendent of Police will thus be enabled to instruct his subordinates as to the particular Magistrates to whom the intimation required by this section is to be sent, and the intimations will give those Magistrates the opportunity of proceeding under sec 176, when it may be desirable to do so—C P Cr Cir, Part II, No 10

542 Scope —When the body cannot be found or has been buried, there can be no investigation under section 174. This section is intended to apply to cases in which an inquest is necessary which presupposes that the corpse must be available—1908 P R 27

543 Report —The report is different from the final or complete report mentioned in sec 173. Inquest reports must be written up and completed on the spot where the inquest over the corpse is being held. Immediately the inquest is closed, the report thereof will be put into a cover and handed over in the presence of the Panchayeldars to the constable about to take the corpse to the Medical Officer's station for examination.—Mad Pol Man, Vol I, p 85

Considering the important nature of the evidence which is generally supplied by the results of the post mortem examination it is necessary that in such cases the results of the observation, external and internal should be fully recorded. A verbatim report of the statements of witnesses examined at the inquest may often be of great use to the Court in testing the value of evidence subsequently given.—In re Pachudayan, 9 M L T 321 12 Cr L J 124

Special diary not necessary in all cases — The Lieutenant Governor does not think that special diaries are intended or necessary in all cases of inquiry into unnatural deaths. The report described in sec 174 Cr P Code is very much the same in character as the special diary of sec 172. If the Police officer investigating sees reason to suspect crime, the inquiry becomes one under sec 172 and special diaries become as a matter of course necessary, but in ordinary cases in which the inquiry is made and completed in a few hours there seems to be no necessity of reporting the facts first in a special diary and then in the report prescribed by sec 174. When however the inquiry is prolonged or lasts for more than one day the diary should be sent to inform the District Superintendent and Magistrate of what is going on. The Lieutenant Governor would therefore rule that in cases of any complexity or in which the inquiry lasts over one day, or in which a crime is suspected, special diaries should be sent in anticipation of the final report which will be made under sec 173 if a crime is detected, and under sec 174 if the death is from accident or unnatural causes It is to be understood that in the station Diary everything done by the Police will be entered"—Bengal Police Circular, 1872, page 107

175. (1) A police-officer proceeding under Section 174 may by order in writing summon two or more persons as aforesaid for the purpose of the said investigation, and any other person who appears to be acquainted with the facts of the case Every person so summoned shall be bound to attend and to answer truly all questions other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge, or to a penalty or forfeiture

(2) If the facts do not disclose a cognizable offence to which section 170 applies such persons shall not be required by the police officer to attend a Magistrate's Court

Punishment — A person who fails to attend in obedience to the order issued under this section is punishable under sec 174 I P Code

It should be noticed however that the word 'truly' which has been omitted from sec 161 is still retained under this section, probably through oversight but whether retained through oversight or otherwise, the word cannot be ignored, and a person giving false answers to questions put to him is liable to prosecution for giving false evidence, under sec 193 I P C If he refuses to answer the questions he is punishable under sec 179 I P C

It should be further noted that the obligation to answer truly all questions attaches only to the persons summoned by the Police officer If a person voluntarily comes forward without any summons, and makes false statements he cannot be prosecuted for perjury—Id Hajat v Crown, 23 Cr L J 82 A I R 1922 Lah 133 1922 P W R 6

544. Record of statement —The statements of witnesses examined at the inquest should be recorded verbatim in the report, as the statements may be of great use to the Court in testing the value of evidence subsequently given — In re Pachudajan, 9 M L T 321 12 Cr L J 124

176 (1) When any person dies while in the custody of the police the nearest Magistrate empowered to hold inquests shall, and, in any other case mentioned in Section 174, clauses (a) (b) and (c) of sub-section (1), any Magistrate so empowered may, hold an inquiry into the cause of death either instead of or in addition to the investigation held by the police-officer, and, if he does so, he shall have all the powers in conducting it which he would have in holding an inquiry into an offence. The Magistrate holding such an inquiry shall record the evidence taken by him in connection therewith in any of the manners hereafter prescribed according to the circumstances of the case.

Inquiry by Magistrate into cause of death.

(2) Whenever such Magistrate considers it expedient to make an examination of the dead body of any person who has been already interred in order to discover the cause of his death the Magistrate may cause the body to be disinterred and examined.

545 Jurisdiction of Presidency Magistrate —The Presidency Magistrate is not ousted of his jurisdiction to hold a preliminary inquiry into a charge of murder because the Coroner has held an inquiry into the cause of death and has committed the accused to the High Court under sec 75 of the Coroners Act (IV of 1871)—Q E v Md Rajudin 16 Bom 159 Emp v Jogeshwar 31 Cal 1 Q E v John Paul Ratanlal 540

Power to disinter corpses —A Police officer making an investigation under this section has no power to cause a dead body which has been already interred to be disinterred in order to examine it. Such power is conferred on a Coroner under section 11 of the Coroners Act (IV of 1871) and on a Magistrate holding an inquest under the present section.

546 Revision —Proceedings under this section are now liable to revision by reason of the omission of sub section (3) of section 435 by the Amendment Act of 1923.

But there is nothing in this section which requires that a Magistrate holding an inquiry under this section is bound to make a report or to come to a finding. The inquiry under this section into the cause of a suspicious death is not a judicial proceeding and where he sent a report of the result of his inquiry to his executive superior (the District Magistrate) the High Court could not call for it under sec 435—In re Trivellokhanath 3 Cal 742. Q E v Bayaji Ratanlal 843

PROCEEDINGS IN PROSECUTIONS

CHAPTER XV

OF THE JURISDICTION OF THE CRIMINAL COURTS IN INQUIRIES AND TRIALS

A—Place of Inquiry or Trial

177 Every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and Ordinary place of inquiry and trial tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed

547 General Rule —All crime is local the jurisdiction over the crime belongs to the country where the crime is committed—Macleod v Attorney General L R (1891) A C 458 Crimes in their nature are local, and the jurisdiction of crimes is local—2 Blackstone page 1038 Crime is purely local i.e. depends on the law of the place in which it is committed and not on the nationality of the person who commits it—Sirdar Gurdayal v Rajah of Furidkote (1894) A C 670 Therefore British Indian Courts have no jurisdiction to try for offences committed and completed outside the British territory—Ibrahim v Emp 1894 P R 7 Q E v Ranchhod 2 Bom L R 337 7 Mad 354 Anonymous 6 M H C R App 3 As to the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts over offences committed by subjects of the Crown in places outside British India see sec 188

548. Offence —This chapter deals with the place of inquiry and trial in respect of offences only an application under sec 488 for maintenance is not a complaint of an offence and the provisions of this section are not applicable to determine the jurisdiction of a Court competent to entertain such application—Hildephonsus v Malone 1885 P R 13 1893 P R 3 Contra —Bibi Nur v Shah Walais 1883 P R 9 and 13 All 348, where it was held that neglect to maintain a wife being an offence punishable under this Code under sec 488 the place for its trial must be determined by the provisions of this Chapter But the recent amendment of subsection (9) of sec 488 shows that that section does not contemplate any offence

So also proceedings under Chapter XII are not proceedings in respect of an offence and therefore sec 182 does not apply to a proceeding under sec 145—3 C W N 148 nor does sec 185 apply to determine jurisdiction in respect of such proceeding—Rudra Pratip v Dewan, 12 A L J 390 15 Cr L J 520

Similar remarks may also apply to proceedings under Chapters VIII and X

"Ordinarily" —The word 'ordinarily' indicates that this section is a general one and must be read subject to any special provisions of law which may modify it. The rule laid down in this section has been relaxed or modified by several succeeding sections. Thus this section must be read subject to the special provisions of sec 197 (2) which overrides the general rule contained in this section—4 L B R 265

549 Local jurisdiction —Although this section lays down that every offence must be inquired into and tried by the Court within whose jurisdiction it was committed still if the offence is inquired into or tried by a Magistrate who has no territorial jurisdiction over the place where the offence was committed it would be at most an irregularity which would be cured by sec 531 if such commitment or trial has occasioned no failure of justice—Rayin Kull v Emp 26 Mad 640, Assi Sessions Judge v Ramammal, 36 Mad 387 30 Mad 94 Where a Magistrate being empowered to commit to the sessions but having no territorial jurisdiction over the place in which the offence is alleged to have been committed commits a case to a Sessions Court which has jurisdiction over the place the commitment is valid and cannot be quashed under sec 532 although the objection to such commitment is taken before the commitment—Q E v Abbi Redi, 17 Mad 402 But no Judge or Magistrate can try or pass an order of committal in respect of an offence committed outside the Province altogether. Such a trial or order of committal is illegal and the illegality can not be cured by section 531—Bhagwati v Q E, 3 Pat 417 (422) 26 Cr L J 49 A I R 1925 Pat 187

Commitment to wrong Session —Where a Magistrate commits a case to a Sessions Court other than the one within whose local jurisdiction the offence has been committed, the commitment is merely irregular and would be cured by sec 531 and the High Court will not quash the commitment but will direct the transfer of the case to the Court having jurisdiction—Queen Emp, v Thaku, 8 Bom 312 Q E. v Atmaram 2 Bom L R 394, Q E. v Ram Des, 18 All 350 But the Madras High Court, dissenting from the above cases and following the Privy Council ruling in Ledgerd v Bull, 9 All 191, has laid down that a commitment to a Sessions Court having no territorial jurisdiction over the offence is illegal and must be set aside, and the High Court would not be justified in upholding the commitment and directing the transfer of the case to the proper Sessions Court—Asst Sessions Judge v Ramammal, 36 Mad 387 (391) This is also the view of the Patna High Court in Bhagawatia K E, 3 Pat 417 But where a commitment was made to the High Court Sessions in respect of two offences, one of which was committed within and the other without the original jurisdiction of the High Court held that the High Court could on the grounds of expediency and convenience proceed with the trial, the irregularity being cured by sec 531 Even if the High Court had no jurisdiction on its original side to try the case an order could be made under sec 526 directing the trial to take place at the High Court Sessions And the High Court ordered accordingly—Ganapathi v Rex 42 Mad 791 37 M L J 60 20 Cr L J 484

Several offences—Where two different offences are committed in the course of the same transaction, the case should be tried by a Magistrate who has jurisdiction to try both the offences it would not be a proper course that a Magistrate who has jurisdiction over one of them should try that offence leaving the other to be tried by another Magistrate Such a procedure would be highly inconvenient—2 Weir 144

550 Holding trial outside British India—The mere fact that an offence has been committed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a District Magistrate would not enable him to try that offence at some place outside British India—Q E v Maniklal Ratanlal 376

551 Effect of irregular arrest—The irregularity of an arrest is not a ground for invalidating all proceedings and trials subsequent to the arrest—1899 P R 6 Crown v Gobinda 1911 P R 1 Thus a Magistrate should not acquit an accused merely because the officer who arrested the accused did not belong to the circle in which the arrest was made—26 Mad 124 Contra—7 Bur L R 83 where it has been held that if a person is illegally arrested and brought before a Magistrate the Court is bound to stay further proceedings against the accused

552 Effect of transfer of territory to Native State—Where an offence was committed in a place within British territory but some time after the commitment of the case to the Court of Session and before the commencement of the trial the place in which the offence was committed ceased to be a British territory and became part of a Native State, it was held that this fact did not oust the jurisdiction of the British Court to try the offence—K E v Ram Narsh 9 A L J 51 34 All 118 K E v Ganga, 9 A L J 696 34 All 451 Similarly if pending an appeal from a conviction, the place where the offence had been committed was transferred to a Native State it was held that this transfer of territory did not deprive the Court in which the appeal had been filed of its jurisdiction to hear it Mahabir v K E, 8 A L J 630 33 All 578

and directing the transfer of the case to the proper Sessions Court—Asst Sessions Judge v Ramammal, 36 Mad 387 (391) This is also the view of the Patna High Court in Bhagawatia A E, 3 Pat 417 But where a commitment was made to the High Court Sessions in respect of two offences one of which was committed within and the other without the original jurisdiction of the High Court held that the High Court could on the grounds of expediency and convenience proceed with the trial, the irregularity being cured by sec 531 Even if the High Court had no jurisdiction on its original side to try the case an order could be made under sec 526 directing the trial to take place at the High Court Sessions And the High Court ordered accordingly—Ganapathi v Rex 42 Mad 791 37 M L J 60 20 Cr L J 484

Several offences —Where two different offences are committed in the course of the same transaction the case should be tried by a Magistrate who has jurisdiction to try both the offences it would not be a proper course that a Magistrate who has jurisdiction over one of them should try that offence leaving the other to be tried by another Magistrate Such a procedure would be highly inconvenient—2 Weir 144

550 Holding trial outside British India —The mere fact that an offence has been committed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a District Magistrate would not enable him to try that offence at some place outside British India—Q E v Maniklal Ratanlal 376

551 Effect of irregular arrest —The irregularity of an arrest is not a ground for invalidating all proceedings and trials subsequent to the arrest—1899 P R 6 Crown v Gobinda 1911 P R 1 Thus a Magistrate should not acquit an accused merely because the officer who arrested the accused did not belong to the circle in which the arrest was made—26 Mad 124 Contra—7 Bur L R 83 where it has been held that if a person is illegally arrested and brought before a Magistrate the Court is bound to stay further proceedings against the accused

552 Effect of transfer of territory to Native State —Where an offence was committed in a place within British territory but some time after the commitment of the case to the Court of Session and before the commencement of the trial the place in which the offence was committed ceased to be a British territory and became part of a Native State it was held that this fact did not oust the jurisdiction of the British Court to try the offence—A E v Ram Naresh 9 A L J 51 34 All 118 A E v Ganga 9 A L J 696 34 All 451 Similarly if pending an appeal from a conviction the place where the offence had been committed was transferred to a Native State it was held that this transfer of territory did not deprive the Court in which the appeal had been filed of its jurisdiction to hear it—Mahabir v A E, 8 A L J 630 33 All 578

178 Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 177, Power to order the Local Government may direct that any cases to be tried in different sessions divisions cases or class of cases committed for trial in any district may be tried in any sessions divisions

Provided that such direction is not repugnant to any direction previously issued by the High Court under Section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act or Section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 or under this Code, Section 526

553 Local Government's power in Burma—The Local Government of Burma has no power to transfer a case committed to the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon for trial to the Court of the Commissioner. But it can transfer a case from the District of Rangoon to the Sessions Judge of Pegu—10 Cal 643

179. When a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done, and of any consequence which has ensued such offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done or any such consequence has ensued

Illustrations

(a) A is wounded within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court X, and dies within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Z. The offence of the culpable homicide of A may be inquired into or tried by X or Z.

(b) A is wounded within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court X, and is, during ten days within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Y, and during ten days more within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Z, unable in the local limits of the jurisdiction of either Court Y or Court Z to follow his ordinary pursuits. The offence of causing grievous hurt to A may be inquired into or tried by X, Y or Z.

(c) A is put in fear of injury within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court X, and is thereby induced, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of Court Y, to deliver property to the person who put him in fear. The offence of extortion committed on A may be inquired into or tried either by X or Y.

(d) A is wounded in the Native State of Baroda and dies of his wounds in Poona. The offence of causing A's death may be inquired into and tried in Poona.

554 Scope of Section.—This section applies when the act (or omission) is an offence by reason of anything which has been done and of any consequence which has ensued. But where the act (or omission) is a complete offence irrespective of any consequence which has ensued, this section does not apply and the offence is to be inquired into and tried only by the Court within whose jurisdiction the act was committed (Sec. 177). Thus—

Examples—(a) The offence of falsification of accounts (sec. 477A, I P C) is complete as soon as the accounts are falsified and any consequence resulting from it is immaterial for the offence. Therefore, it is to be tried only by the Court within whose jurisdiction the accounts were falsified and not by any other Court.—Suaminathan v Annamalai, 4 M L T 481, 9 Cr L J 9.

(b) Where a person who was assaulted by the accused in Baroda had his leg completely broken there and then came to British India where he remained for 2 months in the hospital, it was held that the offence of grievous hurt was complete in Baroda by the fracture of the leg, irrespective of any consequence (viz. the injured man lying in hospital) ensuing in British India; therefore the offence could not be tried in British India.—8 Bom L R 513.

(c) Where a dacoity was committed in a Native State and some stolen property was found concealed by the accused in the British territory, it was held that the offence of dacoity was complete in the Native State, irrespective of retaining the stolen property in the British territory and could not be tried in British India.—1 Bom 50.

(d) Where a woman sold in District A her minor girl to a prostitute who took the girl to District B, it was held that the offence of selling a minor girl for the purposes of prostitution was complete in District A, and that the possession of the girl in District B was not a consequence completing the offence. The Magistrate of District B had no jurisdiction to try the offence.—6 Agra 46.

(e) The offence of infringement of copyright is complete as soon as the book infringing the copyright is printed and it does not depend for its completion upon any consequence (e.g. loss of money to the complainant) such as is contemplated by Sec. 179. Therefore the offence is to be inquired into and tried under Sec. 177 at the place where the infringing book was printed—Kalidas v Karam Chand 1916 P R 28 18 Cr L J 353

(f) Where a person consigned some goods from District F to District K and the consignee misappropriated the goods at K it was held that the consignee could be tried in K and not in F because the accused was not charged by reason of any consequence or loss which ensued to the consignor at F but solely by reason of what was alleged to have been done at K—Nirbhai Ram v Kallu Ram 4 O C 376

(g) Where a complaint was made before a Magistrate at Aligarh that a person had dishonestly and fraudulently two days after he became insolvent realised at Calcutta the money due in respect of certain hundies which the complainant purchased it was held that the offence should be inquired into at Calcutta where the offence (sec 415 I P C) was committed and not at Aligarh where the loss ensued to the complainant—5 A L J 333

(h) Where the offence of kidnapping is committed outside British India the subsequent act of conveying the kidnapped person to British India is not such a consequence as is contemplated by this section so as to give jurisdiction to a British Indian Court over the offence committed outside British India—Bhula Santol v Dama Santol 20 C W N 62 17 Cr L J 128 1901 P R 1 Crown v Iochan 7 S I R 17 14 Cr L J 439

(i) Two persons were alleged to have induced another to purchase a barrel at Meerut on the false representation that the barrel contained a certain quantity of spirits. At Agra it was discovered that the quantity was less than what it was represented to contain. It was held that the Agra Court had no jurisdiction because the offence of fraud had been committed at Meerut and that sec 179 did not apply in as much as the discovery of the fraud after the delivery of the article was not a consequence which has ensued within the meaning of the section—Pragdas v Daulatram 13 A L J 1067 16 Cr L J 875

(j) Where a petition under sec 21 of the Income Tax Act (1918) was falsely verified at a place in the Tanjore District and was presented in the Ramnad District held that the offence of false verification was completed in the Tanjore District and the Ramnad Magistrate had no jurisdiction—In re Mohideen 43 M L J 475 45 Mad 839 23 Cr L J 619

555 Criminal misappropriation.—In case of the offence of criminal misappropriation or breach of trust the consequence of wrongful gain or wrongful loss is not an essential part of the crime and a person is not accused of the offence by reason of it therefore the offence is triable where the dishonest use or disposal took place and not where the loss ensued to the complainant—Rambhais v Emp 29 M L J 175 38 Mad 639,

Sessions Judge v Ramasami 38 Mad 779 however where certain jewels were entrusted to a person in a Native State for sale on commission and he converted the jewels to his own use it was held that since the loss of the jewels which was the consequence occurred in British India (where the complainant resided) the Magistrate of the British Indian Court had jurisdiction under this section (See this case cited under sec 188) See also 19 All 111 and 26 C W N 175 where it is held that the offence of criminal breach of trust by an agent can be tried by the Court having jurisdiction in the place where the principal resides This difference of opinion hangs upon the different interpretation put on the word consequence occurring in this section See Note 557 infra, and Note 563 under sec 181

556 Cases where either Court has jurisdiction—Where an act is an offence by reason of any consequence which has ensued the offence is triable either by the Court within whose jurisdiction the act was committed or by the Court within whose jurisdiction the consequence has ensued Thus—

(a) Where a petition presented to a person at Lahore contained defamatory statements against another and was published at Amritsar it was held that the Amritsar Court had jurisdiction to try the offence of defamation because the publication at Amritsar completed the offence and was a consequence by reason of which the accused was charged with the offence of defamation—1885 P R 44

(b) Where A sent goods by Railway from Karachi to Lahore under a false description the Court at Lahore could under this section try A for the offence of cheating as the consequence of A's act viz the loss of freight to the Railway Company was an ingredient of the offence and took place at Lahore the Headquarters of the Railway Company—1900
 P R 7

(c) In fulfilment of a contract the accused consigned several tins of groundnut oil at Salem (Madras) to the complainant at Dhulia (Bombay)
 The tins when opened were found to contain groundnut oil mixed with rock oil The complainant thereupon filed a complaint of cheating in the Magistrate's Court at Dhulia Held that the Dhulia Court had jurisdiction for the deception took place at Dhulia where the complainant became the victim of the deceit in consequence of the accused's act—Emp v Jam

(d) Where an alleged defamatory letter is written and posted in Madras with a view to its being read at Tinnevely the offence of defamation is triable either in Madras or in Tinnevely—Krishnamurti v Parasurama 44 M L J 648 32 M L T 164 24 Cr L J 309

(e) Where the accused residing at Lahore recovered money from a Bank at Bombay on a forged draft of the Amritsar Branch of the Punjab National Bank of Lahore it was held that the Lahore Court had jurisdiction to try the accused for an offence under sec 420 I P C, as the consequence (viz loss to the P N Bank) contemplated by this section ensued at Lahore where the Head Office of the Bank was situated—1908 P W R 18

(f) The offence of cheating may be tried either at the place where the cheating was committed (where the accused resided) or at the place where the complainant resided—Girdhar v Emp 21 A L J 621 24 Cr L J 929

557 Consequence—The consequence mentioned in this Section is the primary consequence and not any secondary consequence of the offence. The primary consequence should be taken into consideration in determining the jurisdiction. Thus where an accused living in Nandyal was appointed agent for the sale of the oil of the complainant living in Madras and when called on to account the accused failed to do so it was held that the offence of criminal breach of trust was triable at Nandyal and not at Madras because the firm's loss at Nandyal was a primary consequence and the loss at Madras the firm's head quarters where the funds were kept is a secondary one which is not sufficient to attract the operation of this section—Krishnamachari v Shaw Wallace & Co 39 Mad 576 The same view is taken in 29 C W N 43 38 Mad 639 44 Cal 912 and Ganeshi Lal v Nand Kishore 10 A L J 45 34 All 487 But in Langridge v Atkins 35 All 29 Shro Shanfar v Mohan 19 A L J 69 Emp v Ramratan 46 Bom 641 32 All 397 1902 P R 2 1901 P R 24 19 All 111 38 Mad 779 Abdul Latif v Abu Md Kasim 26 C W N 175 a wider interpretation has been put on the word consequence which has been taken to include such secondary consequence as loss resulting to the employer by criminal breach of trust or failure to account for moneys misappropriated at the head office of the firm and the Court of the place where such secondary consequence ensues has been held to have jurisdiction over the offence. See also Note 563 under sec 181

Offence in Native State—Consequence in British India—See 38 Mad 779 cited above. See the same case cited under sec 188

Illustrations—The illustrations are not exhaustive and to hold that all the consequences prescribed by the Legislature as conferring jurisdiction are limited to those specified in the illustrations is not justified by the language of the section—1908 P W R 18 The Illustration (d) to this section must be applied with certain restrictions. The offender in that illustration must be taken to be a subject of the British Government and a certificate of the Political Agent must be obtained under sec 188 before he can be tried. If the offender is a subject of the Native State he cannot be tried by the British Courts.

180. When an act is an offence by reason of its relation to any other act which is also an offence or which would be an offence if the doer were capable of committing an offence a charge of the first-mentioned offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction either act was done.

Illustrations

(a) A charge of abetment may be inquired into or tried either by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the abetment was committed or by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offence abetted was committed.

(b) A charge of receiving or retaining stolen goods may be inquired into or tried either by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the goods were stolen, or by any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any of them were at any time dishonestly received or retained.

(c) A charge of wrongfully concealing a person known to have been kidnapped may be inquired into or tried by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the wrongful concealing, or by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the kidnapping took place.

558 Scope of section—Foreign territory—The Code extends only to British territory and the present section assumes the offence therein indicated to have been committed in a local jurisdiction created by the Code. Therefore where a foreign subject in a foreign territory instigated the commission of an offence which was in consequence committed in British territory it was held that the instigation not having taken place in any district created by this Code the instigator was not amenable to the juris-

dition of a British Court—Reg v Pirat 10 B H C R 356 1878 P R 20 When a house breaking took place in a district in British India and a non British subject residing in a Native State was found to be in possession of the stolen property held that that person was not triable by the British Courts—Id Hussain v Crown 2 Lah L J 348 23 Cr L J 560 The operation of this Code cannot be extended beyond the British territory so as to give jurisdiction to a British Court to try a non British subject residing outside British India for the offence of retaining stolen properties although the theft of those properties might have taken place in British India—Moheswari v A C 18 C W N 1178 15 Cr L J 537 9 All 523 Reg v Bechar 4 B H C R 38 If however an Indian British subject is found in the Native State in possession of property stolen in British India he can be tried by a Court in British India under this section but a certificate of the Political Agent under sec 188 would be necessary—Sessions Judge v Sundara 8 M I T 54 11 Cr L J 306

If however the contrary things happen : e if the theft takes place outside British territory and the stolen property is brought within British India the offence of retaining stolen property may be tried in British India although the offence of theft which was committed outside British India cannot be tried here—Q C v Abdul Latif 10 Bom 186 Reg v Lakhyan 1 Bom 50 Emp v Sindhur 6 Cal 307 (Contr—5 Bom 338 and 2 Weir 115 where it has been held that such persons cannot be convicted for retaining stolen property because in order to establish the offence of retaining stolen property it is necessary first to show that the property was stolen according to the law of the forum i e the Penal Code which has no operation in foreign territories and against the provisions of which therefore no offence could have been committed These two decisions are however no longer good law in view of the words whether the transfer has been made or the misappropriation or breach of trust has been committed within or without British India added to Sec 410 I P C by the Penal Code Amendment Act VIII of 1832)

559 Abetment —Where a person sends a letter to another through post inviting him to the commission of an offence he is guilty of the offence of abetment as soon as the letter is received by and the contents known to the addressee and is triable at the place where the letter is received—16 All 389

Although an abetment of an offence might have taken place outside the territorial jurisdiction of a Magistrate yet under this section the abettor can be tried by a Magistrate within whose territorial jurisdiction the offence abetted was committed—In re Chinnannagoud 1 Weir 155

Where the abetment of the offence as well as the offence itself is committed in N (1 place in the province of Bengal) but the abettor has a house

10 J (a place in the province of Behar), the charge of abetment should be inquired into and tried in N and not in J. A committal order in respect of the charge of abetment passed by a Court in Behar is without jurisdiction and must be quashed. If the abetment is committed both in a place inside the province of Behar as well as in a place outside that province, it may be inquired into and tried in a Court of Behar—Bhagwati v K L, 3 Pat 417 (124).

Abetment in British India of offence committed outside British India.—Where a British subject abets in British India an offence committed outside British India he may under the amended section 108A I P C be tried in British India—24 Bom 287. In view of Sec 108A I P C the decision in 19 Bom 105 is no longer good law.

560 Conspiracy.—The offence of an attempt to murder a person in district R in pursuance of a conspiracy entered into in district M can be inquired into and tried in either of the two districts—Gurdit Singh v Crown 1917 P R 24 18 Cr L J 514. But the Calcutta High Court is of opinion that if a conspiracy is entered into in District A and acts are committed in pursuance of that conspiracy in District B the Magistrate of District A can try the conspiracy but cannot try the accused in the same trial for acts committed outside his district. Even the fact that the offences could have been tried jointly under sec 239 if committed within his jurisdiction will not give him jurisdiction to try them—Bissessar v Emp, 28 C W N 975 A I R 1924 Cal 1034.

181. (1) The offence of being a thug, of being a thug and committing murder, of being a thug and dacoity, of dacoity with murder, of having belonged to a gang of dacoits, or of having escaped from custody, may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person charged is.

(2) The offence of criminal misappropriation or of criminal breach of trust may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused person or the offence was committed.

Criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust.

tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such thing was stolen or was possessed by the thief or by any person who received or retained the same knowing or having reason to believe it to be stolen or the possession of stolen property, may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such offence was committed or the property stolen was possessed by the thief or by any person who received or retained the same knowing or having reason to believe it to be stolen

(4) The offence of kidnapping or abduction may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person kidnapped or abducted was kidnapped or abducted or was conveyed or concealed or detained

Change —Sub section (3) has been redrafted by sec 42 of the Crim Pro Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 but the actual change effected by this redrafting is the addition of the words or any offence which includes theft or possession of stolen property. We accept this clause but would enlarge the enumeration of offences to include the possession of stolen property. This will also cover the case of extortion. See the definition in sec 410 I P C. —Report of the Select Committee of 1916

The language of sub section (3) is open to objection. The words such offence' are intended to mean the offence of theft but grammatically these words would mean any offence of possession of stolen property.—Emp v Bhima 24 A L J 148 27 Cr. L J 21 A I R 1926 All 167

561 Scope of section —This section does not apply to the case of an offence committed by a person who is not a British subject outside British territory. This section is intended to regulate the jurisdiction of Courts in British India in respect of offences committed in British India and cannot vary or abrogate the ordinary rule that no foreign subject can be tried in British India for an offence committed outside British India.—Emp v Balteva 28 All 372. This section only applies as between Courts of different local areas whose jurisdiction has been limited under sec 12.—Imp v Tribhuan 5 S L R 266, 1 Mad 171

Thus where a dacoity or theft was committed in a Native State and part of the stolen property was found to have been concealed by the accused in British territory it was held that the offence of dacoity could not be tried by British Indian Courts, although the offence of retaining stolen property could be tried by such Courts, the retaining having taken place in British territory—Reg v Lakhya, 1 Bom 30, Q E v. Abdul Latib, 10 Bom 186, and Emp. v Sunkur, 6 Cal 307 cited under sec 180, see also 1 Mad 171. When a person escaped from lawful custody in a Native State and came into British India, it was held that British Courts had no jurisdiction to try him for an offence under sec 224 I P C, as it was committed out of British India—Ratanlal 870. So also, where a criminal breach of trust was committed in a Native State, a Court in British India had no jurisdiction—Imp v Tribhuan, 5 S L R 266. 13 Cr L J 530. Where the offence of kidnapping was committed out of British India, and the minor was brought into British India, a British Court had no jurisdiction as the offence was complete out of British India even the fact that the person kidnapped was conveyed to British India would not give the British Court jurisdiction because the words 'was conveyed' in this section do not import any separate or distinct offence, where the offence was complete previous to such conveying—Jaima Singh v. Emp, 1901 P R 1, Crown v Koochri, 7 S L R 17, Bhusa Santal v Dama, 20 C W N 62. The complainant sent a sum of money from Burma to the accused, who was his agent in Japan. The accused misappropriated the money whereupon the complainant took criminal proceedings in Rangoon. Held that the offence of criminal misappropriation was complete when the conversion was done with the intent of causing wrongful gain to the offender, and did not depend on the consequence of wrongful loss which had ensued to the complainant. The conversion having taken place in Japan, the Rangoon Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint—Ahmed Ebrahim v Hajee Abdul Ganny, 1 Rang 56.

562. Belonging to a gang of dacoits.—Where a resident of a Native State was arrested in that State and was brought before a Court in British India and charged with the offence of belonging to a gang of dacoits who had committed dacoities within the jurisdiction of that Court it was held that the Magistrate had jurisdiction over the accused as the accused was within his district at the time of the charge—Crown v Goinda, 1911 P. R. 1. 12 Cr L J. 113.

"Is".—The word 'is' at the end of subsection (1) does not mean 'is of his own accord'. The Magistrate has jurisdiction, whether the accused has come within the local limits of his jurisdiction of his own accord or has been brought there by force (i.e., under arrest)—Ibid.

563. Criminal misappropriation etc.—See 4 O C 376, 38 Mad. 639, 44 Cal 912, 35 All 39, 26 C W. N 175, 19 All 111, 39 Mad 576, and 31 All 487 cited under Sec 179. In all these cases, the applicability of non applicability of sec 179 to cases of criminal misappropriation or breach of trust was decided with reference to the meaning of the word 'consequence' occurring in that section. But in some other cases it has been held that since the offence of criminal misappropriation or breach of trust is specially provided for in sec 181, the place of trial of the offence must be determined in accordance with the provisions of this section, without reference to the 'consequence' mentioned in sec 179. See Mahlab Din v Emp 25 Cr L J 410 A I R 1914 Lah 663; Dina Nath v Tuls Ram, 6 Lah L J 471 26 Cr L J 136, Gunananda v Santi Prakash 29 C W N 432. The Allahabad High Court also recently holds that in respect of the offence of criminal breach of trust sec 179 is controlled by sec 181 and the offence can only be inquired into and tried by the Court within whose jurisdiction the offence was committed or the property (the subject of the offence) was received or retained by the accused. Therefore where the complainant residing at Basti appointed the accused as his commission agent in Bombay, and advanced money to him from time to time to purchase and sell goods at Bombay on behalf of the complainant but the accused misappropriated the money including the profits derived from the purchase and sale of goods on behalf of the complainant, held that the Basti Court had no jurisdiction to try the offence of criminal breach of trust, which was triable by the Bombay Court alone—Girdhar v K E, 21 A L J 621 24 Cr L J 929 A I R 1924 All 77. Where the complainant charged the accused under Sec 408 I P C alleging that the complainant had engaged the accused to manage a brunch firm at Rurki that accounts were sent by the accused to Rawalpindi for some time but subsequently discontinued, and that on inspection of accounts it was found that the accused had made false entries in respect of certain items it was held that in as much as the allegation in the complaint referred to specific items in respect of which the accused was charged with having committed the offence of criminal breach of trust at Rurki, the Rawalpindi Court had no jurisdiction to try the case—Crown v. Raghubir, 1915 P R 22. Where the accused is under a liability to render accounts at a particular place and fails to do so by reason of his having committed an offence of criminal breach of trust which is alleged against him, the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction that place is situated may inquire into and try the offence under the provisions of this section—Gunananda v Santi Prakash, 29 C W N 432 : 41 C L J 80 26 Cr L J 725, Ram Sahai v Arishna, A I R 1926 Lah 119 7 Lah L J 586. Where the accused was entrusted with a railway receipt for goods in one district with instructions to take delivery of the goods at their destination in another district and to sell them on complainant's account, and the accused did so sell them and misappropriated the sale-proceeds, it was held that the offence was triable by the Court within the jurisdiction of which the goods were sold and the money was received and misappropriated. It was held further that the property which was the subject of the offence in this case was not the railway receipt but the money received on sale of the goods—Kasi Chetty v Kasi Chetty 10 Bur L T 50 18 Cr L J 645

Sub-section (3) —The offences of theft and the possession of stolen property cannot be tried by a Magistrate if neither the offence of theft was committed nor the property possessed within his jurisdiction even though a conspiracy to commit these offences was entered into in a place within his jurisdiction—Bissessar v Lmp 28 C W N 975

564 Sub section (4)—Scope —This sub section refers only to cases of kidnapping and abduction but it does not apply to offences under Chapter XX of the I P C e.g. detaining a married woman for the purpose of illicit intercourse. Such offence is to be inquired into only in the district where the detention of the woman occurs—Jaswant v Crown 1918 P L R 51 18 Cr L J 438

Kidnapping —Sub section (4) was for the first time added in the Code of 1898. Prior to 1898 it was held that the offence of kidnapping not being a continuing offence could be tried only by the Court within the local limits of which the minor was taken out and not by the Court within whose jurisdiction the minor was confined—Lmp v Surja 1883 A W N 104 Lmp v Prasadi, 1887 A W N 139 nor by the Court within whose jurisdiction such minor was conveyed—Lmp v Budha 1883 A W N 67. But these decisions are no longer good law. See also 18 All 350, 19 All 109 26 All 197 27 Cal 1041 2 C W N 81 where it has been held that the offence of kidnapping is not a continuing offence but is complete as soon as the minor is taken out of the custody of the lawful guardian.

The words kidnapping and abduction do not include an offence of wrongfully confining or keeping in confinement a kidnapped person—Badli v Emperor 25 Cr L J 552 A I R 19 4 All 454 21 A L J 912. A girl was kidnapped in the Budaun district by D and B. These men took the girl to a place in Etah district where they met two other men H and A and the four men then took the girl to Karnal district in Panjab to the house of one Dattu. Held that the offence committed by D and B (viz kidnapping, see 366 I P C) may be tried in Budaun Etah or Karnal the offence committed by H and A (viz keeping in confinement a kidnapped person, see 368 I P C) should be tried in Etah and the offence committed by Dattu (see 368 I P C) should be tried in Karnal —Ibid

A person kidnapped outside British India and conveyed into British territory cannot be tried by British Courts. See 20 C W N 6. 1901 P R 1 and 7 S L R 17 cited under Note 561 above.

182. When it is uncertain in which of several local areas

Place of inquiry or trial where scene of offence is uncertain or not in one district only or where offence is continuing or consists of several acts.

an offence was committed, or where an offence is committed partly in one local area and partly in another, or where an offence is a continuing one, and continues to be committed in more local areas than one, or where it consists of several acts done in different local areas, it may be inquired into or tried by a Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas.

565. Object of section—This section intends to provide for the difficulty which would arise where there is a conflict between the different areas, in order to prevent an accused person from getting off entirely because there may be some doubt as to what particular Magistrate has jurisdiction to try the case—Bichitranand v Bhagbut, 16 Cal 667 Where there is an uncertainty in which of two districts the scene of an alleged offence lies, sec 182 is applicable and the offence may be tried by the Court of either district—Punardeo v Ram Saran, 25 Cal 858 Thus, where the accused who was a travelling agent of a firm, employed to sell goods, sold the goods, and misappropriated some of the money, and it was not possible to say exactly where the various acts of embezzlement took place, it was held that according to the fist para of this section the accused was triable either at the place where the firm was situated or at one of the various districts through which the accused travelled—Mahadeo v. K. L., 32 All 397 7 A L J 319

If a defamatory letter is posted in Madras with a view to its being read in Tinnevely, the offence of defamation is triable either in Madras or in Tinnevely under sec 179 or 182—Krishnamurthi v. Parasurama, 44 M L. J 648: 24 Cr. L. J 309 An offence under section 134 of the Companies Act, 1913 (default in filing balance sheet), even though the Company is situate outside Calcutta, can be tried by the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, because the office of the Registrar of joint stock companies with whom the balance sheet is to be filed is in Calcutta—Debendra v. Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, 45 Cal 486, 490.

566 Local area—The words 'local area' mean a local area to which the Code applies, and not a local area in a foreign country or in a portion of the British Empire to which the Code has no application—Bichitranand v. Bhagbut, 16 Cal 667 Moreover, the expression includes Sessions Division, District or Sub-division, and cannot be restricted to mean the scene of an alleged occurrence only. Therefore this section applies where the place of occurrence is known but it is doubtful to which sessions division the place belongs—Punardeo v Ram Sarn 25 Cal 858

183 An offence committed whilst the offender is in the course of performing a journey or voyage may be inquired into or tried by a Court through or into the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offender or the person against whom or the thing in respect of which the offence was committed passed in the course of that journey or voyage

Offence committed on a journey

567 Object and Scope —The object of this section is to remove doubts and inconveniences as regards the exact locality in which the offences alleged to have occurred in a journey or voyage had been actually committed or completed—Q v Malon 1 M H C R 193

But this section only applies where the offence is committed in British India and not in a foreign territory. The word journey does not include a journey in a foreign territory but is confined in its meaning to a journey within the territories of British India. Where during the course of a journey through foreign territory and British India the carrier to whom certain goods were entrusted committed criminal breach of trust in respect of those goods and there was nothing to show that the offence took place during the journey in British India the offence could not be tried by any Court in British India—Nadar v Emp 4 Cr L J 579 (Lah)

568 Offence committed in a journey —Under this section if a person is accused before a Court of an offence committed during a journey or voyage he may be tried by that Court if any part of that journey or voyage during which the offence was committed is within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction—Q v Malon 1 M H C R 193. And the Courts competent to try the case of an offender in respect of an offence committed in a journey are the Courts through or into the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offender in the course of the journey passed at the time the offence was committed—Aminulla v P M Guha 1 C L J

334. Thus if a theft is committed from a running train the offence may be said to have been committed during a journey, and it can be inquired into and tried by any Court having jurisdiction over any part of the country through which the train passed during the course of its journey, no matter in whose jurisdiction the offence was committed—Lal aris v Emp 24 Cr L J 253 (Lah). Where the offence is committed in the course of a railway journey the accused can be tried at the place of destination though the offence was actually committed outside the jurisdiction of that Court—Emp v Moulabux 25 Cr L J 433 1 I R 195

But this section is applicable only when the journey or voyage is continuous and uninterrupted. Therefore where an offence was alleged to have been committed by the accused in the course of a journey from Bombay to Howrah but in fact took place between Bombay and Allahabad at which place both the complainant and the accused broke the journey and then proceeded separately by different trains to Howrah it was held that the journey from Bombay to Howrah not being continuous, the Magistrate at Howrah had no jurisdiction to try the offence—Q v Piran 21 W R 66. Where a guard of a train going from Coimbatore to Madras was found drunk and detained at Arkonam on the way but he broke away got into train and arrived at Madras it was held that the journey must be deemed to have been broken at Arkonam and the offence (of being drunk under sec 27 of the Railways Act) could not be tried at Madras—Q v Malony 1 M H C R 193.

But any short stoppage in the course of a journey does not break the journey. Thus where some articles were missed from a boat during a halt at S in the course of a journey to C it was held that the journey would not be deemed to have been broken by the halt at S and that the offence of theft could be tried at C—Q v Abdul Ali 25 W R 45.

569 Voyage on High Seas—This section applies only to the trial of offences committed in British India. The words journey or voyage do not include a voyage on the High Seas or in a foreign territory but are confined only to a voyage or journey within the territories of British India—Bapu Dall v Q 5 Mad 3.

But in Q E v Ismael Ratanlal 181 where the accused and the complainant sailed from Bombay to Honawar and during the voyage the accused threw a box of the complainant into the sea it was held that the Magistrate at Honawar through whose jurisdiction the accused passed during the voyage had jurisdiction to try the offence of mischief (although it was committed on the High Seas about 9 miles off from the coast).

tion arises as to which of two or more Courts subordinate to the same

High Court ought to inquire into or try any offence, it shall be decided by that High Court

(2) Where two or more Courts not subordinate to the same High Court have taken cognizance of the same offence, the High Court within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction the proceedings were first commenced may direct the trial of such offender to be held in any Court subordinate to it, and if it so decides, all other proceedings against such person in respect of such offence shall be discontinued. If such High Court, upon the matter having been brought to its notice does not so decide, any other High Court within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction such proceedings are pending may give a like direction and upon it so doing all other such proceedings shall be discontinued

Change —This section has been redrafted by the Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 below.

570 Sub section (1)—Nature of the doubt —The decision of the High Court can be sought not only where the doubt arises as to whether one Court or another has jurisdiction but also where the doubt is on the point whether the choice between two Courts both of which have jurisdiction to try the offence should be decided on the ground of general convenience—Charu Chandra v Emp 44 Cal 595 F B (overruling Rajani Benode v All India Banking Co 41 Cal 305) Emp v Chaichal 5 L B R 17 9 Cr L J 581

Again the doubt must be as to the jurisdiction of the Court by which an offence is to be inquired into or tried and not as to whether a particular Magistrate is competent to try or commit the accused for trial—Emp v Clegg 1887 P R 13 3 All 751 Where no doubt exists as to the jurisdiction of the Court this section does not apply—Gurdit Singh v Crown 1917 P R 24 18 Cr L J 514 Girdhar v K E 21 A L J 621 24 Cr L J 99

571 Sub section (2)—Power of High Court to transfer case from Court outside jurisdiction —Where the nominee of a policy holder resident within the District of Chittagong brought a charge of cheating in the Chittagong Magistrate's Court against the Insurance Company having its head office at Gujranwalla and a branch office at Chittagong and the Insurance Company also brought a charge of cheating against the nominee in the Gujranwalla Magistrate's Court both charges relating to the payment of the amount secured on the policy it was held that the Calcutta High Court could properly make an order under sec 185 to the effect that the offence should be inquired into and tried at Chittagong and transfer the case from the Court at Gujranwalla to that of Chittagong—Hiran Kumar v Mangal Sen 17 C W 761 24 Cr L J 308 In another Calcutta case also it was held that this section was comprehensive enough to be applicable to a case instituted in a Court beyond the local limits of the Appellate Criminal Jurisdiction of the High Court where the offender actually was—Charu Chandra v Emp 44 Cal 595 F B) 21 C W N 370 Contra—The Madras High Court however was of opinion that the High Court had no power to direct the transfer of a case pending before a Magistrate not subject to its appellate jurisdiction—Mahomed Ghouse v Nathu 40 Mad 835 18 Cr L J 148 5 L W 319

This subsection has been enacted to remove this conflict of opinion. By adopting the Madras view it practically disallows the High Court to transfer a case from a Court outside its jurisdiction and lays down a new procedure in case of such contingency. In view of the conflicting decisions in the Indian Law Reports 44 Cal 595 and Indian Law Reports 40 Mad 835 it is proposed to make it clear that one High Court has no power whether by implication or otherwise to transfer a case to itself from another High Court or vice versa or to decide which of two other

High Courts should try a particular case — Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921)

By adopting the simple procedure laid down in this subsection, the High Court will be relieved of the cumbrous procedure of a reference to the Governor General for an order under sec. 527.

186 (1) When a Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate, a Subdivisional Magistrate or if he is specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government, a Magistrate of the first class sees reason to believe that any person within the local limits of his jurisdiction has committed without such limits (whether within or without British India) an offence which cannot under the provisions of Sections 177 to 184 (both inclusive) or any other law for the time being in force be inquired into or tried within such local limits, but is under some law for the time being in force triable in British India, such Magistrate may inquire into the offence as if it had been committed within such local limits and compel such person in manner hereinafter provided to appear before him and send such person to the Magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into or try such offence or if such offence is bailable take a bond with or without surety for his appearance before such Magistrate.

(2) When there are more Magistrates than one having jurisdiction and the Magistrate acting under this section is not satisfied as to the Magistrate to or before whom such person should be sent or bound to appear, the case shall be reported for the orders of the High Court.

Empowered —If a Magistrate who is not empowered under this section finds that he has no jurisdiction under this Chapter to conduct the jurisdiction—Q. I. v. Ramji Bhanlal 831. But if a Magistrate not empowered under this section acts in good faith his proceedings will not be set aside for want of jurisdiction, the defect being cured by sec. 529.

522 Power of High Court —The High Court under sec. 29 of the Letters Patent can direct a Magistrate to make a preliminary inquiry and to commit for trial to the Sessions a case falling within this section. Where the circumstances of a case fall exactly within the terms of this section, the procedure must be governed by such special provision and the High Court will not interfere except in extremely exceptional cases—

2 Weir 146

573 Issue of warrant from outside jurisdiction —It is not necessary that the Magistrate issuing the warrant should be present within the local limits of his jurisdiction at the time of issuing it. Where a Magistrate of Ahmedabad District issued from a place in Kathiawar a warrant for the apprehension of a person who was in Ahmedabad for an offence committed in Kathiawar it was held that the issuing of the warrant from Kathiawar by the Magistrate without being present in the Ahmedabad District in which he had jurisdiction was not beyond his competency—1 Bom 340

187. (1) If the person has been arrested under a warrant issued under Section 186 by a Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate such Magistrate shall send the person arrested to the District or Sub divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate, unless the Magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into or try such offence issues his warrant for the arrest of such person in which case the person arrested shall be delivered to the police officer executing such warrant or shall be sent to the Magistrate by whom such warrant was issued

(2) If the offence which the person arrested is alleged or suspected to have committed is one which may be inquired into or tried by any Criminal Court in the same district other than that of the Magistrate acting under Section 186 such Magistrate shall send such person to such Court

Send the person to the District Magistrate —Where a British Indian subject was arrested in a British district by a first class Magistrate for an offence committed in a Native State and the Political Agent's certificate (required by sec 188) was obtained it was unnecessary to send the accused to the District Magistrate under this section and the First Class Magistrate was competent to hold the preliminary inquiry himself—
Reg v Kahandas Ratanlal 97

188 When a Native Indian subject of Her Majesty commits an offence at any place without and beyond the limits of British India or

Liability of British subjects for offences committed out of British India

when any British subject commits an offence in the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India, or when a servant of the Queen (whether a British subject or not) commits an offence in the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India, he may be dealt with in respect of such offence as if it had been committed at any place within British India at which he may be found

Provided that notwithstanding anything in any of the preceding sections of this chapter, no charge as to any Political Agents to certify fitness of inquiry into charge such offence shall be inquired into in British India unless the Political Agent, if there is one, for the territory in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, certifies that, in his opinion, the charge ought to be inquired into in British India, and where there is no Political Agent, the sanction of the Local Government shall be required

Provided, also that any proceedings taken against any person under this section, which would be a bar to subsequent proceedings against such person for the same offence if such offence had been committed in British India, shall be a bar to further proceedings against him under the Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, 1879 in respect of the same offence in any territory beyond the limits of British India

Change —The italicised words in the proviso have been added by sec 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

575 This section controls the preceding sections —Sections 177 to 184 are controlled by the provisions of sec 188 so that if the offence specified in those sections (177—184) happen to be committed outside British India, those sections would cease to apply, and the special provision of Sec 188 would come in. Thus to give concrete illustrations, where the offence of criminal breach of trust was committed in a Native State by a British subject, then according to sec 181, independently of sec 188, such offence could not have been tried by a British Court. But as Secs 177—184 are controlled by Sec 188 the latter section would apply, and would give jurisdiction to a British Court to try the offence, but the certificate of a Political Agent would be absolutely necessary.—End ..

Tribhūn 5 S L R 266 13 Cr L J 530 So also where a person was kidnapped in a Native State and conveyed to British territory Sec 181 would not apply but the case would fall under Sec 188 and a certificate of the Political Agent would be a preliminary requisite of the trial of the offence by a British Court—Crown v Koochri, 7 S L R 17, Narain v Emperor 41 All 452 17 A L J 450 20 Cr L J 276 Where a British Indian subject is found in a Native State in possession of stolen articles he can be tried in British India for an offence under sec 411 I P C but the certificate of the Political Agent would be necessary—Session Judge v Sundara 8 M I T 54 11 Cr L J 306

But in a Madras case where the complainant in a place in British India entrusted certain jewels to the accused, a Native Indian subject of His Majesty, for sale on commission and the latter pledged the jewels in a Native State and converted them to his use, it was held that the loss of the jewels which was the consequence occurred to the complainant in British India and this was sufficient under sec 179 to give jurisdiction to the British Indian Court to try the offence that secs 179—184 should not be read subject to sec 188 and that no certificate of the Political Agent was necessary—Assistant Sessions Judge v Ramaswami 38 Mad 779 26 M L T 235 15 Cr L J 207 This view of the law is totally untenable and the words 'notwithstanding anything Chapter ' have now been added in the proviso to make it clear that sec 188 controls the preceding sections of this chapter The Select Committee observe — Certain decisions of the Madras High Court seem to make it doubtful whether section 188 is subject to the provisions of sections 179—184 and we think it is desirable to clear this up We are not satisfied that this was the intention of section 188 and in our opinion it is safer when a man is tried in British India in respect of an offence committed in a Native State to require the Political Agent's certificate in every case The amendment which we propose will make this clear — Report of the Select Committee of 1916

576 Illegal arrest —Sec notes under sec 177 A trial under this section will not be vitiated by reason of the fact that the accused has been brought into British India from a foreign territory under an illegal arrest — Emp v Vinayak Damodar Savarkar 35 Bom 225 13 Bom L R 296

577 Native Indian Subject —This expression means only a Native Indian subject de jure and not de facto a person who is not a Native Indian subject de jure but who owns some land in British territory and occasionally resides in British India does not thereby become an Indian subject, amenable to the jurisdiction of a British Indian Court for an offence committed by him in a foreign territory—Fakir v Emp, 1885 P R 1 on appeal from 1883 P R 22

Foreigners —This section does not apply to an offence committed by a foreigner outside British territory though he may subsequently be found in British India—Q E v Abdul Latif 10 Bom 186 British Indian Courts have no jurisdiction to try a foreigner for offences committed and completed outside the British territory—Ibrahim v Empress 1891 P R 7 No foreign subject can be tried in British India for an offence committed outside British India—Emp v Ballewa 8 All 37 Q E v Ranchhod 2 Bom L R 337 Falir v Emp 1883 P R 22 Rodiv Empress 1889 P R 30 Therefore where the subject of a Native State committed theft in that State and was subsequently found in British India in possession of the stolen property the British Indian Court had no jurisdiction to try him for the offence of theft (but had jurisdiction to try him for retaining stolen property, under sec 411 I P C)—Emp v Ballewa 8 All 37 Q E v Abdul Latif 10 Bom 186

578 Offence.—The word offence in this section means an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. Thus the act of giving false evidence before a foreign Court where the oath is administered not under the provisions of law in force in British India but under the law of that State in relation to proceedings before the Court is not punishable under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code and cannot be taken cognizance of by Magistrates of British Indian Courts. So also the offence of lodging a false complaint in a foreign Court is not punishable under the Indian Penal Code because it cannot be said that a false information was given to a public servant as defined by the Indian Penal Code. Similarly the act of instituting criminal proceedings and making false charges before a foreign Court does not constitute an offence under Sec 212 of the Indian Penal Code because the criminal proceedings and false charges contemplated by that section mean proceedings and charges in British India where the Indian Penal Code is in force. Therefore offences committed in relation to Courts and authorities outside British India do not constitute offences under the Indian Penal Code and cannot be tried by any Court in British India and a certificate of the Political Agent is out of the question—In re Ramlal 47 Bom 907 5 Bom L R 77 5 Cr I J 333

'May be found'.—The word find must be taken to mean not where a person is discovered but where he is actually present whether he comes of his own accord or is brought under arrest—In p v Maganlal 6 Bom 62

579 Scope of proviso.—This proviso is of universal application and is not restricted to Native States only. If the offence is committed in a Native State the certificate of the Political Agent is necessary. If the Native State has no Political Agent the sanction of the Local Government is required. And if the offence is committed in a place other than

State e g Spain the sanction of the Local Government is likewise necessary—Imp v Chelliram 6 S L R 260

The words or where there is no Political Agent the sanction of the Local Government shall be required have been added to the Code in 1898 Under the previous Codes when the offence was committed in a territory in which there was no Political Agent no certificate (or sanction) was necessary as for instance in Goa (13 Bom 447) or Siam (Ratanlal 773) or Cyprus (2 All 218)

580 Offences on High Seas —Section 188 does not apply to offences committed on the High Seas The proviso to this section refers to offences committed in a territory and not to offences committed on the High Seas Therefore an offence committed by a Native Indian subject on the sea at a distance of five or six miles from the coast can be tried by a Magistrate of British India without the sanction of the Local Government—Emp v Manuel Philip 41 Bom 667 Po Thaug v King Emp 5 L B R 221 12 Cr I J 198 The power to try offences committed on the High seas is conferred on Indian Courts by Stat 23 and 24 Vic C 88 (within three miles from the Coast of British India) and Stat 30 and 31 Vic C 124 section 11 (beyond the three miles limit) See Reg v Kastya Rama 8 B H C R 63 Q F v Sh Abdul Rahaman 14 Bom 227

581 Certificate of a Political Agent —The certificate of the Political Agent is the preliminary requisite for the institution of criminal proceedings in a Court of British India for an offence committed outside British India Want of certificate will invalidate all subsequent proceedings—Emp v Kalchiran 24 All 256 Q E v Ram Sundar 19 All 109 Narain v Emp 41 All 452 Emp v Chan 1884 A W N 85 Q E v Bak 1 24 Bom 287 Sirdar v Jethalhai 8 Bom L R 513 Q E v Kathaperumal 13 Mad 423 Bapu v Q 5 Mad 23 Sessions Judge, In re 2 Weir 148 The want of a certificate is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by section 532 by a subsequent production of the certificate—Q E v Kathaperumal 13 Mad 423 Even where the Magistrate was himself the Political Agent the defect would not be cured by any subsequent production of the certificate signed by him—Q E v Kathaperumal 13 Mad 423 Bapu Dald v Q 5 Mad 23 Q E v Ram Sundar 19 All 109

An agreement between a Native State and the authorities of a British Indian district conceding to the British Indian Courts the right to arrest and try British Indian subjects found gambling in the Native State and vice versa cannot take the place of the certificate or sanction required by this section—Nandu v Emp 42 All 89

Where a commitment was made without the certificate the fact that the certificate existed at the date of the commitment (i e it had been signed by the Political Agent before the date of commitment but had not come into the hands of the Magistrate till after commitment) will not cure the defect—Emp v Kalicharan 24 All 256 In certain Punjab cases, however, it has been held that the want of a certificate is not a fatal defect, but a mere irregularity cured by section 537, if no objection is taken at the trial and no prejudice to the accused has been caused in the defence—Shamir Khan v Emp, 1888 P R 35, Roda v Emp 1889 P R 30 Fateh Din v Emperor 1902 P R 4 (F B) Where however the defect was observed and objected to by the Sessions Judge the commitment should be quashed—Q E v Mastana 1899 P R 11 Ram Charan v Crown 5 Lah 416 (420) A I R 1925 Lah 185

The proviso lays down that no charge shall be inquired into in British India unless the Political Agent etc and therefore there is nothing illegal in obtaining the certificate or sanction after the complaint has been filed and the inquiry has begun or been completed as far as the framing of the charge—12 Bom L R 667 In re Ram Bharathi 47 Bom 907 (at p 99r) Alibhoy v Emp 25 Cr L J 620 (Sind) So also where the certificate was received after the examination of some prosecution witnesses but before the commitment of the case to the Sessions it was held that the commitment was good and the irregularity if any was cured by sec 537—Emp v Mahamad Bakh 8 Bom L R 307 4 Cr L J 49

Magistrate not confined to the charges in the certificate —The Magistrate is not restricted to the charge mentioned in the certificate The certificate granted by the Political Agent in respect of an offence will cover every charge which the facts declared in the certificate will suffice to sustain—Krishna Nath v Emp 33 All 514 An order of committal on a charge which is different from that mentioned in the certificate but based upon the same set of facts will be perfectly valid—In re Sessions Judge 8 M I F 703 11 Cr I J 531

190. (1) Except as hereinafter provided, any Presidency Magistrate District Magistrate or Sub-Cognizance of offence by Magistrate divisional Magistrate, and any other Magistrate specially empowered in this behalf, may take cognizance of any offence—

(a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence ;

— (b) upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer ;

(c) upon information received from any person other than a police-officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed

(2) The Local Government, or the District Magistrate subject to the general or special orders of the Local Government, may empower any Magistrate to take cognizance under sub-section (1), clause (a) or clause (b), of offences for which he may try or commit for trial

(3) The Local Government may empower any Magistrate of the first or second class to take cognizance under sub-section (1), clause (c), of offences for which he may try or commit for trial.

582 Change —The words in clause (b) have been substituted for the words upon a police report of such facts by section 45 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The object of this amendment is to make it clear that the word 'police report' formerly used in this clause was not used in a technical sense as meaning the report of the police in cognizable cases only but was used to cover any report made by a police officer, i.e., a report in a cognizable as well as a non cognizable case. See the Report of the Select Committee of 1916. In H. E. v. Sada, 26 Bom. 150, Bhairab v. Emp., 46 Cal 807, In re Chidambaram, 32 Mad 3, Ram Lal v. Emp. 1 P. L. T. 73, Harihar v. K. E., 23 C. W. N. 481, 26 C. W. N. 181, Emp. v. Ghulam Husain, 6 Lah. L. J. 606, and 1 L. J.

R 18 it was wrongly held that the term police report in this clause meant a report in a cognizable case only and since a police officer had no power to make a report in a non cognizable case a police report in such a case was to be treated as a complaint under clause (a) and the procedure of sec 200 would then have to be followed by the Magistrate taking cognizance of the case. The present amendment lays down that the report of a police officer in a non cognizable case is a report under clause (b) all the same and not a complaint under clause (a) and the Magistrate will not have to follow the procedure of Chapter XVI. See Bh Lazarz v Emp 28 C W N 490 26 Cr L J 68.

Moreover before the present amendment the words [] were used in a technical sense to mean a police report under sec 173 or 173 : c a report made after investigation and not an information sent by the Police to the Magistrate before making any investigation—Abdur Khan v Emp 5 S L R 1 12 Cr L J 92 Emp v Khushaldas C I R 82 13 Cr L J 752 In re Nagendra Nath 51 Cal 492 (413) Emp v Sada 26 Bom 150 (157). Under the present amendment the words have been changed altogether and replaced by the words "report made by any police officer" which would certainly be a report or information given before investigation. Even before the present amendment it was held in a Sind case that the Police report referred to in this section was not confined to a report under sec 173 but was wide enough to cover reports under other sections of the Chapter (e.g. reports under secs 157 and 168) nor was it confined to reports under sec 173 alone—Mehrab v Crown 17 S I R 150 (dissenting from 5 S I R 1).

583 Magistrates empowered.—The power of Magistrate to take cognizance of a case under this section is not affected by sec 22 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873)—Q E v Mahomed Ismail 355.

When a Magistrate who has begun a case is succeeded by another the latter has power to issue process for the arrest of an accused even if the predecessor had not issued such process before commencing the trial—Q E v Gorinda Ratanlal 652. See section 55.

Under this section a third class Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence under clauses (a) and (b) only : c upon a complaint or report—K E v Sada 26 Bom 150.

The District Magistrate of the Civil and Military District has jurisdiction to take cognizance of and try offences committed by European British subjects in accordance with the provisions of this Code—re Laurance 34 Mad 346 (F B).

If a Magistrate not empowered to take cognizance of an offence does so under a bona fide mistake his proceedings will not be merely on the ground of his not being empowered—Sec 529 (e) But proceedings under clause (c) of a Magistrate not empowered to take cognizance under that clause are void—Sec 530 (k)

A Magistrate duly empowered under this section to take cognizance of an offence cannot refuse to take cognizance on the ground that gravity of the offence requires severer punishment than he can inflict
Q E v Gema Ratanlal 375

584 Offence —A Magistrate authorised under this section to take cognizance of an offence upon complaint can take cognizance of an offence under sec 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act even in the absence of a special authorisation in that behalf because the very definition of the word 'offence' in section 4 clause (o) includes any act in respect of which a complaint may be made under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act—E v Vishwanath 44 Bom 42

585 Taking cognizance —The expression to take cognizance has not been defined in the Code and it is difficult to ascertain at what precise stage of the case cognizance is said to be taken When a Magistrate in charge on receipt of a police report, makes over the case to another Magistrate for inquiry and the latter after taking evidence summons the accused it is the latter Magistrate and not the former who is said to have taken cognizance of the offence—17 C W N 795 A Magistrate cannot be said to have taken cognizance of a case under section 107 unless he issues notice to the person charged to show cause why he should not be proceeded against under that section Therefore where the Police referred the matter to the District Magistrate who ordered the case to be transferred to the file of the Headquarters Deputy Magistrate who then issued notice to the accused held that it was the latter Magistrate and not the District Magistrate who took cognizance of the case —Konda Reddy King Emp 41 Mad 246 (249)

Taking cognizance does not involve any formal action or indeed act of any kind but occurs as soon as a Magistrate applies his mind to a suspected commission of an offence Where a police report of a case was submitted to the Subdivisional Officer on the 24th April 1909 and the case was afterwards withdrawn by the District Magistrate to his own file on the 20th January 1910 held that the District Magistrate took cognizance of the case on the 20th January 1910—Sourindra v Emp 37 Cal 412

A Magistrate is not debarred from taking cognizance of an offence simply because another Magistrate has already taken cognizance of the same and is in seisin of the case But since the accused person cannot be tried twice for the same offence the proper course is for the one Magistrate to transfer his case to the other, and thus a multiplicity of trials can be avoided—Hari Satya v Emperor 50 Cal 482

Magistrate cannot proceed without taking cognizance.—On a complaint of a cognizable offence the police sent up for trial only some of the persons against whom a complaint was made After their conviction by a Deputy Magistrate the Deputy Commissioner while inspecting the police outpost made a note that the remaining accused should be sent up The remaining accused were thereupon sent up to the Deputy Magistrate It was held that nothing was made over to the Deputy Magistrate at first except the case of some of the accused who were tried and convicted and that the proceedings taken against the remaining accused without any one formally taking cognizance of the case were irregularly instituted and should be set aside—Jharu v Sukh Deo 3 C L J 87

586 Clause (a) —Cognizance upon complaint —For complaint see Sec 4 (h) and notes thereunder

Complaint of facts which constitute offence —Where a complaint presented to the Magistrate contains the offences with which the accused is charged the fact that it was defective in not stating all the facts necessary to constitute the offence charged is immaterial—Sardar Dyal Singh v Q E 1891 P R 8

Who can make a complaint —A complaint of an offence may be made by any person acquainted with the facts of the case it need not necessarily be made by the aggrieved party except in those cases (e g under secs 198 199) where it is so restricted by the Code—Fareed Ali v Hanuman 18 All 465 Jure Ganesh Varain 13 Bom 600 Dedar Bux v Shyamapada, 41 Cal 1013 14 Cr L J 409 (Oudh)

The fact that the complainant is a servant of the Magistrate does not deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction though in such a case it would be expedient to refer the complainant to another Magistrate—9 Bom 172. See notes under secs 526 and 556

It is not necessary that the person lodging the complaint must have personal knowledge of the facts constituting the offence—Sukumar v Mofizuddin 25 C W N 357 Suresh v Emp 1 P L T 351 21 Cr L J 346 Imp v Shevak Ram 7 S L R 77 15 Cr L J 369

Magistrate bound to take cognizance upon complaint —It cannot be held that the words may take cognizance of an offence mean a

Magistrate is not bound to take cognizance of an offence on receiving a complaint of facts constituting an offence—Ram Sarup v K E 1 O C 127 The use of the term may offence does not make it optional with a Magistrate to hear a complaint but refers to the action of the Magistrate in taking cognizance of the offence in either of the specified courses in which the facts constituting the offence may be brought to his notice He is bound to examine the complainant and can then either issue summons to the accused or order an inquiry under sec 202 or dismiss the complaint under Sec 203—13 Cal 334 He is bound when the circumstances giving him jurisdiction exist to receive the complaint and deal with it according to law—17 Bom 161 and has no option to refer it to the police under sec 156 (3) without taking cognizance of it—In re Arula 10 M L T 120 1. Cr L J 463 When a complaint is made to a Magistrate of a petty offence ordinarily within the cognizance of heads of villages the Magistrate is bound to take cognizance of it to proceed under sec 200 and to dispose of the complaint according to law The mere fact that the complaint is also cognizable by the head of the village does not entitle the Magistrate to decline to exercise jurisdiction and to direct the complainant to seek redress from the head of the village—7 M H C R App 31

Instances where Magistrate acts under Cl (a) and not Cl (c)—Where a complaint is made before a Magistrate he takes cognizance of the case under clause (a) and not under clause (c), even though he may record on the complaint that he acts under clause (c)—Mesidi v Rangoon Municipal Committee 4 L B R 300 Emp v Rashid 9 Bom L R 212 5 Cr L J 202 Girdhari Lal v Emp 1911 P R 11 Jitna Lal v King Emp 2 P L J 657

Where a complainant charged certain persons with committing a certain offence and the examination of the complainant revealed an offence different from that mentioned in the complaint or revealed an additional offence the Magistrate was competent to take cognizance of the latter offence and in taking cognizance thereof he acted under clause (a) and not under clause (c) so that sec 191 did not apply—Jagat Chandra v Q E, 26 Cal 786 Abdul Rahman v K E 4 Bur L J 213 A I R 1906 Rang 53

Similarly where the complainant charged several persons with having committed an offence but the Magistrate after examination of the complainant found out that other persons not mentioned in the complaint were concerned in the offence he was competent to take cognizance in respect of the latter persons also and in so doing he acted under clause (a) and not under clause (c) so that sec 191 was not applicable to the case—Jagat Chandra v Q E 26 Cal 786 1904 P R 32 U B R (1897—1901) 56 Emp v Imankhan, 14 Bom L R 141, Dedar Bux v Shja

587 Clause (b)—Police Report —The 'police report' mentioned in this section is not limited to a report mentioned in Chap XIV of the Code. Where on an information received by post, a Magistrate sent the case to the police for inquiry and report and on the report thus received took cognizance of the case it was held that it must be presumed that the action taken by him was based on the police report—Sarfraz Khan v King Emp, 11 A L J 331

A police report in a non cognizable case falls within this clause, and there is no authority in the Code for examining a police officer submitting a police report under this section, as if he were a complainant—1914 U. B R 19 Sh Abdul Ali v Emp, 1 P L T. 446 See Note above under heading 'Change'

A report submitted by a Police officer under sec 24 of the Police Act falls under this clause—1 P L T. 446

A Police challan is a police report of facts constituting an offence under clause (b) and a Magistrate can take cognizance upon it—Emp v. Sundar, 1901 P R 8, Emp v Chet Singh, 1900 P R 22 But a mere suggestion by the police officer is not a police report, and where a Magistrate issued summons to the accused on the suggestion of a police officer that the accused injured the crops of the people of the village, it was held that the Magistrate acted illegally, as none of the conditions required by this section had been fulfilled—Samun v Emp, 1894 P R 24

The police report must state the facts which constitute the offence. That is, the concrete facts which constitute the alleged offence must be specifically stated before the Magistrate. Where no facts were stated, the mere assertions made by the police that certain offences had been committed, could not be regarded as compliance with the letter or the spirit of the law—In re Nagendra Nath, 51 Cal 402 (414) A I R 1924 Cal 476

So also, a Magistrate cannot take cognizance of an offence on the mere information of a police officer who has no knowledge of the facts and whom it is impracticable to examine—1 L B R 18

A prosecution is not legally instituted under section 190 (b) when the police report is defective and does not fulfil all the requirements of sec. 173 (e g when it does not set forth the nature of the information) and the first information report under sec 154 is equally defective in this respect—Lee v Adhikari, 37 Cal 49 In Feroza v Amirudin, 16 C W N. 1049 it has been remarked that if the police report be defective it is open to the Magistrate to treat it as a complaint, and in that case it will be necessary for him to call upon the Police officer to appear and substantiate that complaint upon oath.

Magistrate not bound to take cognizance upon police report—A Magistrate is entitled to refuse to initiate proceedings on the report of the Police in the absence of a complaint—Bhiku v K E 1 A L J 609 He has a discretion either to take cognizance of the offence or to proceed under sec 203 or to take no further steps—2 Weir 119

Instances where Magistrate acts under Clause (b) and not under Clause (c)—Where L was charged by the police before the Magistrate and the Magistrate after examining the investigating officer found that another person S should be joined as an accused person and issued process against him it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance of S's offence under clause (b) and not under clause (c) and was not bound to act under sec 191—Sarna v Emp 9 N L R 65 The principle is that when a Magistrate takes cognizance under clause (b) on a police report he takes cognizance of the offence and not merely of the particular person charged in the report as the offender. He can therefore issue process against other persons also who appear to him on the basis of the report and other materials placed before him when he has taken cognizance of the case to be concerned in the commission of the offence. When he does so it is not a case of taking cognizance against such persons under clause (c) of this section—Mehrab v Crown 17 S L R 150 (F B) overruling 5 S L R 1 Similarly where the Magistrate issued warrants against persons not named in the complaint or in the first information but named in a report subsequently made by the police after investigation it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance of the case under clause (b) and not under clause (c) of this section—8 C W N 864 Where a Magistrate while acquitting a certain person sent up by the Police stated that another person had in his opinion committed the offence and that the Police should take action against that person and that person was accordingly sent up and convicted it was held that the Magistrate acted under clause (b) and not clause (c) and sec 191 was not applicable—Hakim Ali v A T 4 L D R 137 7 Cr L J 414 Where an accused person charged by the Police was convicted and the case came up in appeal before a Subdivisional Magistrate the latter could try the offender himself under sec 423 (1) (b) if the offence was one within his ordinary jurisdiction and in so doing the Sub-divisional Magistrate took cognizance of the case not under clause (c) but under clause (b), as he had before him the police charge sheets stating all the facts—Emperor v Manikka 30 Mad 278 Where after the close of a trial the Magistrate ordered the police to send up a charge sheet in respect of a witness for the prosecution which the Police did and then the Magistrate tried that person and convicted him it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance of the case under clause (b) and not under clause (c), and section 191 did not therefore apply to the case—Emperor v Gundoo 23 Bom L R 842 22 Cr L J 603

588. Clause (c).—This clause applies only to cases where the private individual who is injured or aggrieved or some one on his part does not come forward to make a formal complaint. It is a provision of law for enabling a public official to take care that justice may be vindicated notwithstanding that the persons individually aggrieved are unwilling or unable to prosecute—13 W R. 27.

Where upon the Sub Registrar refusing to register a deed, the petitioner appealed to the District Registrar (who was also the District Magistrate) under the provisions of the Registration Act, and the District Registrar finding that the document was a forgery ordered the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence under sec 471 I P C, held that although the District Registrar, not being a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court, could not direct a prosecution under sec 176 of the Cr P Code, still his action must be deemed as one under clause (c) of section 190, Cr P Code, because in his capacity as District Magistrate he was competent to take cognizance of the offence under this clause, and to transfer the case to a subordinate Magistrate under sec 191—Cheta Mahlo v A E, 2 Pat 459 1 P L T. 727 24 Cr L J 792

A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence under this clause must comply with the provisions of law laid down in section 191 infra—Sh Abdul Ali v Emp, 1 P L T 446

589 Information.—The expression 'information received from any person other than a Police officer' means only such information as does not constitute a complaint or a Police report—Meshidi v Rangoon Municipal Committee, 4 L D R 300

A letter written to the District Magistrate conveying information of an offence and asking for action to be taken can be treated as information under this clause for taking action—Chhotey Maharaj v A E 28 O C. 33 A I R 1925 Oudh 144

The information need not contain all the allegations necessary to be proved to establish the offence it is sufficient if enough is alleged to justify the Magistrate in dealing judicially with the matter. What allegations or how much of the information should be recorded by the Magistrate in such a case, it is difficult to lay down in general terms but when it is found that the recorded information is sufficient to justify the Magistrate in considering that a prima facie case has been made out, the High Court will not interfere with the Magistrate's action in taking cognizance under this clause—Rash Behary v Emp, 35 Cal 1076

Where the Deputy Commissioner as a Collector and as such representing the Court of Wards received information of an offence, he as Magistrate was not competent to act on the information and to issue warrants, as by such action he was practically making himself a Judge in his own case

—Thakur Persad v Emp., 10 C W N 775; Laksh Narayan v Emp., 37 Cal 221 (per Stephen J) But this view does not seem to be correct, for sec 191 provides a sufficient safeguard and gives the accused a right to have the case transferred to another Magistrate. On this principle the Madras High Court has held that there can be no objection to a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence upon information received by him in another capacity e.g. as President of the District Board—Sundarasana v K. E., 43 Mad 709 (dissenting from 10 C W N 775) 37 Cal 221 (per Carnduf J dissenting from 10 C W N 775)

The following are held to be 'information' within the meaning of this section —(a) An anonymous communication—In re Hari Narain, 3 C W N 65 (b) communication through post—2 Weir 149 Karim Buksh v Azil Khan, 1899 A W N 201 (c) information received from another Magistrate—Makhan v Jepson, 1914 P L R 65 15 Cr L J. 261, 3 C. W. N cclxv

Information must be recorded —A Magistrate taking cognizance upon information under this clause should at least record the information on which he acted, though he may not be obliged to disclose the sources of the information—Thakur Persad v Emp. 10 C W N 775, Rash Behary v Emp., 35 Cal 1076 12 C W N 1075 but his omission to do so does not necessarily vitiate the proceedings—Mg Nya Bu v K E., 4 Bur L J. 211; A I R 1926 Rang 46

Information received from witness —A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence against a person on evidence given on behalf of another accused person, proceeds under clause (c) of this section —Raghab v Emp., 3 C. W. N cclxxix So also a Magistrate who takes cognizance of an offence against a witness in a case pending before him, upon the facts disclosed by the evidence of another witness does so under clause (c) of the present section and not under section 351—Akhud Ram v Emp., 1 C. W. N 105 Contra—5 N L R 113 and 4 S L R 258, in which under such circumstances it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance against the new accused under sec 351 and not under clause (c) of sec 190 If, however, the Magistrate has already taken cognizance upon a complaint of an offence against some person, and after examination of some witnesses the offences of other persons are revealed, the Magistrate proceeding against the latter does so under clause (a), (since there is a complaint) and not under clause (c)—Dedar Bux v Shyamapada 41 Cal 1013

590 Knowledge —Knowledge means actual personal knowledge of the Magistrate or knowledge based upon evidence legally placed before him—Q E v Nga Shwe, 1 L. B R 18 A gratuitous suspicion or belief founded on private information contained in an anonymous petition is not knowledge—In re Mohesh, 13 W. R. 1.

Where a Magistrate issued an order under sec 144 to stop work in a quarry, and took action for the disobedience of that order, and convicted the accused, it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance of the offence on his own knowledge of the facts under this clause (and the conviction was therefore illegal under sec 191)—Croan v Mul Raj, 1905 P R 36. 2 Cr L J 365. So also, where the accused in disobedience of an order given by a Cantonment Magistrate tied his buffaloes in a certain place, and the Magistrate finding the place filthy in consequence sent for the accused and fined him, it was held that the Magistrate took cognizance from his own knowledge under this clause and was debarred from trying the case by virtue of sec 191—K E v Abdul Rahim, 1905 P R 8.

A Magistrate who takes part in the initiation of proceedings is not incompetent to take cognizance of the offence, because this clause empowers the Magistrate to take cognizance upon his own 'knowledge'; but of course the Magistrate will be debarred under section 556 from trying the case—Oziullah v Dem Madhab, 50 Cal 135.

591. Suspicion.—Where a Magistrate has a mere suspicion that an offence has been committed, he should not as a matter of sound judicial discretion, take cognizance of it until some person aggrieved has complained (clause a) or until he has before him a police report (clause b) on the subject based on investigation directed to the offence—14 Cal 707.

592. Miscellaneous —

Fresh complaint after discharge—A Magistrate has jurisdiction to entertain a second complaint on the same facts after an order of discharge was passed by another Magistrate before whom the former complaint was made—Bijoo Singh v King Emp 2 P L J 34. The discharge of a person accused of an offence is no bar to his being apprehended and brought before a Magistrate for commitment or trial—8 W R 61. 14 W R 65. Contra—2 Bom 534, where it has been held that if a Subordinate Magistrate has discharged an accused the District Magistrate is not competent, acting under clause (c) of this section, to direct another Magistrate to rehear the case. See Note 681 under sec 203.

No Limitation—The general law of limitation is chiefly intended for civil matters and does not apply to the taking cognizance of offences—20 Bom 543.

Complaint in respect of one offence—Cognizance in respect of another:—See 26 Cal 786 cited above under cl (a).

Complaint against some persons, cognizance against others—Where a complaint is made against some persons and the Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence, it is the duty of the Magistrate to deal with the evidence brought before him, and to see that justice is done in regard to any other person who might be proved by the evidence to be con-in the offence—4 C W N xlv When once a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence, he is competent to take proceedings against all who from the evidence appear to be offenders His power is not limited only with regard to the persons mentioned in the complaint or Police report—4 C W N 560, 21 C W N 950, 1 Bur L J 183, Mehrab v Emp, 17 S L R 150 (F B). See also 26 Cal 786, U B R (1897—1901) 56; 1904 P R 32, 14 Bom L R 141 41 Cal 1013, and 4 C W N 367 cited under clause (a) also 9 N L R 65, and 8 C W N. 864 cited under clause (b)

191. When a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence under sub-section (1), clause (c), of the preceding section, the accused shall, before any evidence is taken, be informed that he is entitled to have the case tried by another Court, and if the accused, or any of the accused if there be more than one, objects to being tried by such Magistrate, the case shall, instead of being tried by such Magistrate, be committed to the Court of Session or transferred to another Magistrate.

593. Principle —The principle of this section is that no man ought to be a Judge in his own case If a Magistrate proceeds against a person upon his own personal information he is interested in the prosecution and thereby he would practically make himself a Judge in his own case and his pre conceived opinion as to the guilt of the accused is likely to bias himself against the accused

Moreover, this section has another object in view, viz., "to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust (in the mind of the accused) of the tribunal and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is so essential to social order and security The law in laying down the strict rule has regard not so much to the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge as to the susceptibilities of the litigant parties"—per Miller and Lush JJ in Sergeant v Dal, 2 Q B D 558, quoted in 19 Mad 263 The law, partly out of regard for the susceptibilities of the accused, and partly to inspire confidence in the administration of justice, allows the accused the right to claim to be tried before another Magistrate—Imp v Shevak Ram, 7 S L R 77

A Magistrate cannot take cognizance of an offence under clause (c) of section 190, without complying with the provisions of this section—1 P L T. 446 Where on a report being made by a Cantonment official in respect of an offence under sec 92 of the Cantonment Code, the Canton-

ment Magistrate took cognizance of the case and convicted the accused held that the trial and conviction were illegal as the Magistrate should have informed the accused under this section that he was entitled to have the case transferred to another Magistrate—Anandi Pershad v Emp 1923 P L R 124 21 Cr L J 394 When a Magistrate himself institutes criminal proceedings under sec 476 he is bound to inform the accused that he is entitled to have his case tried by another Court—A E v Nairpal 10 O L J 532 29 O C 1 A I R 1924 Oudh 448

The mere fact that the Magistrate takes cognizance of a case under clause (c) of section 190 does not bring the case within the operation of sec 536 and so long as the Magistrate complies with the provisions of section 191 he is entitled to try the case—Nga Chil v Emp 3 Bur L J 121 A I R 1924 Rang 352 26 Cr L J 249

594 Right of accused to have case transferred —The words shall be informed that he is entitled are mandatory and a Magistrate cannot refuse to comply with them—13 All 345 He is bound to inform the accused of his right to have the case transferred If he omits to inform the accused of his right or if in spite of objections taken by the accused the Magistrate proceeds with the case the proceedings will be wholly void It is not a mere irregularity curable by section 537—Q E v Hautlorne 13 All 345 Emp v Cledt 8 All 212 3 A I J 694 R v Ratan v Emp 19 A L J 139 Glander Se v Emp 4 Cr I J 656 21 A L J 89 Crown v Mul Ray 1905 P R 36 1 E v Abdul Ratu 1905 P R 8 5 N L R 113 1898 P R 13 22 Cr L J 96 (Iah) Sirfaraz Khan v A E 11 A L J 331 A E v Nairpal 10 O L J 532 25 Cr L J 1224

The accused can waive his right under this section—1 S L R 98 But if a Magistrate omits to inform the accused of his right the mere silence on the part of the accused is not to be taken as a waiver of his right—3 C W N cclxxix Waiver cannot be implied unless the accused is distinctly told in accordance with the terms of this section—Chander Sen v Emp 21 A L J 89 24 Cr I J 656

Although this section enables the accused to apply for a transfer of the case still unless the accused exercises that right the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to try the case is unquestionable The mere fact that the Magistrate has taken cognizance under section 190 clause (c) does not oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to hear and determine the case—In re Ganeshi 15 All 192 (194)

The omission by the Magistrate to inform the accused that he is entitled to have his case tried by another Court may be a ground for having the proceedings set aside but not for making an order for transfer—In re Abdul Ally 2 Weir 151

595 Nature of the accused's right —All that the accused is entitled to

to under this section is to have the case tried by another Court, but he cannot choose or determine for himself by what other particular Court the case is to be tried—7 B L R 637 And the Magistrate has a discretion, on objection being taken, either to transfer the case to another Magistrate or to commit it to the Sessions He is not bound to transfer the case to another Magistrate He may elect to commit the case to the Court of Session—22 Mad 148

Again, the accused can object only to the trial of the case by that Magistrate, he cannot object to a preliminary inquiry This section directs the Magistrate either to transfer the case to another Magistrate or to commit the case to the Sessions And the commitment involves the holding of a preliminary inquiry This section empowers the Magistrate to hold a preliminary inquiry even in a case triable by himself if the case is one triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, the Magistrate is a fortiori entitled to hold an inquiry preliminary to commitment—Q E v Abdul Razzak, 21 All 109 Azam Ali v Emp, 20 Cr L J 47 (Cal)

But a Magistrate who takes cognizance of a case under sec 190 (c) cannot, after becoming a District Magistrate, hear an appeal from a conviction in the case (which was tried by another subordinate Magistrate) without following the procedure laid down in Sec 191, as an appeal is a part of the trial of the offence—12 C W N 438

596 When objection to be taken —If the accused wants to be tried by another Court he must express his objection before any evidence is taken—Murad v Emp, 1894 P R 29 (at p 82)

597 Application of Section to Chapter VIII —The provisions of secs 190 and 191 do not apply to proceedings under sec 110 and a Magistrate who has instituted those proceedings need not inform the person proceeded against that he is entitled to have his case transferred to another Magistrate—27 All 172 But in Alimuddin v Emp, 29 Cal 392 and Godhan v Emp, 4 P L J 7 however it has been held that the principle of this section, viz, that no man ought to be a judge in his case, applies to proceedings under Sec 110, though they do not relate to offences, therefore, where a Magistrate has initiated proceedings against a person under sec 110 mainly if not wholly upon his own knowledge of the character of that person, he is incompetent to proceed with the trial under Sec 117

192. (1) Any Chief Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or sub-divisional Magistrate may transfer any case, of which he has taken cognizance, for inquiry or trial, to any Magistrate subordinate to him.

Transfer of cases by Magistrates

(2) Any District Magistrate may empower any Magistrate of the first class who has taken cognizance of any case to transfer it for inquiry or trial to any other specified Magistrate in his district who is competent under this Code to try the accused or commit him for trial; and such Magistrate may dispose of the case accordingly.

May transfer' —The power under this section is optional and not obligatory. As to cases which a Magistrate is disqualified from trying and is bound to transfer see Secs 487 and 556.

598 Any case' —This section deals with the power of the Magistrate to transfer any case the words any case are not restricted to criminal cases only but are wide enough to include any case triable by any criminal Court e.g. cases under Chapter VIII—Chintaman v Emp 35 Cal 243 24 All 151 Hirananda v Emp 1 Pat 621 or cases under Chapter XII—Satish v Rajendra 22 Cal 598 Ram Kessore v Duarka 10 C W N 1095 Mahendra v Raspati 20 A L J 215 Abdul Hamid v Hasan, 4 P L T 297 24 Cr L J 487 Even if the transfer be not strictly legal the irregularity would be cured by Sec 519 (f)—Gurudas v Gaganendra 2 C L J 614 Akbar v Domi Lal 4 C W N 811

The word case has not been defined but reading together sections 192 (1) 190 (a) and 200 (c) it is clear that the term includes a proceeding upon a complaint as soon as the complaint has been received by the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence and before he issues any process. A case can therefore be transferred under sec 19 even before a decision to issue process against the accused has been made—Isaram v Bhagirathi 7 N L R 97 12 Cr I J 437

Power to transfer cases which the subordinate Magistrate is incompetent to try —Under subsec (1) the Magistrates specified have power to transfer a case to a Sub Magistrate even though the latter be incompetent to try the case on his own initiative thus a complaint under Sec 10 of the Cattle Trespass Act can be entertained only by the District Magistrate or a Magistrate specially authorised but this section will empower a Subordinate Magistrate to try the case if it is transferred to him by the District Magistrate—Budhan v Issur Singh 34 Cal 926

But if a first class Magistrate transfers a case under subsection (1) he can transfer only those cases to a Subordinate Magistrate which the latter is competent to try or commit for trial

599 'Of which he has taken cognizance' —This section empowers the District Magistrate to transfer to Subordinate Magistrates only those cases of which he has taken cognizance. A Magistrate is said to take cognizance of a case under section 107 only when (and not before) he issues notice to the person charged to show cause why he should not be proceeded against under that section. Therefore where the District Magistrate has not issued any notice to the person charged that is where he has not taken cognizance of a case under section 107 he cannot transfer the case to a subordinate Magistrate—Konda Reddy v King Emp 41 Mad 246. This section enables a District Magistrate or subdivisional Magistrate to transfer only those cases of which he has taken cognizance under the provisions of Sec 190. It has no reference to cases which have been transferred to his Court—Darra v Mukat 12 A L J 277 15 Cr L J 357. In other words, a case which has once been transferred to a District Magistrate or Subdivisional Magistrate cannot be transferred by him again under Sec 192—Bashir Husain v Ali Husain 36 All 166 Crown v Nga So 1 L B R 86 Anonymous 7 M H C R App 33. But where a case had been transferred by the Chief Court under sec 526 from the Dt Magistrate of Rohtak to the Dt Magistrate of Hissar with a direction that the latter should either dispose of the case himself or transfer it to some other competent Magistrate in the District and the District Magistrate of Hissar transferred the case under sec 192 to an Honorary Magistrate held that the District Magistrate of Hissar was competent under this section to make the transfer—Ashen Singh v Crown 1917 P R 30 O I v Mula Prasad 19 All 241.

Where a trying Magistrate sends up a report to the District Magistrate that an accused before him has committed perjury and altered a document filed in Court the report amounts to a complaint and the District Magistrate can take cognizance of the case under section 190 (a) and transfer it for trial under section 19 to another Magistrate subordinate to him—Suraj Prasad v Emp 11 A L J 85 Emp v Sindar Sarup 20 All 514.

600 At which stage case can be transferred.—The Magistrate can transfer the case on taking cognizance of it. A District Magistrate is competent under sec 190 to take cognizance without complaint and to transfer the case to a subordinate Magistrate without such complaint—1 S L R 119. He can transfer the case before any process has been issued to the accused—Asaram v Bhagvathi 7 N L R 97 12 Cr L J 437. He can transfer a case even after summons has been issued against the accused—7 C L J 249 Eqbal v Emp 20 Cr L J 413 (Pat). But a case cannot be transferred under this section after it has been partly tried—2 Weir 152 e g after all the evidence for the prosecution and the defence has been taken—Q F v Radhe 12 All 66. The transfer of a part heard case after the framing of the charge and the cross examination of some of the prosecution witnesses to another Magistrate for disposal is undesirable. A Magistrate who undertakes a trial and hears the witnesses should if possible finish it—Maahar Ali v Emp, 50 Cal 223 (226).

'For inquiry or trial' —This section empowers a Magistrate to transfer a case for inquiry or trial, but it does not empower him to transfer a case simply for the purpose of considering the report of an investigation under sec 202, which he has himself ordered. The provisions of sections 192 and 202 do not entitle a Magistrate, after he has proceeded under the latter section, to make an order under the provisions of the former section transferring the case for the purpose of being dealt with under sec 203 or 204, without a fresh investigation as contemplated by sec 202—Mahabir v. Giribala, 29 C W N 508 26 Cr L J 990 A I R 1925 Cal 742

601. How much of the case need be transferred —Where a complaint or a police report deals with several persons, it is not necessary that the entire case, i. e., the case regarding the offences committed according to the complaint or Police report, should be transferred. Whether the entire case has been transferred or not is a question of fact, depending on the intention of the transferring Magistrate and this intention must be gathered from the order itself. Where no reservation is made it may be concluded that the entire case has been transferred—32 Cal 783. Thus, where a complaint was lodged against several persons, and the Magistrate after examining the complainant issued summons against one of the accused only and transferred the case to a Subordinate Magistrate, it was held that the whole case of the complainant was transferred and the Subordinate Magistrate could take proceedings against the other accused persons also—7 C L J 249

602. 'Subordinate to him' —A case can be transferred under this section by the Magistrate specified to the Court of a Magistrate subordinate to him and not to a superior Magistrate. A transfer of a case by a Subordinate Magistrate to a Superior Magistrate is not contemplated by this section. So a third class Magistrate cannot transfer a case to a District Magistrate—Q E v Radhe, 12 All 66

The subordination of the Presidency Magistrate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate shall be deemed to be of the same kind and extent as the subordination of Magistrates and Benches to the District Magistrate under sec 17 (1). The Chief Presidency Magistrate can under Sec 578 withdraw any case from any Presidency Magistrate and refer it for inquiry or trial to any other Presidency Magistrate—In re Nageswar, 1 Bom L R 347.

For the purpose of this section an Additional District Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate see Sec 10 (3)

A village headman is not a Magistrate, and a case cannot be transferred to him—Q E v Maung Gale, 1 L B R 59

603. Effect of transfer —When a District Magistrate has transferred a case for trial to a Deputy Magistrate, the former ceases to have jurisdiction in the case so long as the transfer is in existence and cannot take any further steps in the matter (e g issue warrants) unless the case is withdrawn to his own file under sec 528—Golapdy v Q E 27 Cal 979 Amrit Majhi v A E 46 Cal 854 Until the transferring Magistrate withdraws the case from the file of the subordinate Magistrate (to whom the case was transferred) to that of his own Court he has no power to make any order save an order for further inquiry under Sec 437 (now 436)—32 Cal 783 30 Cal 449 In this respect this section differs from Sec 202 Under that section the Magistrate receiving a complaint refers it to a subordinate Magistrate only for inquiry and report and does not cease to have control over the case The provisions of secs 192 and 202 are separate and distinct and the powers conferred by one section do not curtail the powers conferred by the other—Amrit Majhi v King Emp 46 Cal 854

604 Procedure before transfer —Notice to parties —Before a case is transferred under this section from one subordinate Court to another the District Magistrate should give notice to the parties of such transfer —8 Cal 393 Umrao v Fakirchand 3 All 749 In re Saher Nath 2 Bom L R 342 In re Daud Hussain Ratanlal 460 In p v Sadashit 2 Bom 349

Examination of complainant —Under Sec 200 proviso (a) when a complaint is made in writing the Magistrate is not bound to examine the complainant before transferring the case under this section See also Q v Haru 18 W R 18

605 Procedure after transfer —Examination of complainant —If the transferring Magistrate has already examined the complainant the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred is not bound to examine the complainant again—Sec 200 (c)

Examination of prosecution witness —Even where the transferring Magistrate has examined all the prosecution witnesses still the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred is bound to examine the witnesses again He cannot act upon the deposition of witnesses recorded by the transferring Magistrate—Q E v Bashir Khan 14 All 346 In re Tota Venkanna 2 Weir 152 see also 12 C W N 140

606 Transfer by High Court —In the case of a transfer of a criminal case by the High Court from a Court subordinate to the District Magistrate to the District Magistrate's Court it will be understood that the District Magistrate should try the case himself unless the High Court has expressed that the District Magistrate shall have the power to transfer the case to a subordinate Court But when the High Court transfers a case from the Court of one District Magistrate to the Court of another District Magistrate it will be understood unless the contrary is directly expressed, that the Magistrate of the Court to which the transfer is made has power and jurisdiction to apply section 192, and to transfer the case to the Court of any Magistrate subordinate to him, who may be competent to try it—Q E v Mata Prasad, 19 All 249, Kishen Singh v Crown, 1917 P. R. 30

193. (1) Except as otherwise expressly provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, no Court of Session shall take cognizance of any offence as a Court of original jurisdiction unless the accused has been committed to it by a Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf.

(2) Additional Sessions Judges and Assistant Sessions Judges shall try such cases only as the Local Government by general or special order may direct them to try, or, in the case of Assistant Sessions Judges, as the Sessions Judge of the division, by the general or special order, may make over to them for trial	(2) Additional Sessions Judges and Assistant Sessions Judges shall try such cases only as the Local Government by general or special order may direct them to try or, [* * * *] as the Sessions Judge of the division by the general or special order, may make over to them for trial

Change —The words 'in the case of Assistant Sessions Judges' which occurred in subsection (2) after the words 'may direct them to try' have been omitted by sec 16 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. We propose to omit from section 193 (2) the words 'in the case of Assistant Sessions Judges'. The section as it stands at present (i.e. before the amendment) makes a distinction between Additional Sessions Judges and Assistant Sessions Judges only allowing transfers by the Sessions Judge in the case of the latter. Considerable inconvenience has been felt owing to this limitation, which we propose to remedy by the omission of the words referred to above. —Report of the Select Committee of 1916. Under the present law Sessions Judges will be able to make over the cases to the Additional Sessions Judges as well as to the Assistant Sessions Judges.

607. Object of this section —The object of the requirement of a commitment before trial is to secure in the case of a person charged with a grave offence, a preliminary inquiry which would afford him the opportunity of becoming acquainted with the circumstances of the offence imputed to him and enable him to make his defence—Rama Varma v Q 3 Mad 351 The law contemplates that in the serious cases of which a Court of Session may take cognizance the accused should have some information of the case he has to answer—Q v Chinna Vedagiri 4 Mad 227

Irregular commitment —If the commitment is made by a Magistrate duly empowered the fact that the Magistrate investigated the case without a formal complaint is not a ground of treating the commitment as a nullity the Sessions Court should proceed with the trial in the usual course—4 B H C R 35

A commitment made in the absence of the accused is void and the subsequent trial upon such commitment must be set aside as a nullity—Akhanan v Crown 1913 P L R 260

Onus of proof —Where the commitment was made by a person exercising the powers of a Magistrate that fact is sufficient to entitle a Sessions Court to proceed with the trial and it would be on the party impugning the correctness of the proceedings to show that there was no jurisdiction—13 W R 17

609 Reference under sec 123 —Power of Additional Sessions Judge—A reference to a Court of Session by a Magistrate of a case under section 123 is not a case committed for trial and the Court of Session disposing of it does not try a case within the meaning of this section An Additional Sessions Judge empowered by the Govt to try all cases which may be committed for trial by the District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order on such reference—In re Dazaram Ranchhod Ratnial 830 This decision is no longer good law because the new subsection (3B) of sec 123 as now amended by the Amendment Act of 1923 expressly authorises the Sessions Judge to make over all references under sec 123 to the Additional or Assistant Sessions Judge In Beisode Behari v Emperor 50 Cal 229 the word cases under this section was held to include a reference under sec 123 but such a laboured interpretation is no longer necessary

610 Assistant Sessions Judge appointed temporarily —An Assistant Sessions Judge who has been directed by the Government to take over charge of the duties of the Sessions Judge during a temporary vacancy of the office, is not an officer appointed to act as a Sessions Judge, and has no jurisdiction to try any case even as Assistant Sessions Judge, unless it was made over to him by a general or special order under the last para of this section—Q E v. Mahadhu, Ratanlal 500

Power of Assistant Sessions Judge to hear appeal—The word 'case' used in sub-section (2) does not include an appeal or other matter, and a Sessions Judge has no power to transfer an appeal filed in his Court to the Court of the Assistant Sessions Judge—Emp v Abdul Razzak, 37 All 286 Sec Note 1110 under sec 409

194. (1) The High Court may take cognizance of any offence upon a commitment made to it by High Court, in manner hereinafter provided.

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the provisions of any Letters Patent granted under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, or any other provisions of this Code.

(2) (a) Notwithstanding anything in this Code contained, the Advocate-General may, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government, exhibit to the High Court, against persons subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court, information for all purposes for which Her Majesty's Attorney-General may exhibit informations on behalf of the Crown in the High Court of Justice in England

(b) Such proceedings may be taken upon every such information as may lawfully be taken in the case of similar informations filed by Her Majesty's Attorney-General so far as the circumstances of the case and the practice and procedure of the said High Court will admit.

(c) All fines, penalties, forfeitures, debts and sums of money recovered or levied under or by virtue of any such information shall belong to the Government of India.

(d) The High Court may make rules for carrying into effect the provisions of this section.

195. (1) No Court shall take cognizance—

(a) of any offence punishable under sections 172 to 188 (both inclusive) of the Indian Penal Code, except with the previous sanction or on the complaint, of the public servant concerned, or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate,

(b) of any offence punishable under sections 193, 194, 195, 196, 199, 200, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211 or 228 of the same Code, when such offence is committed in, or in relation to any proceeding in any Court except with the previous sanction or on the complaint of such Court or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate,

(c) of any offence described in section 463 or punishable under section 471, 475, or 476 of the same Code, when such offence has been

195 (1) No Court shall take cognizance—

(a) of any offence punishable under sections 172 to 188 of the Indian Penal Code, except * * * on the complaint in writing of the public servant concerned or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate,

(b) of any offence punishable under any of the following sections of the same Code, namely, sections 193, 194, 195, 196, 199, 200, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, and 228 when such offence is alleged to have been committed in or in relation to, any proceeding in any Court, except * * * on the complaint in writing of such Court or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate, or

(c) of any offence described in section 463 or punishable under section 471, section 475 or section 476 of the same Code, when such committed by a party to any offence is alleged to have been proceeding in any Court committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate

(2) In clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) the term "Court" means a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court but does not include a Registrar or Sub Registrar under the Indian Registration Act, 1877

(3) See infra

(4) The sanction referred to in this section

Nature of sanction necessary may be expressed in general terms and need not name the accused persons but it shall so far as practicable specify the Court or other place in which and the occasion on which the offence was committed

(5) When sanction is given in respect of any offence referred to in this section, the Court taking cognizance of the case may frame a charge of any other offence so refer-

(2) In clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) the term 'Court' includes a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court, but does not include a Registrar or Sub Registrar under the Indian Registration Act 1877

(6) Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate, and no sanction shall remain in force for more than six months from the date on which it was given, provided that the High Court may, for good cause shown, extend the time

(7) For the purposes of this section every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie that is to say —

(c) Where no appeal lies from such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the principal Court of original jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such first mentioned Court is situate

(a) Where such appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate.

(3) For the purposes of this section, a Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the appealable decrees or sentences of such former Court, or in the case of a Civil Court from whose decrees no appeal ordinarily lies to the principal Court having ordinary original civil jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such Civil Court is situate :

Provided that—

(a) where appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate ; and

(b) Where such appeals lie to a Civil and also to a Revenue Court, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Civil or Revenue Court according to the nature of the case in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed

(3) The provisions of subsection (1) with reference to the offences named therein apply also to criminal conspiracies to commit such offences and to the abetment of such offences and attempts to commit them

(5) Where a complaint has been made under sub section (1) clause (a) by a public servant any authority to which such public servant is subordinate may order the withdrawal of the complaint and, if it does so, it shall forward a copy of such order to the Court and upon receipt thereof by the Court no further proceedings shall be taken on the complaint

Change —This section has been substantially amended by sec 47 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1933)

The changes introduced by the present Amendment are the following —

(1) The words with the previous sanction have been omitted from clauses (a) (b) and (c) of subsection (1) Under the old law a private person could launch a prosecution for the offences referred to in this section after obtaining the sanction of the Court Under the present law by abolishing sanction altogether the right of private individuals to prosecute for the said offences has been taken away Sub-sections (4) (5) and (6) which dealt with sanction have also been omitted

(2) The words in writing have been added after the word complaint in clauses (a) (b) and (c) and the words is alleged to have been committed have been substituted for the words have been committed in clauses (b) and (c) For reasons, see notes under those words

(b) where appeals lie to a Civil and also to a Revenue Court, such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Civil or Revenue Court, according to the nature of the case or proceeding in connection with which the offence is alleged to have been committed

(4) The provisions of subsection (1) with reference to the offences named therein, apply also to criminal conspiracies to commit such offences and to the abetment of such offences and attempts to commit them

(3) In sub section (2) the word includes has been substituted for means

(4) Sub section (3) has been re numbered as sub section (4)

(5) Sub section (7) has been re-numbered as sub section (3) because that sub section should come in more properly after the definition of the word Court in sub section (2) The old clause (c) of sub section (7) has now been incorporated into the body of sub section (3) with this restriction that it is now confined to civil Courts only

(6) Sub section (5) is entirely new

Reasons for the change — The provisions of section 195 cause constant and great difficulty and various amendments have been suggested which we have considered at length We have no doubt that it will not be possible to remedy the evils which are connected with this section so long as private individuals are allowed to prosecute for offences connected with the administration of justice In our opinion the only effective way of dealing with this section is to allow prosecutions to be launched only by the public servant or by the Court

We see no reason why the public servant or the Court should not file a complaint exactly in the same way as a private individual would do in other cases and our proposals in this connection with this section and the enlargement of section 476 involve the adoption of this principle In our view section 195 should bar the cognizance by any Court of offences of this nature except upon such complaint while the procedure to be followed when the Court desires to prosecute should be prescribed by section 476

The adoption of this principle will at all events get rid of the objectionable practice of keeping a sanction which has been granted to a private individual hanging over the head of the accused person for a period of six months which is frequently utilised for the various purposes of blackmail In the case of a complaint by a Court or a public servant we do not think that it will be necessary to prescribe any limit of time

It will also in our opinion be a distinct advantage to get rid altogether of the term sanction in connection with these prosecutions a result which will be effected by the amendments we propose

We recognise that clause (a) of sub-section (1) stands on a somewhat different footing from clauses (b) and (c) but we think there is no reason to retain even in it any reference to a sanction as prosecution under clause (a) can reasonably be launched in all cases on the direct complaint of a public servant — Report of the Select Committee of 1916

The object of the amendment is to stop private persons from obtaining sanction as a means of wrecking vengeance and to give the Court concerned full discretion in deciding whether any prosecution is necessary or not—

611 Sanction abolished—Effect of Amendment —Since sanction has been abolished by the Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 a sanction granted after the 1st September 1923 (the date on which the Amendment Act came into operation) is illegal—In re Gafur 26 Bom L R 1235 A I R 1925 Bom 151 A sanction granted after 1st September 1923 is illegal, even though an application for sanction was made prior to that date. The order granting sanction cannot be treated even as a complaint—Baldeo Misser v D I G of Police 51 Cal 652 (655)

So also where sanction was granted before the 1st September 1923 but no prosecution was launched by that time further proceedings cannot be taken after that date on the strength of the sanction. A prosecution can then be started only on a complaint by the Court concerned—Ani v Ak Yone 2 Bur I J 289 Jasahir v Jasru 6 Lah 41 26 P L R 152 26 Cr L J 1163 Ameraj v Emp 73 A L J 35 26 Cr L J 751

But where a sanction was obtained and the Court had taken cognizance of the offence before the Amendment Act came into operation the subsequent amendment of the law did not take away the jurisdiction of the Court to proceed with the trial and did not necessitate a fresh complaint under the amended provisions—In re Appasamy 49 M L J 276 A I R 1925 Mad 1172 Muthia Goundan v Chinna (1924) M W N 358 A I R 1924 Mad 615 26 Cr I J 14 Emp v Akbar Ali 8 Lah L J 87 A I R 1926 Lah 131

An application under sub section 1 (6) of the old section to revoke a sanction granted before the Amendment Act of 1923 is maintainable even after the coming into operation of the Amendment Act of 1923 because the right conferred by sub section (6) of the old section was not a mere matter of procedure but a substantive right and such right could not be taken away by any amending Act—Ramakrishna v Sathai Annai 48 Mad 670 (T B) 49 M I J 773 (practically overruling Nataraja v Rangaswamy 47 Mad 384 46 M L J 774 25 Cr I J 361 and Sesha Aiyar v Public Prosecutor 19 I W 463 34 M I T 353 25 Cr L J 702). Similarly where proceedings under the old sec 195 were commenced and the order of the subordinate Judge refusing to sanction a prosecution was passed under the old Code but during the pendency of the application to the District Judge against the order of refusal the new Code came into operation and the District Judge sanctioned the prosecution held that the case was governed by sec 6 (e) of the General Clauses Act and the repeal of the old sec 195 could not affect any pending investigation in respect of the right which had accrued to the complainant. The District Judge therefore did not act illegally in granting the sanction—Kashmere Lal v Kishen Das 26 Cr L J 90 A I R 1924 All 563

for under the old law no distinction was made between a sanction and a complaint. The cases noted below are therefore cited with certain verbal alterations.)

612. Object of section.—The object of this section is:—to protect persons from being needlessly harassed by rash, baseless or vexatious prosecutions at the instance of private individuals for the offences specified—39 Mad 677 32 M L J 54, to protect persons from criminal prosecution by persons actuated by personal malice or ill-will or frivolity of disposition—18 All 203, 1887 A W N 142 1 C W N 400, to protect persons from criminal prosecutions upon insufficient grounds and to ensure prosecution only when the Court after due consideration is satisfied that there is a proper case to put a party on his trial—4 L B R 234, to insist on there being prosecution only when the public justice demands it and to prevent prosecution when public interest cannot be served—1 C W N 400; 2 Weir 178; Ratanlal 374 3 C W N 3, 1893 A W N 104, and to save the time of Criminal Courts from being wasted by endless prosecutions without convictions—39 Mad 677 1 C W N 400

613. Duty of Court.—A complaint ought not to be made under this section when there is no probability of conviction. It is necessary for the Court before making a complaint, to consider the evidence and to decide as to whether there is a prima facie case and any reasonable chance of conviction being obtained—Abou v. Kuppuswami, 2 Weir 188, 26 Mad 116; 12 M L J 408 12 M L J 392 Munisami v. Rajaratnam, 44 M. L. J 774, 12 C W N 3 4 P I J 374 In re Raoji 7 Bom. L. R 732 (per Russell J), 32 M L J 54 13 A I J 1111 61 W 241, 10 N L R. 177; Mulayya v. Maung Shai, 3 Bur L. R 152 11 Cr I J 749, Khajumal v. Cronin, 14 S L R 69 Bhagirathi v. Imp., 26 Cr I J. 2401

It would be an abuse of the powers vested in a Court of justice if complaints were made by it on the principle that though the conviction of the party complained against is a mere possibility, it is desirable that the matter should be thrashed out, so that it may be decided whether or not an offence has been committed—37 Cal 250 (Nag)

614 Sub-section (1)—Complaint.—If a Court adopts the procedure laid down in sec 476, and after making the necessary inquiry under that section, sends the case to a first class Magistrate, such action amounts to making a complaint—Q. E. v. Rachappa, 13 Bom 109. In order to make a complaint under this section, the Judge or Munsiff will not have to appear before a Magistrate and make a complaint on oath like an ordinary complainant. If he adopts the procedure under sec 476, that would be sufficient. Section 476 was enacted with the object of avoiding the inconvenience which might be caused if a Munsiff or subordinate Judge or a Judge were obliged to appear before a Magistrate and make a complaint on oath to lay the foundation of a prosecution—Ishri Prasad v Sham Lal 7 All 871 (F B)

But it should be noted that Sec 476 refers only to offences 'when committed before the Court' and the ruling in 7 All 871 must be applied to those cases only. But if the offence is committed before a public servant other than a Court his proper course is to prepare an ordinary complaint. See U B R (1908) Cr P C 13.

But even in the case of complaints by public servants, the law is not so stringent as in the case of complaints by ordinary persons. Thus where a Sub Inspector drew up what was virtually a complaint and sent it up along with a calendar of witnesses to his immediate superior praying that a case under sec 182 I P C be lodged against the accused and then the superior officer got the documents presented to the Magistrate by the Court Inspector it was held that there was a sufficient complaint by the Sub Inspector although it was not addressed to the Magistrate as required by sec 4 (h) but to his superior officer—Mehr Chiragh Din v Crown 4 Lah 359. So also where a police officer made a report that a certain person had lodged a false information before him and recommended that that person might be prosecuted held that the report virtually amounted to a complaint within the meaning of sec 195—Dulan Singh v Emp 40 Cal 360.

The words 'in writing' have been inserted after the word 'complaint' in order to remove the inconvenience which might be felt if it was made incumbent on the public servant to attend the Court and to appear before the Magistrate in order to lodge the complaint. It will be sufficient if he sends a written complaint to the Magistrate. It is for this reason that clause (aa) has been added to sec 200 so that it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to examine the public servant (complainant) when taking cognizance of the offence—Lachmi Singh v K F 5 P L T 505 A I R 1924 Pat 691 25 Cr L J 972.

If an offence under sec 173 I P C is committed before a public servant the Court shall not take cognizance of the offence without a complaint in writing from the public servant and it is not open to a Magistrate to ignore the provisions of this clause by the device of instituting the case under another section of the I P Code. Hence the Magistrate cannot say that he took cognizance of an offence under sec 225B of the Penal Code and that having done so he was entitled under sec 238 of the Cr P Code to convict the accused under sec 173 I P Code which he regarded as a minor offence of the same character as that for which a penalty is provided under sec 225B I P Code—Narain Singh v K E 22 A L J 1005 47 All 114 A I R 1925 All 129.

614A Want of Complaint —Under clause (b) of section 537 before it was amended in 1923 the want of a sanction or any irregularity in the matter of a sanction or in a proceeding under sec 476 did not stand in the way of a conviction if it was otherwise sound This clause does not any longer find its place in sec 537 The inference is that want of a regular complaint by a public servant or a Court must be fatal to a prosecution —Ameraj v Emp 23 A L J 35 26 Cr L J 751

615 Subordination of public servants —The subordination of one public servant to another may arise either from express enactment or

A constable is subordinate to the Superintendent of Police—19 W R 33 The District Magistrate (in his executive capacity) is at the head of the Police and the Police (e g the Superintendent of Police) is subordinate to him—Empress v Ram Ah Lalan 1890 A W N 167 Emp v Shib Singh 27 All 297 45 All 135 1910 P R 6 32 Cal 180 (Contra—Ramaswamy Lal v Queen Empress 27 Cal 452 and Akhan Singh v Kirpa Singh 4 Lah 130 In these two cases it has been held that although the police officers in a district are generally subordinate to the District Magistrate the subordination contemplated by sec 195 is not such subordination Sec 195 contemplates the subordination of the police officers to some superior officer of Police)

The Secretary of a Municipal Board is subordinate to the Chairman—In re Sheo Prasad 1892 A W N 31

616 Clause (b) —The power of a Court to complain in respect of offences mentioned in clause (b) is not restricted as under clause (c) to the parties before it—Emp v Syed Khan 3 Rang 303 (F B) A I R 1925 Rang 321

Perjury —In making a complaint against a witness for perjury the Court should remember that the statement must be intentionally false in order to justify a prosecution—Sheodahn v Bandhan 2 A L J 836 The essential ingredient of the offence is the intention of the person—3 C W N 81

Again, the statement alleged to be false must have a bearing upon the matter in issue When the question is neither material to the issue in the case nor goes to the credit of the witness he is not liable to prosecution—Sheodahn v Bandhan 2 A L J 836 Akhanumal v Crown 11 S I, R 69 Maharaj Prasad v Emp -1 A L J 673 24 Cr L J 779

Prosecution for perjury ought to not be made in respect of a loose or inaccurate statement which is remotely relevant to the case and which is not pressed home to the witness in cross examination—Muquaddos v. Zahuruddin 20 Cr L J 564 (All)

A prosecution for perjury ought not to be made while the principal proceeding in respect of which the perjury is said to have been committed is pending. If such a prosecution is to be started, it ought to be started after the principal proceeding has terminated—In re Vasudev, 24 Bom L. R. 1153

A complaint for perjury should not be made by the Court in cases where it will have to determine the question by merely weighing the evidence on both sides—Padarath v Rattan Singh, 5 P. L. J 23 1 P. L. T 458 21 Cr L J 145

A prosecution for offences under secs 193, 467 and 471 I P C, in respect of a handnote sued upon may be made even though the suit was compromised after it was heard in part—Dulloo v D I G of Police, 49 Cal 551 23 Cr L J 138

A prosecution for perjury in respect of a piece of evidence should not generally be made where the trial Court and the Appellate Court have taken different views as to its credibility—Hirulal v Lila Mahlon, 3 P. L. T. 60

In considering the question whether a prosecution for perjury shall or shall not be made, it is a safe rule to give the witness a locus penitentiae and an opportunity to correct himself and if he avails himself of it, prosecution is inadvisable 1903 \ W \ 68 Maharaj Prasad v Imp, 21 A. L. J 673

Where a Sessions Judge believes the evidence of a witness given before him, but disbelieves the evidence given by him before the committing Magistrate he should not prosecute for perjury in the alternative but he may prosecute for giving false evidence before the Magistrate—2 Weir 166.

617 Contradictory statements —Whether a prosecution should be made for giving false evidence on the ground that the witness made contradictory statements, depends upon the circumstances of each case—Nga Lu Pa v. Emp, 4 Bur L. T 262 13 Cr L J 56 The mere fact that a witness made contradictory statements in the course of a single deposition is not a ground of prosecution—2 Weir 169, 4 C W N 249, in such a case the Court should take into consideration the whole deposition—2 Weir 168, and should consider if the contradiction may possibly be due to some confusion or mistake—3 C W N. 81 Nor should the Court make a complaint on the mere fact that the witness made two contradictory statements, one before the committing Magistrate and another at the trial. The Court should consider how the contradiction has happened and why the witness in the trial has resiled from his statement made before the committing Magistrate. Where the witness had made false statements before the committing Magistrate but deposed truly at the trial, the High Court refused to prosecute—37 Cal. 618. Before making a complaint in respect of contradictory statements it would be necessary and proper to allow the person against whom the complaint is made an opportunity to explain the statements fully and to state the circumstances under which they came to be made—Iqbal v Wilayat 17 Cr I J 93 (All) Fazl Din v Crown 3 Lah L J 44.

A Court should not prosecute merely where there is a discrepancy between a statement made on oath and a statement made under circumstances in which the witness is not bound to state the truth e.g., where a person made two contradictory statements one in a petition in which he is not bound to state the truth and another in a deposition—2 Weir 169.

Where a person made two contradictory statements one before a Magistrate and another before a subordinate Judge, it is necessary that there should be a proper complaint for prosecution on each branch of the alternative i.e. one complaint from the Magistrate and another from the subordinate Judge. The Court to which both Courts are subordinate may properly make the complaint where one Court is not subordinate to the other—1890 P R 36 Emp v Purshottam 45 Bom 834 (F B) 23 Bom L R 1 22 Cr L J 241.

618 False Charge—A complaint for an offence under Sec 211 I P C can be made only when the case is deliberately false but where the case brought is not false in substance but is bolstered up by false evidence prosecution should be made for an offence not under sec 211 but under sec 196 I P C—Bhola Nath v Harimohan 7 C L J 169. There must be good grounds for thinking that a false and malicious charge was made and that a prosecution is necessary in the interests of justice—Nandram v Ramchand 5 C P L R 78.

Mere acquittal of the person against whom the charge was made is not sufficient for a prosecution under Sec 211 I P C. There must be more than a mere acquittal there must be a reasonable belief in the mind of the prosecuting Court that there was no foundation whatever for the original charge there must be a belief that in instituting the criminal proceedings the accused had acted knowingly without belief in the truth of the allegations made by himself and recklessly without caring whether the allegations were true or false—Kusum v Janak Lal 4 P L J 374.

The fact that the complainant fails to prove his case is by itself not sufficient to sanction a prosecution under sec 211 I P Code. It must be established satisfactorily in the mind of the Judge or Magistrate that the complaint was made with intent to cause injury or that it was a false complaint made with the knowledge that it was false—Bhuvan Katar v Emp, 6 P L T 365 26 Cr L J 141.

Before making a complaint for bringing a false case it is necessary that the case must be judicially determined, the original case must be disposed of according to law before proceedings can be taken for prosecution for false charge—Gunamony v Q E 3 C W N 758 In re Sahiram 3 C W N 254 14 C W N 765 Sheikh Kutub Ali v Emp 3 C W N 490 In re Ningappa 48 Bom 360 26 Bom L R 183 A Magistrate is not competent to order the prosecution of the complainant for making a false complaint unless that complaint is dismissed as false—3 C W N 758 Aly Mahomed v Emp 1912 P R 2 If the original case is neither tried out nor dismissed on evidence taken the prosecution is invalid—Ram Sarup v A E 4 O C 127

619 False claim —Before prosecuting a person under sec 209 I P C for bringing a false claim that person should be allowed an opportunity of proving his claim a prosecution should not be made when that person has been thwarted in his attempt to establish the correctness of his claim by the unwarranted activities of the Police acting as the agent of the other party—Khairati Ram v Crown 3 Lah L J 537

620 False charges made before police —A complaint by the Court is necessary when the offences referred to in this clause are committed in or in relation to any proceeding in Court it is not necessary when the offence is committed in police proceedings e g when a false charge is made to the Police and has not been followed by a judicial investigation thereof by a Court—Tajabullah v Emp 43 Cal 1152 7 Mad 292 2 Weir 162 Jagatchandya v A E 26 Cal 786 Putiram v Mahomed Hasim 3 C W N 33 4 Cal 869 Hasim Baksh v Emp 1905 P R 12 Q E v Ganpat Ratanlal 704 30 All 58 Bakshi v Emp, 21 A L J 805 10 Mad 232 If however the information to the police was followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and on the same charges as those contained in the information to the Police and the complaint was investigated by the Court and found to be false a complaint of the Court would be necessary for prosecuting the false complainant because it was an offence committed in relation to a proceeding in Court—Crown v Ananda Lal 44 Cal 650 33 Cal 1 14 Cal 707 Jadnandan v Emp 37 Cal 250 6 L B R 50 Nagapan v Emp 1 Bur L J 258 Where an information to the police is followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and the same charge and the police investigates the case and reports that it is false the complaint of the Court is necessary even in respect of the false charge made to the police on the ground that it was an offence committed in relation to a proceeding in Court The fact that the complaint was not investigated by the Court does not make any difference—Sh Abd Yassin v Emp, 4 Pat 323 6 P L T 457 A I R 1925 Pat 483 Daroga Gope v Emp 6 P L T 515 26 Cr L J 1269

Alleged to have been committed —These words have been substituted for the simple word committed occurring in the old section See Note 626 under clause (c) infra

621 In relation to —The words in relation to in this clause are very general and are wide enough to cover a proceeding in contemplation before a Criminal Court though the proceeding may not have begun when the offence was committed Therefore sanction (complaint) is necessary for the prosecution of a person for abetment of perjury though the main case in which the false evidence was intended to be given was not then commenced but was in contemplation—In re Vasudeo 24 Bom L R 1153

622 Court —The word Court in this section has a wider meaning than a Court of Justice as defined in the Penal Code Having regard to the obvious purpose for which this section was enacted the widest possible meaning should be given to this word and it will include a tribunal empowered to deal with a particular matter and authorised to receive evidence on that matter in order to come to a determination (e g a tribunal formed under the Calcutta Improvement Act)—Nunda Lal v Khetra Mohan 45 Cal 585 17 Cal 872 11 C W N 909

623 What Court can make complaint —The only Courts that can make complaints for prosecution for an offence are those before which the alleged offence was committed, or the Courts to which such Courts are subordinate—6 Cal 640 Where a plaintiff first instituted a suit in one Court and obtained a decree for a part of his claim, and then presented a fresh claim in another Court in respect of the item disallowed by the first Court, and fraudulently obtained an ex parte decree, whereupon the first Court took action under sec 195 Cr P C and made a complaint in writing under sec 210 I P Code, held that the action could only be taken by the second Court, and not by the first Court, because the institution of the second suit and the obtaining of a decree by fraudulent means could not be held to be an offence committed in relation to proceedings in the first Court—Wishnu v Crown, 6 Lah 445 26 P L R 717 26 Cr L J 1588

As a general rule, complaints should be made by the Court before which the offence is alleged to have been committed and not by any other Court—In re Raja of Venkatagiri, 6 M H C R 92, Nga Aung v K E, 9 Bur L T 202 18 Cr L J 97, 1879 P R 29 But a complaint may be made in the first instance by the superior Court, even though no complaint was made by the subordinate Court before which the offence was committed—27 Mad 23 Bhadeswar v Kampta Prasad 35 All 90 11 A L J 11 Thus the High Court can make a complaint while exercising its powers of revision—23 M L J 593 Gudula v Janai, 16 Cr L J 740 (Mad), and consequently the High Court can direct that its order in the revision case should issue as a complaint to the Magistrate—Syed Khan v Nagoor, 3 Bur L J 141 26 Cr L J 262

Court abolished and re established—Where by a notification in the Gazette the Court of the Sub Magistrate at B was abolished and two years afterwards the said Court was restored with its territorial limits

somewhat curtailed it was held that it could not be said that there was any such continuity as would enable the High Court to hold that the Court that was re-constituted was the same as the one that had ceased to exist and consequently the new Court could not make a complaint in respect of an offence committed before the old Court—In re Appa Alla 16 Cr L J 787 (Mad)

624 No delegation of power —The power to make a complaint must be exercised by the Court before which the offence was committed. The Court cannot delegate that power even to the Public Prosecutor. 626 Alleged to have been committed —These words have been substituted by the Select Committee of 1916 for the word committed in deference to the remarks made by Piggott J in Emperor v Bhawanil Das 38 All 169 at page 172. With regard to the actual wording of the sub-section under consideration it does seem to me to be somewhat lacking in precision. To forbid a Court to take cognizance of an offence committed by a party is open to the criticism that no Court can decide whether an offence was committed or not until after it has taken cognizance. It seems necessary therefore to read the word committed as equivalent to the expression alleged to have been committed. See also Janardhan v Baldeo Prasad 5 P L J 135

627 Document —The word document in this section means the original document. This clause is wide enough to cover a document produced or given in evidence in the course of a proceeding whether produced or given in evidence by the party who is alleged to have committed the offence or by any one else—In re Bhai Vyankatesh 49 Bom 608 27 Bom L R 607 In other words two things are necessary under clause (c) viz —(1) the document must be produced or given in evidence in the proceeding (2) the offence must be alleged to have been committed by a party to the proceeding, but it is not necessary that the person who produces the document in Court must be the offender himself

Where a document was not produced in the suit but was disclosed in an affidavit filed therein and inspection thereof was allowed to the other side and it was filed in the office of the Translator of the High Court for translation held that these actions did not amount to producing the document in evidence as it was not actually produced in Court and therefore no complaint of the Court was necessary for prosecution under Secs 465 467 and 474 I P C in respect of that document—Munisamy v Rajaratnam 45 Mad 928 (F B) 43 M L J 375 A I R 1927 Mad 495 Where in a proceeding under Sec 145 a document comes into Court attached to a police report prior to the proceeding the document is not said to be produced in Court and even if it is neither of the parties to the proceeding is a party to its production consequently the complaint of the Court under this section is not necessary as a condition precedent to the institution of criminal proceedings against the guilty party upon a charge under section 463 I P C — Janardhan v Baldeo Prasad, 5 P L J 135

It is not using a forged document as genuine if the document is produced in obedience to a summons from the Court. An involuntary production of a document in Court cannot amount to any use of it—Asst Sessions Judge v Ramammal 36 Mad 387 22 M L J 141, Ma Ain Lon v Ma On Nu 3 Rang 36 3 Bur L J 349

A document is said to be given in evidence when the meaning of this section when it is handed over by the person tendering it to the Court, although the Court may reject it as evidence for insufficiency of stamp or want of registration—Q E v Nagin Das Ratanlal 242

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a complaint of the Court is necessary in respect of an offence mentioned in clause (1) (c) when such offence has been committed prior to the production of the document in Court. The Bombay High Court holds that where an offence under Sec 471 I P C (using as genuine a forged document) in respect of a document produced in Court has been committed before it comes into Court no complaint of the Court is necessary the use complained of being prior to its production in Court—Noor Mahomed v Kaikhosru 4 Bom L R 268. The Allahabad High Court also holds that so long as the prosecution is confined to offences connected with a document prior to its production in Court no sanction is required. All that clause (c) prohibits is taking cognizance of an offence described in sec 463 I P C when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court with respect to a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding—Lalia Prasad v K E 10 A L J 294 34 All 654. So also the Punjab Chief Court holds that no complaint by a Court is necessary where the offence of instigation of the fabrication of false evidence (under sec 466 I P C) appears to have been committed at a time when there were no proceedings whatsoever in any Court and the police were merely inquiring into the circumstances of the case—Crown v Ajai Singh 1917 P R 34.

But the Calcutta High Court is of opinion that a complaint of the Court is necessary under such circumstances because the very fact that the document is produced in Court will bring the case within the purview of this section and it is immaterial that the forgery is alleged to have been committed before the production of the document in Court—Tens Shah v Bolahi Shah 14 C W N 479. Nalini Kanto v Anandul 44 Cal 1002. The same view has been taken in two Allahabad cases—Emp v Bhawani, 14 A L J 74 38 All 169. Kanha Ja Lal v Bhagwan Das, 23 A L J 956 48 All 60 26 Cr L J 1485. The Madras High Court also holds that this section is not limited to cases where the fabrication is committed pendente lite but it extends to cases of fabrication of false evidence in advance—In re Parameshwaran 39 Mad 677 18 M L T 32. And the Lahore High Court has also expressed the view that where a document has been produced in Court by a party the sanction (complaint) of such Court is necessary for his prosecution in respect of an antecedent forgery—Lhairats Ram v Malaua Ram 5 Lah 550 (552) following 44 Cal 1002 and 14 C W N 479

The Court making a complaint should specify the document in respect of which the forgery has been committed as well as the particular act or acts of forgery—10 W R 41

629 Party —Complainant is necessary if the document is produced or given in evidence by a party to the proceeding But no complaint is necessary to prosecute a witness in the proceeding since a witness is not a party—5 Mad 671 3 Mad 400 Sessions Judge v Kondeti 26 M L J 220, 15 Cr L J 242 Crown v Juan Mal 1917 P R 10 Debilal v Dhajadhari 15 C W N 565 nor is a complaint necessary to prosecute the agent of a party—1879 P R 9 3 Bur L T 108 or an abettor if he is not a party—32 All 74 A claimant in insolvency proceedings is a party to the proceedings and a complaint is necessary for his prosecution in respect of statements contained in an affidavit filed by him before the Official Assignee in support of his claim—In re Hajeer Mohamed, 36 M L J 60 A complainant in a criminal proceeding is a party to the proceeding—Kanhayyalal v Bhagwan 23 A L J 956

630 Proceeding in Court —No sanction or complaint is necessary if the offence is not committed in relation to any proceeding in a Court. Thus where a mahal belonging to several co sharers having been sold under the Public Demands Recovery Act a surplus was lying in deposit with the certificate officer and a mukhtar filed an application to withdraw that deposit purporting to have been signed by all the co sharers but the signatures of two of them were alleged to be forged held that the surplus sale proceeds not having been entrusted to the certificate officer in his capacity as a Court no complaint by the Court was necessary for the prosecution of the alleged forgers—Jharu Lal v Mahant Madan Das 2 Pat 257

631 Subsection (3)—Subordination of Courts —This subsection applies only to subordination of Courts Thus where a Subordinate Magistrate acts as an executive officer, his subordination must be determined with reference to Sec 17 (1) i.e. he is subordinate to the Subdivisional Magistrate or the District Magistrate as the case may be) and he cannot be deemed as subordinate to the Sessions Judge—2 Weir 155

But the word Court in this subsection is not confined to the Courts mentioned in clauses (b) and (c) of subsection (1) but applies also to the public servant in clause (a) of that subsection when such public servant is acting as a Court and the offence is committed in connection with proceedings in which the public servant concerned is so acting—Arunachalam

v Ponnusami, 47 Mad 64 followed in In re Buduiddin 47 Bom 102. Therefore although a Sub-Magistrate is no doubt a public servant in his capacity of an administrative officer still if he is acting in his judicial capacity he must be deemed to be a Court and is therefore subordinate to the Court to which an appeal from his order would lie under the provisions of this subsection—Arunachalam v Ponnusami 47 Mad 64 35 M L J 454 20 Cr L J 78. Similarly a first class Magistrate is a public servant and as such subordinate to the District Magistrate but if he acts as a Court he must be taken to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals lie from his Court viz the Court of the Sessions Judge—In re Buduiddin 47 Bom, 102 24 Bom L R 810 23 Cr L J 576.

Every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the Court to which appeals from the former will ordinarily lie. Thus—

The District Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge—Jiwani Mal v Beli Ram 1917 P R 11 In re Panchalam 42 Mad 96 1897 A W N 2 1908 P W R 24. A first class Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge—1902 P R 7 (overruling 1901 P R 30) 1912 P R 2 as also to the Additional Sessions Judge (under the provisions of secs 408 and 409 read together)—In re Sikandar 44 Bom 877 14 Cr L J 195 (Cal) Kusum v Janak Lal 4 P L J 374. A committing second class Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge—2 Weir 160. The Assistant Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge and not to the District Magistrate—19 All 111.

A second or third class Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate and not to any first class Magistrate—26 Mad 656 27 Mad 124 30 Cal 394 Jiwani v Emp 2 Lah L J 660 3 N L R 50 30 All 109 41 Mad 787 Ahmad Hussain v Rahuman 26 O C 358 Pallikudathan v Buddu 47 Mad 229 45 M L J 553 because an appeal from the 2nd or 3rd class Magistrate ordinarily lies under Sec 407 (1) to the District Magistrate and not to any other 1st class subordinate Magistrate to whom the District Magistrate has delegated under Sec 407 (2) his power to hear appeals from 2nd or 3rd class Magistrates—Ibid.

A Sub Judge is subordinate to the District Judge and not to the High Court—Narayanan v Kadisaya 44 M L J 320 Ganesh v Jitlan 17 A L J 191 Hubbar v Sayyad Ali 22 O C 189.

A Munsiff's Court is subordinate to the District Judge's Court—1898 P R 16 1900 P R 25 Miran v Beli Ram 1916 P L R 67 Sundar Singh v Pluman 2 Lah L J 415 but not to the Subordinate Judge's Court although appeals from the Munsiff's Court are generally transferred by the District Judge to the Subordinate Judge—Ram Charan v Taripulla 39 Cal 774 (Contra—2 Lah 57). But when under the law or by a notification certain appeals from the Munsiff's decrees lie to a first class Subordinate Judge the Munsiff will be deemed as subordinate not to the District Judge but to the 1st class subordinate Judge—1918 P R 29

Ramayya v Sukayya 28 M L J 486 followed in 2 Lah 57

The Commissioners Court at Santal Parganas is subordinate to the Court of the Commissioner of Bhagalpur and not to the High Court—30 Cal 916

A first class Magistrate is not subordinate to the District Magistrate but to the Sessions Judge—5 A L J 56 6 All 98 1902 P R 7 (over ruling 1901 P R 30) Aly Mchd v Emp 1912 P R 7 Ratanlal 511
In re Budiuddin 47 Bom 102 16 Cr L J 640 (Cr) Sant Ram v Dewan Chand 24 Cr L J 913

A single Judge on the original side of the High Court is subordinate to the Divisional Bench on the Appellate side hearing appeals from the judgment of the single Judge—Munisamy v Rajaratnam 45 Mad 928 (F B) Abhilash v Hyi Tar Mahomed 47 Bom 70

Where no appeals lie the original Civil Court will be deemed to be subordinate to the principal Court of original Civil jurisdiction. Thus the Provincial Small Cause Court is subordinate to the District Court—Chidda Lal v Bhajan Lal 39 All 657 (F B) Lalys v K E 4 P L J 609 Nisaran v Akshoj 21 C W N 948 Ram Dayal v Dwarka 20 O C 223 42 Ind Cas 593 (Burma) 37 Cal 13 (Contra—2 P L J 1 1 P L J 206) The Mamlatdars Court is subordinate to the District Judge—5 Bom L R 206 9 Bom L R 896 The Presidency Small Cause Court is subordinate to the High Court—Jainadas v Sabifah 35 Mad 138 Kalyanjee v Ram Deen 48 Mad 395 48 M L J 290 The village Munsiff is subordinate to the District Judge—6 A L J 796 It should be noted that the latter part of subsection (3) is now restricted to civil Courts only whereas under the old law it applied to any Court and the words used were the principal Court of original jurisdiction which included a Criminal and Revenue Court and therefore it was held that in respect of an execution proceeding in a Revenue Court under the Agra Tenancy Act from which no appeal lay the principal Court of original jurisdiction was the Collector—Ajudhsa v Ram Lal 34 All 197 The present law has made no provisions for such cases

632 Clause (a) —Where appeals lie to more than one Court the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction would be the Court to which the original Court must be deemed to be subordinate—8 N L R 57 Thus the Subordinate Judge would be held to be inferior to the District Judge and not to the High Court even though the appeal in the particular instance would lie to the High Court—2 Bom 481 11 Bom 438 So also the Recorder's Court at Rangoon is subordinate to the High Court for the purpose of this section though in the particular case the appeal may lie to the Privy Council—22 Cal 487

633 Clause (b) — or proceeding — These words have been added in deference to the opinion expressed by the Judges in Ajudhia Prosad v Ram Lal 34 All 197. In this case a suit was brought in the Court of the Assistant Collector for arrears of rent exceeding Rs 100, and in execution proceeding thereof certain false statements were made. The suit being one for rent exceeding Rs 100 was appealable but the execution proceeding was not appealable according to the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act. The question arose—to which Court was the Assistant Collector subordinate? and to determine this question it was necessary to decide whether clause (b) or clause (c) of sub section (7) of the old section was applicable. It was contended that since the case being one for rent exceeding Rs 100 was appealable (though the execution proceeding was not) clause (b) would apply but the Judges held that the word case in clause (b) included execution proceedings and since the execution proceeding in the present case was not appealable clause (b) could not apply as that clause applies only where an appeal lies. The case was therefore governed by clause (c) of sub section (7).

634 Subsection (4)—Abetment — A distinction has been drawn between the abetment of an offence mentioned in clause (b) of subsection (1) and the abetment of an offence mentioned in clause (c). Since clause (c) speaks only of offences committed by a party to the proceeding, it follows that no complaint by Court is necessary in respect of an abetment of an offence mentioned in clause (c) if the abettor was not a party to the proceeding—Imperor v Gianslan 32 All 74. But in the case of offences mentioned in clause (b) an abettor cannot be prosecuted without a previous complaint by the Court even though he was not a party to the proceeding, because no mention is made of a party to the proceeding in clause (b)—Ram Bilas v Lachmi Narain 45 All 140.

196 No Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under Chapter VI or IXA of the Indian Penal Code (except Section 127), or punishable under Section 108A, or Section 153A, or Section 294A, or Section 505 of the same Code, unless upon complaint made by order of, or under authority from, the Governor General in Council, the Local Government, or some officer empowered by the Governor General in Council in this behalf.

Change — The words or IXA have been added by sec 3 of Act XXXIX of 1920 (Election Offences and Inquiries Act)

634A A complaint of an offence under section 171E (falling under Chapter IXA) of the I P C requires a sanction under this section—Ponnusamy v Emp, 42 M L J 139 23 Cr L J 148

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to inquire into a complaint in respect of a false return of election expenses, unless the complaint is made by order of the Government—Labb Singh v Narinjan, 6 Lah 188 26 P L R 379 26 Cr L J 1234

635 Object of Section —The object of this section is to prevent unauthorised persons from intruding in matters of State by instituting State prosecutions and to secure that such prosecutions shall only be instituted under the authority of the Government—Queen Emp v Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 Bom 112

636 Complaint —A complaint which did not set forth the concrete facts relied on as constituting the offences but merely copied out the words of the sections of the Penal Code was held to be defective—16 C W N 1105 But it is not necessary that the complaint must consist of allegations made on oath or reduced to writing—Apurba Krishna Bose v Emp, 35 Cal 141 (151)

A letter of the Local Government according sanction for prosecution of a certain person under sec 121 I P C is not a complaint though it may be taken as an authority to make a complaint—Shamal Khan v Emp, 1890 P R 16 The person who signs the letter of authority is not the complainant and it is not necessary to take his examination under the law The person who armed with the authority makes the application to the Court for the apprehension of the accused is the complainant and his examination is to be taken—Apurba Krishna Bose v Emperor 35 Cal 141 (Bande Mataram case)

637 Order or authority —The sanction of the Local Government must be strictly proved according to the provisions contained in sec 78, Evidence Act, and the prisoner named in the sanction must be identified—1 Bur S R 389

Form and contents —This section does not prescribe any particular form of order and does not even require the order to be in writing No special mode is laid down in the Code whereby the order or sanction of Government is to be conveyed to the officer who puts the law in motion—Q E v Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 Bom 112 What the Court has to see is whether the complaint has been made by the order or under the authority of the Government—In re Subramania 32 Mad 3 In re Narayan Menon 25 Cr L J 701 A I R 1925 Mad 106 A telegram sent by the Government expressly authorising the Public Prosecutor to file a complaint against the accused for an offence under section 124A I P C is a perfectly valid authority—In re Varadarajulu Naidu 42 Mad 180

The sanction under this section need not be very particular about its contents, provided its meaning and intention are clear. Where the letter of authority sanctioning prosecution for sedition did not specify the name of the printer of the newspaper but he was indicated from the first and his name was supplied at the commencement of the Police Court proceedings, it was held that this was a sufficient compliance with the section—Apurba v Emp, 35 Cal 141. A sanction for the prosecution of the accused in the alternative for offences under section 121 or under section 121A is not defective on the ground that it does not specify with sufficient clearness the section or the offence in respect of which it is given—Puthen Veetil Kunhi v Emp, 42 M L J 108, 23 Cr L J 203. Where the persons to be prosecuted were named, the offences and the period of their activity specified and the particular sections of the Penal Code set out, the mere circumstance that these persons were not described as the members of the Revolutionary society the existence of which was sought to be proved at the trial did not affect the validity of the sanction—Pulin Behary Das v Emp, 16 C W N 1105, 13 Cr L J 609. In a prosecution for sedition, if the sanction contains the name of the printer, publisher, editor etc of the newspaper, the name of the newspaper, the offence committed and the particular section of the Penal Code and refers to 'certain articles' appearing in the newspaper, the fact that the sanction does not specify the exact article complained of does not make the sanction insufficient or invalid—Q E v Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 Bom 112. Where the sanction contained a misdescription of the article on which the prosecution was based, and this was rectified by a subsequent sanction filed in the course of the trial, it was held that the petitioner was not prejudiced and the defect was cured by sec 537—Apurba v Emp, 35 Cal 141.

It is not necessary that the actual words of the complaint should be sanctioned—In re Varadarajulu, 42 Mad 180. In re Subrahmanya Siva, 32 Mad 3.

Where the telegram sent by the Local Government expressly authorised the Public Prosecutor to file a complaint against V under sec 124A I P.C., and to act immediately if the District Magistrate thought it advisable after consulting him, and formally enjoined the District Magistrate to submit the complaint prepared for issue of supplemental sanction, 'held that the last sentence must be read apart from the first portion of the telegram, and did not limit the authority given, and that a complaint issued in pursuance of that telegram but without any supplemental sanction was not illegal—In re Varadarajulu Naidu, 42 Mad 180.

Where the authority to prosecute was not given to any one person, but the order sanctioning the prosecution was sent to the District Magistrate, the Public Prosecutor and the Addl. S.D.O., and a prosecution was initiated by the Addl. S.D.O., 'held that the fact that the order of authorisation was not sent to the determinate person did not affect the legality of the trial and that the alleged defect in the order was curable by sec 537 of the Code—In re Kully Moopan 44 M L J 166 Apurba v Emp 35 Cal 141 (151)

Signature—The authority under sec 196 need not in the case of a Local Government be signed personally by the Lieutenant Governor it is enough if it is signed by one of his accredited or Gazetted officers (e g the Chief Secretary in this case)—Apurba v Emp 35 Cal 141 The sanction must be signed by the Chief Secretary to the Government An order signed by the Deputy Secretary on behalf of the Chief Secretary is not legal—Orinulla v Beni Madhab 50 Cal 135

Local Government—The sanction must in order to satisfy the section have been the act of the Local Government and not of a single member of such Government—In re Varadarajulu Naidu 42 Mad 885

Where a sanction was duly given by the Local Government under this section and no objection was made thereto at the trial it was not open to the person convicted at the trial to challenge the sanction in appeal before the High Court on the ground that the Local Government granting the sanction was not legally constituted and had no authority to sanction the prosecution—Pulin Behari Das v Emp 16 C W N 1105 13 Cr L J 609

638 Want of sanction and complaint—Absence of sanction under this section vitiates the whole proceedings and the defect is not a mere irregularity curable by sec 537 A trial without sanction under sec 196 or 197 is illegal—31 Mad 80 1908 P R 8 Shamal Khan v Emp 1890 P R 16 1894 P R 42 A sanction given after the filing of the complaint does not fulfil the requirements of this section—In Varadarajulu Naidu 42 Mad 885 Barindra v Emp 37 Cal 467 Where there was no complaint or sanction of the Local Government the whole proceedings in the trial were without jurisdiction and the defect was not cured by the provision of Sec 537—Barindra v Emp 37 Cal 467 Where the law clearly says that it is a condition precedent to the prosecution that a sanction shall be obtained from the local Government it is not open to any subordinate authority to override the provision of the law by saying that the offence falls under another section of the Penal Code and that no sanction is necessary for the prosecution under that section—Ram Nath v K F 47 All 268 22 A L J 1106 A I R 1925 All 230

But where the accused was prosecuted upon a sanction of the Local Government without a formal complaint and no objection was taken to the absence or irregularity of the complaint at the trial the defect did not affect the trial and the irregularity or insufficiency of the complaint was cured by Sec 537—Sami Dayal v K E 1908 P R 8 Pulin Behari v Emp, 16 C W N 1105

639. Prosecution for other offences not mentioned in sanction —Where an order under section 196 authorised a particular Police officer to prefer a complaint of ' offences under secs 121A, 121 I P C or under any other section of the said Code which may be found applicable to the case and the Magistrate prosecuted the accused and committed him in respect of an offence under sec 121 I P C, it was held that since the offence under sec 121 required a sanction under this section and it was not specifically mentioned in the sanction the commitment in respect of an offence under sec 121 was illegal—Barindra v Emp 37 Cal 467 The reason is, that the power and discretion of determining whether cognizance shall be taken in respect of an offence mentioned in this section cannot be delegated by the Local Government to any other body of persons and if the Magistrate is allowed to prosecute a person for an offence referred to in this section when such offence was not specifically mentioned in the sanction, it means a delegation of power to the Magistrate which cannot be sustained—Ibid But a sanction under sec 124A authorises a prosecution under Secs 124A and 114 I P C—In re Subramania, 32 Mad 3

So also it is not illegal to prosecute without a sanction a person for an offence for which no sanction is necessary thus where a person has committed an offence under sec 122 I P C and by the same act abetted the offence of dacoity the fact that the Government refused sanction for the former offence would be no bar to his prosecution for the minor offence of abetting dacoity for which no sanction is necessary—25 Bom 90

196-A No Court shall take cognizance of the offence of Prosecution for criminal conspiracy punishable under certain cases of Section 120B of the Indian Penal criminal conspiracy Code

- (1) in a case where the object of the conspiracy is to commit either an illegal act other than an offence, or a legal act by illegal means or an offence to which the provisions of Section 196 apply, unless upon complaint made by order of or under authority from the Governor General in Council the Local Government or some officer empowered by the Governor General in Council in this behalf or
- (2) in a case where the object of the conspiracy is to commit any non cognizable offence or a cognizable offence not punishable with death, transportation or rigorous imprisonment for a term of two or upwards unless the Local Government, or a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate empowered in this behalf by the Local Government has by order in writing consented to the initiation of the proceedings

Provided that where the criminal conspiracy is one to which the provisions of sub section (4) of Section 195 apply, no such consent shall be necessary

640 Scope —This section applies only to a prosecution for conspiracy punishable under section 120B of the Penal Code and not for abetment by conspiracy punishable under section 109 of that Code—Abdul Salim v Emp 49 Cal 573 Abdul Rahman v Emp 3 Rang 95 26 Cr L J 1329

Initiating a prosecution under sec 120B I P C without the sanction of the authority referred to in section 196A Cr P Code is ab initio illegal and the subsequent addition of charges which do not require such sanction does not cure the illegality nor are the proceedings relating to such additional charges legal—Abdul Rahman v Emp 3 Rang 95

The proviso lays down that a sanction under this section for prosecution for criminal conspiracy to commit a non cognizable offence (e g fraudulently using as genuine a forged document or dishonestly making a false claim) is not necessary where the Court before which the forged document was used or false claim was made makes a complaint in respect of the offence under sub section (4) of section 195—Kali Singh v Emp 50 Cal 461 A I R 1924 Cal 53 24 Cr L J 949

196-B. In the case of any offence in respect of which the provisions of Section 196 or Section 196A apply a District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate may, notwithstanding any thing contained in those sections or in any other part of this Code order a preliminary investigation by a police officer not being below the rank of Inspector, in which case such police officer shall have the powers referred to in Section 155, sub section (3)

Preliminary inquiry
in certain cases

This section has been added by sec 49 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923)

This new section is designed to meet the difficulty which arises from the fact that cases under sections 196 and 196A cannot be properly investigated by the Police before complaints are made Doubts have arisen as to whether investigation can be ordered under section 155 (2) by a Magis trate without his taking cognizance of the case. The new section will provide for preliminary investigation. We recognise that it does not altogether meet the case where the desirability of adding a new charge arises in the Sessions Court. It has been suggested that this difficulty might be met to some extent by substituting the words 'proceed to the trial' for the words 'take cognizance' in sections 196 and 196A. But on the whole we prefer not to make this change and to leave the sections unaltered.—Report of the Joint Committee (1912)

197. (r) When any Judge or any public servant not removeable from his office

Prosecution of Judges and public servants

without the sanction of the Government of India or the Local Government, is accused as such Judge or public servant of any offence, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the Government having power to order his removal or of some officer empowered in this behalf by such Government or of some Court or other authority to which such Judge or public servant is subordinate, and whose power to give such sanction has not been limited by such Government.

197 (r) When any person who is a Judge within the meaning of Section 19 of the

Prosecution of Judges and public servants

Indian Penal Code, or when any Magistrate or when any public servant who is not removeable from his office save by or with the sanction of a Local Government or some higher authority is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the Local Government.

(2) Such Government may determine the person by whom,

Power of Government as to prosecution

the manner in which, the offence or offences for which, the prosecution of such Judge, Magistrate or public servant is to be conducted and may specify the Court before which the trial is to be held.

Change:—The whole of subsection (1) has been re-drafted by sec. 50 of the Crim Pro Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "It has been pointed out to us that difficulties with regard to section 197 have recently come to light. There are certain public servants who are only removable from office by the Secretary of State, and it is unreasonable that they should obtain no protection under the section. Further, in view of section 2 (2) of the Code, the word 'Judge' has to be interpreted according to the definition given in section 19 of the Indian Penal Code, with the result that Magistrates acting in certain capacities under the Code, e g., when holding inquiries, obtain no protection. We have therefore, proposed a re-draft of sub section (1) of section 197 to meet these difficulties. We have confined the operation of the section to public servants removable by a Local Government or some higher authority and have provided that the sanction required for a prosecution will be the sanction of the Local Government'—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

'While acting official duty'—These words have been substituted for the words 'as such Judge or public servant' occurring in the old section in order to amplify the words and to make the sense clear—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

641. Judge—In section 19 of the Indian Penal Code, the word 'Judge' has been thus defined—

'The word Judge denotes not only every person who is officially designated as a Judge, but also every person who is empowered by law to give, in any legal proceeding, civil or criminal, a definitive judgment, or a judgment which, if not appealed against, would be definitive, or a judgment which, if confirmed by some other authority, would be definitive; or who is one of a body of persons, which body of persons is empowered by law to give such judgment

"Illustrations—A Collector exercising jurisdiction under the Tenancy Act, a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in respect of which he has power to pass sentence, or to commit for trial, a member of a panchayet who has power to try and determine suits"

A village Magistrate exercising jurisdiction and trying an offender under Regulation IX of 1816 is a Judge within the meaning of this section, but a village Magistrate who is merely preventing an altercation and suppressing a riot (and not trying any offender) is not a Judge—Kandassami v Soli Goundan, 23 Mad 540. But a Magistrate is now specifically mentioned in the present section. A village Munsiff trying a Civil suit and ordering attachment before judgment is acting as a Judge—Sankaralinga v Avudai, 17 Cr L J 394 (Mad). A Magistrate of a Village Panchayet constituted by Madras Act II of 1920 is a Judge—42 M. L. J. 139.

642. Public Servant—Any person, whether receiving pay or not, who chooses to take upon himself the duties and responsibilities belonging to the position of a public servant and performs those duties and accepts those responsibilities, and is recognised as filling the position of a public servant, must be regarded as such. A volunteer in Tahsildar's office is a public servant—8 All 201. A Committing Magistrate is a public servant,—6 M H C R App 51. A chairman of a Union Committee is not a person removeable from his office only by the Local Government, and no sanction of the Local Government is necessary for his prosecution—Md Yasin v. Emp., 52 Cal 431. 29 C W N 650. 26 Cr L J 1178. A member of the District Board is a public servant who is not removeable except with the sanction of the Local Government—A. E. v. Krishna Kant, 28 O C 155. 12 O L J 498. 26 Cr L J 1157. The Chairman of a Municipality is a public servant—In re Chairman of Municipal Council, Ellore, 2 Weir 243. So also a Chairman of a Union Panchayet—Sh Abdul Kadir v. Emp., 1916 M W N 384. A Municipal Commissioner is a public servant—1890 P R 14. see also illustration to Sec 21 I P Code. But every Municipal Commissioner is not a public servant within the meaning of this section. The Court should not, without any reliable evidence on the record, assume that every Municipal Commissioner is not removeable from his office without the sanction of the Local Government—Nathu v. Md Baksh, 1916 P W R 48. 18 Cr L J 106. But a Municipal Corporation (e g the Calcutta Municipality) is not a public servant and may be prosecuted like a private person without a sanction—3 Cal 758. So also, no sanction is necessary to prosecute a Municipal Chairman Delegate for acts done by him in that capacity because the protection afforded by this section does not extend to a person to whom a public servant may delegate a portion of his powers—2 Weir 226. A Municipal Secretary is not a public servant and no sanction is necessary for his prosecution—Kishen v. Girdhars 23 Cr L J 750 (Lah). If a Municipal Commissioner acts as the Honorary Secretary of the Municipality and commits an offence in his capacity as Secretary, held that although a Municipal Commissioner cannot be prosecuted without the sanction of the Local Government still when he was acting as secretary and committed the wrong in that capacity, no sanction is necessary—Kishen Singh v. Girdhars A I R 1924 Lah 310. A Forest Ranger in the C P is not a public servant not removeable without the sanction of the Local Government—Kripa Singh v. Emp., 23 Cr L J 397 (Nag).

643. 'Not removeable from his office.'—The words "not removeable from his office" etc have reference only to the expression "public servant" and not to "Judge". This is now made clear by the wording of the present section. So the sanction of the Government is necessary for the prosecution of any Judge, if a complaint is made against him as such Judge, whether he is or is not removeable from the office without the sanction of the Government—6 M H C R App 21.

The following public servants are removable without the sanction of the Government and no sanction is necessary in respect of their prosecution—a Police Patel in Bombay—4 Bom 357 an Excise Inspector in U P (who is removable from his office by the Excise Commissioner)—Jalaluddin v Emp 24 A L J 230 27 Cr L J 345 A I R 1926 All 271 a Sub overseer in the Mauras Presidency—In re Reddy Venkayya 12 M L T 351 13 Cr L J 770

The Chairman of a Union Panchayet is a public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Local Government even though the power to remove has been delegated by the Government to the President of the District Board. The delegation of the power of removal means only that the Local Government itself performs that act through the medium of a particular officer (President of the District Board) as the channel through which it is done. It is an ordinary case of qui facit per alium facit per se—Sh Abd ul Kadir v Emp 1916 M W N 384 17 Cr L J 168

644 Acting in the discharge of official duty.—These words have been substituted for the words as such Judge or public servant occurring in the old section and from a comparison of the old and the new sections it seems that the language of the present section has been made simpler. Under the Code of 1872 the language used in the section (466) was committed in his capacity of a public servant : & the section applied only to those acts which could have no special significance except as act done by a public servant—Imp v Lakshman 2 Bom 481. It applied only to those offences committed by a public servant which were peculiar to his position as a public servant (per Pontifex J) the section was intended to apply to those cases in which the offence charged was an offence which could be committed by a public servant only : & those cases in which the fact of his being a public servant was a necessary element in the offence (per Field J)—Sreemantha Chatterjee (unreported case of the Calcutta High Court 9 12 1881) cited in 26 Cal 852 at p 860. Under the Codes of 1882 and 1898 the language of the section was as such Judge or public servant and it indicated that the offence charged must involve as one of its elements that it was committed by a person filling that character and therefore where a Magistrate used insulting and defamatory language towards a pleader in the course of a trial no sanction was held to be necessary for the prosecution of the Magistrate as the position of his being a Magistrate was not a necessary element in the offence of defamation—Nando Lal Basak v Miller 26 Cal 852 followed in Empress v Ghulam Kader Khan 13 C P L R 126. Where a Judge or Magistrate or Public servant commits an offence which could be committed by anybody and which entails consequences neither in the way of penalty nor anything else in the least different from what it would entail if committed by any body else, sanction is not required under this section for his prosecution. Therefore, where the Chairman of a Union Panchayet was prosecuted for the offence of criminal breach of trust in respect of Union funds held that the offence was not one which was committed by him in his capacity of a public servant to necessitate a previous sanction under this section—In re Sheikb Abdul Kadir, 1916 M W N 384 17 Cr L J 168. Where a Magistrate used abusive language towards another Magistrate while both of them were trying a case as members of a Bench, it was held that no sanction was necessary to prosecute the former because the offence was not committed as Magistrate ie, the fact of his being a Magistrate was not a necessary element of the offence—In re Harlekar, 2 Bom L R 1079. So also where the superintendent of the Gun Carriage Factory in Madras caused timber to be brought within the city of Madras without a license as required by section 341 of the Madras Act I of 1884 (City of Madras Municipal Act) held that no sanction was necessary to prosecute him as the offence was not one which could be committed by a public servant only, nor did it involve as one of its elements that it had been committed by a public servant—Municipal Commissioners v Major Bell 25 Mad 15. Where a Union Chairman while removing an obstruction to a public thoroughfare caused by the complainant used insulting and abusive language towards the latter, no sanction was held to be necessary for the prosecution of the Chairman as it could not be said to be a part of the functions of a Union Chairman to use abusive language in a public street—In re Abdul Rahiman 4 L W 556 17 Cr L J 46. A Magistrate or a judicial officer who was holding a trial could not be said to be acting in a judicial capacity if he abused or defamed a witness or a legal practitioner appearing before him—Baishnab Charan v Sukhomoy 25 C W N 957.

These cases though correctly decided under the old Codes would be of no authority now as the language of the present section materially differs from the language of the old law. Under the present section it will not be necessary to decide whether the fact of the accused being a Judge or a public servant was a necessary element in the offence or whether the offence was one which could not have been equally committed by a private person. These nice questions would no longer arise and if it is found that the Judge, Magistrate or public servant has committed an act at a time when he was doing an official duty this will be sufficient to attract the provisions of this section. In other words the Legislature has now given a greater protection to the officers concerned than it did under the old section.

Where a village Magistrate uses his authority and position as a public servant to constrain a person to give a bribe sanction is necessary for his prosecution—In re Manapathi Naidu - Wen 2-1. Where a Judge used

See also 8 B H C R 32 cited in Note 648 below But where the order granted sanction for an offence under sec 161 I P C or any other section of the Code that may be found applicable with respect to the offence briefly described in the schedules hereto annexed it was held that the order was no delegation because the order granting sanction had specified the acts committed by the accused and had also specified the offence and the section of the I P C and it merely left it open to the Court to convict the accused under any other section if in the opinion of the Court some other section of the I P C was more relevant than section 161—Girdhari Lal v Emp, 1911 P R 11

Sanction for abetment —Where a sanction has been granted to prosecute a person for a substantive offence no fresh sanction is necessary to prosecute him for abetting that offence when the conviction for abetment is based on the same facts as those on which the charge for the substantive offence is founded—30 Cal 905

Form of sanction —The Code does not prescribe any particular form of sanction under this section—In re Kalagava 27 Mad 54 A letter addressed to the Magistrate is a sufficient sanction—Ratanlal 32, 30 Cal 905 Non specification of the place in which and the occasion on which the offence was committed does not affect the validity of the sanction—

In re Kalagava 27 Mad 54 The order granting sanction need not specify the offence with the same precision as is necessary in a charge—13 C W N 1062 Thus where the Kulkarnis and the Patel of a village were charged with cheating in as much as they conspired to levy extra amounts of money from three persons who came to pay the land assessment and the sanction was given for prosecution for cheating or for such other offence with which it may be necessary to prosecute them in connection with obtaining money from the ryots it was held that the sanction was not invalid for vagueness in as much as it had sufficiently designated the offence or offences which might be established in connection with obtaining money from ryots —Emp v Madhav 43 Bom 147 20 Bom L R 607 20 Cr L J 71

Since the action of the sanctioning authority is more of the nature of executive than of judicial action the sanction need not state any reasons —Chinna Chendrayya v Subbarayudu (1923) M W N 77 24 Cr L J 116

Notice to accused —A sanction under this section is not void for want of notice to the accused to show cause why it should not be given The giving of such opportunity is entirely at the discretion of the Government and the Criminal Court before which he is prosecuted is not an appellate authority over the Government in the matter of sanction—In re Kalagava, 27 Mad 54

Inquiry by Government before sanction —There is no provision of law empowering the Government or an officer of the Government to hold a judicial inquiry in order to ascertain whether or not he ought to grant sanction under this section and any inquiry which he may hold for this purpose is merely a departmental inquiry consequently no oath can be administered to any person examined in course of such inquiry nor can any person be prosecuted for giving false evidence therein—Q E v Venkatarawanna 23 Mad 223

The Government granting sanction under sections 196 and 197 acts purely in its executive and not judicial capacity and the sanction need not be based on legal evidence There is nothing in the significance of the word sanction to import a judicial element into the act of the executive—In re Kalagata 17 Mad 54

647 Want of sanction —The sanction required by this section must be obtained before any proceedings are taken Proceedings taken without sanction are illegal and without jurisdiction—Emp v Bhimaji 40 Bom 172 Q E v Morton 9 Bom 188 Even a sanction obtained subsequently will not validate the proceedings—9 Bom 188 42 Bom 172 Where no sanction has been granted by the Local Government the Magistrate cannot proceed with the case merely relying on a Government Resolution and yielding to the wishes of the parties—Emp v Bhimaji 40 Bom 172 40 Bom L R 89 19 Cr I J 342 But in an earlier Bom bay case it has been held that if no objection to the absence of sanction is taken at the inquiry or trial the proceedings will not be necessarily invalid for want of sanction Where in a commitment without any previous sanction having been obtained under this section no objection was taken as to want of sanction at the preliminary inquiry the Sessions Judge can in his discretion under sec 532 accept the commitment and proceed with the trial—Q E v Morton 9 Bom 288 But it is doubtful whether sec 532 contemplates absence of sanction

648 Subsection (2) —Government's direction as to prosecution —The Local Government has power under this section to authorise some particular person to prefer charges against a public servant and when it has limited the manner in which the prosecution is to be launched the specification should be adhered to Thus where in the resolution sanctioning the prosecution of a public servant for corrupt practices the Government directed that a particular person should prefer the charges against the public servant the conviction on charges preferred by a person other than the one specified was illegal and the result would also be the same if the authorised person had delegated the function to some other person —Reg v Vinayak 8 B H C R 32

Specification of Court —The power given by sec 197 () overrides the general rule contained in sec 177 that an offence shall be ordinarily tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed Where the Local Government sanctioned the prosecution of a per son who committed an offence in Upper Burma, and specified a Court in Lower Burma for the trial of such person, it was held that the Court in Lower Burma was competent 'to take cognizance of the offence and was wrong in holding that it had no power to receive the complaint—K. E. v. Maung Ka, 4 L. B. R. 265. This shows that the Local Government can specify any Court irrespective of local jurisdiction.

Where the Local Government sanctioned the prosecution of a Sub-Judge and specified the Sessions Court of Tellicherry as the Court which should try the offence and appointed Mr. Irvine as the officiating Sessions Judge, and subsequently by another order of Government Mr. Irvine was appointed as the Additional Sessions Judge and he tried the case, it was held that the trial was not invalid, for though Mr. Irvine was appointed as the Additional Sessions Judge still his appointment did not constitute an Additional Sessions Court. His Court was still the Sessions Court of which he was an Additional Sessions Judge, and since an Additional Sessions Judge is competent to try those cases which the Local Government may direct and since Mr. Irvine was directed by the Local Government to try the case when he was first appointed as officiating Sessions Judge, he was competent to try the case—Q. E. v. Kunjan, 1 M. L. J. 397.

Where the Local Government has specified a particular Court, such specification will supersede all power of transfer conferred on the High Court under sec. 526—Nando Lal v. Mitter, 26 Cal. 852 (at p. 862). See sub-section (7) of sec. 526.

649. Revision.—Under the old law, if an offence was committed by an Honorary Presidency Magistrate a sanction for his prosecution could be granted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the High Court had power under sec. 15 of the Charter Act (though not under sec. 439 of this Code) to interfere with an order granting or refusing sanction under sec. 197—Nando Lal v. Mitter, 26 Cal. 852. But under the present law, the power of granting or refusing sanction lies only with the Local Government, and the High Court will have no power to interfere even under the Charter Act.

Even under the old law, it was held in a Lahore case that the granting of sanction being an executive rather than a judicial act, the High Court had no power to interfere with the proceedings of a District Judge granting sanction for the prosecution of a Sub-Judge—Ali Hussain Khan v. Harcharan, 2 Lah. 305. 1922 P. L. R. 35. 23 Cr. L. J. 113.

198. No Court shall take cognizance of an offence falling under Chapter XIX or Chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code or under Sections 493 to 496 (both inclusive) of the same Prosecution for breach of contract or defamations or offences against marriage.

Code, except upon a complaint made by some person aggrieved by such offence

Provided that where the person so aggrieved is a woman who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public, or where such person is under the age of eighteen years or is an idiot or lunatic or is from sickness or infirmity unable to make a complaint, some other person may, with the leave of the Court, make a complaint on his or her behalf

Chapter XL (comprising sections 490-492) of the I P Code relates to criminal breach of contracts of service Chapter XLI (comprising sections 499-502) relates to Defamation Sections 493-496 deal with offences relating to marriage

Change —The proviso has been added by section 51 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

650 Necessity of complaint —A Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he takes cognizance of a charge of defamation without complaint So where a postcard written by the accused to the complainant containing a defamatory matter was privately handed over by the latter to the Magistrate without a complaint held that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in stating a criminal prosecution thereon—Abdulla v Clarke 1909 P W R 3 9 Cr L J 154

Magistrate's power to add or alter charge —When a complaint presented to the Magistrate contained only charges under sections 357 and 304 I P C but did not contain a charge under section 300 I P C (defamation) but that charge was subsequently added by the Magistrate on statements made by the complainant it was held that the Magistrate could not add the charge of defamation or take cognizance of it as there was no formal complaint in respect of it such as is required by this section—Q E v Deohi Nandan 10 All 39 So also the Magistrate cannot alter a charge under section 301 I P C to one under section 300 I P C when there was no formal complaint by the person aggrieved in respect of the latter offence—Crown v Uma Shankar 1889 P R 18

But a more liberal view has been taken in the cases noted below Thus in a Punjab case where a complaint was made to the Magistrate under sec 211 I P C that the accused had made a false charge against him (complainant) of poisoning his daughter in law with a view to injure his reputation but the Magistrate treated the case as one under sec 300 I P C and tried it so it was held that having regard to the substance of the complaint the Magistrate was competent to alter the complaint under sec 211 I P C to one under sec 300 I P C when in fact the complaint was preferred by the aggrieved person—Nur Aslam v Emp, son who committed an offence in Upper Burma, and specified a Court in Lower Burma for the trial of such person, it was held that the Court in Lower Burma was competent to take cognizance of the offence and was wrong in holding that it had no power to receive the complaint—K E v Maung Ka, 4 L B R 265 This shows that the Local Government can specify any Court in respect of local jurisdiction

650 Necessity of complaint —A Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he takes cognizance of a charge of defamation without complaint So where a postcard written by the accused to the complainant containing a defamatory matter was privately handed over by the latter to the Magistrate without a complaint held that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in starting a criminal prosecution thereon—Abdulla v Clarke 1909 P W R 39 Cr L J 154

Magistrate's power to add or alter charge —When a complaint presented to the Magistrate contained only charges under sections 357 and 504 I P C but did not contain a charge under section 500 I P C (defamation) but that charge was subsequently added by the Magistrate on statements made by the complainant it was held that the Magistrate could not add the charge of defamation or take cognizance of it as there was no formal complaint in respect of it such as is required by this section—Q E v Deoki Nandan 10 All 39 So also the Magistrate cannot alter a charge under section 501 I P C to one under section 500 I P C when there was no formal complaint by the person aggrieved in respect of the latter offence—Crown v Uma Shankar 1889 P R 18

P. R 24 The principle is that a complaint need not state precisely the section of the Penal Code under which the accused shall be charged, it is enough if the complainant lays before the Magistrate the facts which if proved would warrant a commitment under any of the sections referred to in this section—Emp v Ali, 25 All 209 Thus where the husband of a woman who had committed bigamy made a complaint to the Magistrate alleging facts which seemed to constitute an offence under sec 498 I P C but in the subsequent inquiry it appeared that an offence under sec 494 I P C was committed, it was held that the Court could take cognizance of the offence under sec 494 I P C without a fresh complaint formally preferred under that section—Emp v Ali, 25 All 209, In re Ujjala, 1 C L R 523 This section is clearly designed to prevent Magistrates from inquiring on their own motion into a case connected with marriage unless the husband or other person authorised moves them to do so, but when the case is once properly instituted before the Magistrate, he can proceed in respect of any other offence proved or against any other person implicated—In re Ujjala, 1 C L R 523

Power of Appellate Court to alter charge—An appellate Court can under sec 423 alter a conviction under one section into one under another section and in doing so it is not bound by such restrictions as for instance, a complaint by the aggrieved person Thus, it can convert a conviction under sec 182 I P C into one under sec 500 I P C notwithstanding that there was no complaint in respect of the latter offence by the aggrieved person as required by this section—Emp v Gur Narain, 25 All 534

651 Abetment—A Magistrate taking cognizance of abetment of the offences mentioned in this section must be deemed to have taken cognizance of the substantive offences and therefore a complaint by the aggrieved person is a condition precedent to the taking cognizance of the abetment—Jitmal v Emp 1888 P R 4 But the Allahabad High Court holds that sec 198 does not apply to a charge of abetment of the offences mentioned therein Section 193 provides in express terms that a complaint is needed for a prosecution for the abetment of the offences mentioned therein or for an attempt to commit them No such provision is contained in sec 198, and it cannot therefore be said that the charge of abetment of the offences referred to therein is excluded from cognizance without a complaint by the person aggrieved by such abetment—Munir v K L, A I R. 1926 All 189 24 A L J 155 27 Cr L J 101

652 Person aggrieved—Defamation—The question as to whether the complainant is the person 'aggrieved' by the offence alleged, within the meaning of this section is to be determined by the nature of the offence and the special circumstances of each case—3 C L J 38 In the case of a married woman, it was held in an earlier Punjab case that since under

sec. 499 I P C the reputation to be harmed must be the reputation of the very person concerning whom the imputation is made, a husband could not be considered to have been harmed in his reputation by a defamatory statement concerning his wife—Daood v Emp 1884 P R 22. But the other High Courts are of opinion that the reputation of the husband is so intimately connected with that of his wife that it would be unreasonable to hold that the defamation of his wife (e g imputation of unchastity) would ordinarily be not as hurtful to his feelings as it is to those of his wife. Therefore the husband is undoubtedly a person aggrieved by the defamation of his wife—Chellam v Ramasami, 14 Mad 379 Chotalil v Nathabai 25 Bom 151 (F B), Emp v Lachman, 1882 P R 20, Anantha v K E, 15 M L J 224, Appanna v Akkanna 27 M L J 746 26 Cr L J 521 Gurdit Singh v Crown, 5 Lah 301 25 Cr L J 342 1 Weir 231. If, however the husband is a lunatic and the woman is living in the house and under the protection of her father in law, any allegation against the daughter in-law seriously affects the reputation and status in society of the father in law, and he is a person aggrieved within the meaning of this section and is competent to institute a complaint—Daem Sardar v Balu Dhal, 3 C L J 38 (This is now expressly provided by the recent amendment) Where a Hindu lady is living with her father, brother or son, she is a member of that family and her reputation is bound up with the reputation of the person in whose house and under whose charge she is living and any imputation as to her character will affect as much the relative with whom she is living as herself. Therefore the brother of a Hindu widow, with whom she has been living is an aggrieved person in respect of an imputation of unchastity made against the woman—Thakur Das v. Adhar Chandra, 32 Cal 425 In Masuria Din v Jagannath, 1893 A W N 207, however, it has been held that the son is not an aggrieved person in respect of a defamation of his mother. In a Bombay case also it was held that only the female herself, and not a male relative of hers could make a complaint for defamation under this section—Ratanlal 327. But under the proviso newly added by the Amendment Act of 1923 any friend or relative of the female will now be able to make the complaint with the leave of the Court.

Where certain allegations made in a newspaper against A and certain others were true as regards A but untrue as regards the others, it was held that A was not the person aggrieved by the publication of the allegations—Subraya v Kader Routhen 1914 M W N 351 15 C L J 357.

The complaint in respect of defamation must be made by the person aggrieved and cannot be preferred by his official superior. Thus where a police officer has been defamed a complaint by his official superior on the ground that the good name of the police force has been attacked, cannot be entertained—Gaya v King Emp, 20 O C 43 23 Cr L J 641. Where a newspaper published statements, which were alleged to be defamatory, of specific acts of negligence on the part of the Health Officer and his subordinates, it was held that the President of the Municipality was not a person aggrieved within the meaning of this section merely because he had a control over those officers, and that by the imputation made against his subordinates, his own conduct and administration had not been impugned—Beauchamp v Moore, 26 Mad 43

The words 'person aggrieved' in case of defamation must be treated as equivalent to "person injured," the object of the section being to limit the right of complaint to the person who suffered injury. Therefore, the founder of a monastery is incapable of making a complaint in respect of a defamatory statement affecting the moral character of a certain Pongyi who presided over the monastery—1 Bur S R 617

Death of complainant in defamation—The death of the complainant, during the course of the criminal proceedings for defamation, necessarily terminates those proceedings—Iskar Das v K E 1908 P R 10

Person aggrieved by bigamy—In the case of an offence of bigamy committed by the wife, the husband is the only person aggrieved by such offence, and he alone can make the complaint. The father of the husband is not the "person aggrieved"—32 All 78, so also the brother of the husband is not the person aggrieved—Emp v Imtiazan, 25 All 132, 10 Bom 340, Hanuman v King Emp, 11 O C 148

Prior to the present amendment it was held that if the husband of the girl who committed bigamy was a minor, his mother was not competent to make a complaint as she was not the person aggrieved—In re Sessions Judge, 2 Weir 231 it was also held that if the husband was a lunatic, his brother could not make a complaint on his behalf—26 Cal 336 These two cases are now rendered obsolete by the proviso newly added in this section.

199. No Court shall take cognizance of an offence under

Prosecution for adultery or enticing a married woman.	Section 497 or Section 498 of the Indian Penal Code, except upon a complaint made by the husband of the woman, or in his absence, made with the leave of the Court by some person who had care of such woman on his behalf at the time when such offence was committed;
---	---

Provided that, where such husband is under the age of eighteen years, or is an idiot or lunatic, or is from sickness or infirmity unable to make a complaint, some other person may, with the leave of the Court, make a complaint on his behalf.

Sec 497 I P C—Adultery. Section 498—Enticing or taking away or detaining with criminal intent a married woman

Change —The italicised words have been added by sec 57 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

Object of section —The restriction imposed in this section (empowering only the husband or the guardian to make the complaint) is not to afford immunity or protection to the offender but to prevent a person unconnected with the woman from giving publicity to a matter which neither the husband nor the guardian is willing to agitate—In re Rathua Padayachi 17 Cr L J 363 (Mad)

653 Scope of section —The only offences referred to in this section are offences under secs 497 and 498 I P C but a charge of house trespass with intent to commit adultery is not contemplated by this section and such an offence may be inquired into without complaint by the husband of the woman concerned although a prosecution for the offence of adultery must be instituted by the husband alone—Anonymous 1 Weir 531 Where the complainant charged the accused with house trespass with intent to commit theft but it appeared that he committed house trespass with intent to commit adultery with the complainant's wife he could be convicted of the latter offence although the complainant had not made a formal complaint for that offence—O E v Kangla 23 All 82 Em v Dhauntua Lodhi 19 Cr L J 881 So also where the accused admitted that he had entered the house at night for the purpose of carrying on an intrigue with the complainant's wife but the complainant refused to charge the accused with having entered the house with intent to commit the offence of adultery but founded his complaint solely on the entry having been with intent to commit theft which was found to be false it was held that the Magistrate had the power to convict the accused of house trespass with intent to commit adultery even though the husband refused to make that charge—Anonymous 5 M H C R App 5 1 Weir 532 But the Magistrate in this case dismissed the charge as the husband refused to lay that complaint

But in another Allahabad case where the complainant charged the accused with house trespass with intent to commit theft but the accused stated that he had gone there to have sexual intercourse with a woman and the accused was convicted for house trespass with intent to commit adultery held that the conviction was injudicious in the absence of a complaint by the husband of the woman—Gump v Harcharan 1896 A W N 42

654 Complaint —The complaint referred to in this section means a complaint as defined in sec 4 (h) A Magistrate is not competent to entertain a case under sec 498 I P C on the report of a police officer, in the absence of a complaint by the husband or guardian of the woman alleged to have been enticed away by the accused—Bhana v Crown 1910 P R 32 Information lodged by the complainant before the police is not a complaint sufficient to warrant a conviction under secs 497 and 498 I P C—Tara Prosad v Emp 30 Cal 910 Emp v Khushal Singh 17 C P L R 105 In re Chidambara 2 Weir 235 Arumuga v Gangabai 43 M L J 564 23 Cr L J 397 But where on a charge under sec 366 I P C the Police took up the proceeding in which the husband appeared as a witness and he asked the Magistrate to drop the proceeding there under but said that he intended to prosecute the accused under sec 498 I P C and to get him punished it was held that there was a complaint in as much as he made an allegation before the Magistrate that the offence should be inquired into—Bhanani v Emp 14 A L J 733 8 All 76 17 Cr L J 72

If the husband brings a complaint of any other offence and from certain statements in his deposition it appears that an offence mentioned in this section has been committed no conviction for the latter offence can be sustained because the husband has not made a formal complaint of that offence Thus where the husband preferred against the accused a complaint of rape on his wife but not of adultery and certain statements in his deposition disclosed an offence of adultery a conviction for the latter offence was illegal in as much as the husband had not preferred a formal complaint of adultery even the circumstance of the husband appearing as a witness in the case could not be regarded as amounting to the institution of a complaint for adultery Emp v Kali 5 All 233 Cleman v Emp 29 Cal 415 Rajmatulla v Emp 1883 P R 10 Similarly where the accused was charged with offences under secs 366 and 379 I P C but from statements in the deposition of the husband of the woman concerned an offence under sec 498 I P C was made out and the Judge convicted him of that offence it was held that the conviction was illegal in the absence of a formal complaint by the husband in respect of that offence and the statements made by the husband in his deposition could not be said to be a complaint under sec 4 (h) of this Code Emp v Iman Khan 14 Bom L R 141 13 Cr L J 287 Even the formal assent of the husband to a charge of adultery added at the end of his deposition would not probably be a formal compliance with this section—Q v Lucky Narain 24 W R 18 Where a husband charged the accused persons with theft and theft only they could not be convicted of an offence under sec 498 I P C as there was no complaint preferred by the husband under this section in respect of the latter offence—Roda Singh v Crown 1918 P R 2 19 Cr I J 300

The complaint referred to in this section is a complaint of the specific offence mentioned in this section and not a complaint of any offence Where a person was charged with kidnapping or with abduction and the

Judge convicted the accused on the evidence of an offence under sec 498 I P C held that the conviction was wrong as there was no specific complaint of an offence under sec 498 I P C—Danguru Asari v Emp 27 Mad 61 Where the accused was charged only with the offence of kidnapping a minor girl and theft of jewels and there was no complaint that the accused's purpose was to have illicit intercourse with the girl the Magistrate could not take cognizance of an offence under sec 498 I P C—In re Arunachalam 45 M L J 543 So also where a complaint was made of an offence under secs 494 and 498 I P C the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the accused for an offence under sec 497 I P C—Q E v Na'ja Ratanlal 531 Emp v Badan 1881 A W N 112 Similarly a Magistrate cannot convict a person of an offence under sec 498 I P C when the complaint was for an offence under sec 497 I P C—12 C W N 111 A committing Magistrate cannot alter a charge of rape into one of adultery on the representation of the accused without any request on the part of the husband of the woman—Emp v Ram Bahsh 1887 A W N 163 Where a charge of rape brought against the accused was found untrue held that in the absence of a complaint by the husband the Court cannot on the same evidence take cognizance of the offence of adultery—Nga Po v King Lmp U B R (1912) 4th Qr 155 14 Cr L J 84

Contra—Ratanlal 584 where it was held that the word complaint must be taken as including not only a written complaint but also the examination of the complainant at any rate prior to the issue of process there ore where the written complaint did not disclose an offence under sec 498 I P C but the complainant's examination made out such an offence the Magistrate had jurisdiction to try such offence And in Jatra Seikk v Reazet 20 Cal 483 it was laid down that upon a complaint in respect of an offence under section 366 I P C a conviction under sec 498 I P C could stand even in the absence of a complaint by the husband if his evidence was such as to justify the conviction for the latter offence In a recent case the Madras High Court is also of opinion that for the purpose of ascertaining the complaint under this section the written complaint as well as the sworn statement may be read together—In re Arunachalam 45 M L J 543 24 Cr L J 837

Similarly the Court cannot add a charge of an offence referred to in this section without a formal complaint in respect of that charge by the person specified Where the accused was committed to the Sessions on charges under secs 363 and 366 I P C and at the conclusion of the evidence to establish these charges the Sessions Court added a charge under sec 498 I P C and convicted the accused on all the three charges it was held that the procedure adopted by the Sessions Judge was not regular that the additional charge was prejudicial to the accused and that the conviction under section 498 I P C must be set aside—Lmp v Isap Md, 31 Bom -18

655 Who can complain —The only person who can prefer a complaint of an offence referred to in this section is the husband of the woman. The husband is entitled to make the complaint even though the marriage has been dissolved before the complaint if the offence was committed before the marriage was dissolved—Dhanna Singh v Crown 1922 P W R 16 23 Cr L J 462

In the absence of the husband the complaint may be made by any person having the care of the woman. Thus the mother of the husband who was in charge of the wife during the absence of the husband is competent to prefer a complaint of an offence under sec 498 I P C against the person who abducts the wife—Malbub Ali v Lmp 24 Cr L J 780 (Lah). Where at the time of the offence the wife was left under the care of her father the fact that the husband stands by will not prevent the father from preferring the complaint—In re Rathna 17 Cr L J 363 (Mad). Mir Alam v Lmp 5 Lah L J 183 23 Cr L J 690. The absence must be from the place and therefore where the complaint was preferred by the nephew of the husband when the latter was bed ridden with paralysis it was held that the Court could not take cognizance of the offence—Crown v Tikhomal 3 S L R 15. But this ruling is no longer correct in view of the words 'sickness or infirmity' occurring in the proviso newly added.

If the husband be a minor he can be represented by another in a prosecution for adultery. See the proviso (The contrary view taken in 2 Weir 235 will no longer stand as good law). Thus if the husband is a minor the complaint may be lodged by the husband's father but if at the time of the offence the minor husband was absent (i.e. not living with the wife under the same roof) and the wife was living with her maternal uncle then the only person who could make the complaint was the maternal uncle (as having charge of the woman on her husband's behalf) but not the husband's father—Wallia v Lmp 23 Cr L J 613 (Lah).

The husband can even though he is a minor make the complaint and there is nothing in law to prevent him from doing so—Wallia v Lmp 23 Cr L J 613 (Lah). Even the proviso newly enacted will not debar the minor husband himself from lodging the complaint for the proviso is merely an enabling provision.

656 Miscellaneous —Death of husband—effect —The law only requires that the prosecution on a charge of adultery should be instituted by the husband. But it cannot be said that the death of the husband after institution of the prosecution but before trial necessarily puts an end to the prosecution although it is desirable that the charge should be with drawn by the prosecution on the death of the aggrieved party—Anonymus 4 M H C R App 55 2 Weir 235 Imp v Nur Mahomed 1 S L R 72

Where proceedings were dropped during the lifetime of the husband it is not open to any person after the husband's death to revive the proceedings—In re Rukhsari 16 Cr L J 166 (Mad)

Withdrawal of case by husband—If the complainant withdraws the charge before commitment to the Sessions the Court can discharge the accused but a withdrawal after commitment will not have such effect because a commitment once made by a competent Magistrate can be quashed only by the High Court and only on a point of law—4 All 150

Acquittal for want of proper complaint—Fresh complaint—Where the brother of the husband of the woman instituted a complaint under sec 498 I P C alleging that he had authority from the husband to prefer the complaint but after taking evidence the Magistrate held that the complainant had no authority and acquitted the accused and subsequently the husband himself instituted the complaint it was held that the previous acquittal was no bar to a fresh trial—Um ruddin v Imp 6 A L J 66 31 All 317 Imp v Tiharam 17 Bom L R 678 16 Cr L J 627

CHAPTER XVI

OF COMPLAINTS TO MAGISTRATES

It is most desirable that Magistrates should follow the procedure which is quite clearly laid down in this chapter dealing with complaints to Magistrates—Balai Lal v Pannah 21 C W N 127

Magistrates should also be prompt in disposing of complaints under this chapter. They have no right whatever to keep complaints instituted before them without passing orders for several months. Such action is in the highest degree improper and shows want of proper understanding as to what their duties are—Sahullah v Burhan 18 Cr L J 271 (All)

200 [* * *] A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence on complaint shall at once examine the complainant upon oath and the substance of the examination shall be reduced to writing and shall be signed by the complainant and also by the Magistrate.

Provided as follows —

(a) when the complaint is made in writing nothing here contained shall be deemed to require a Magistrate to examine the complainant before transferring the case under Section 192

(aa) when the complaint is made in writing nothing here contained shall be deemed to require the examination of a complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court or by a public servant acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties

(b) where the Magistrate is a Presidency Magistrate such examination may be on oath or not as the Magistrate in each case thinks fit and where the complaint is made in writing need not be reduced to writing but the Magistrate may if he thinks fit before the matter of the complaint is brought before him require it to be reduced to writing,

(c) when the case has been transferred under Section 192 and the Magistrate so transferring it has already examined the complainant, the Magistrate to whom it is so transferred shall not be bound to re-examine the complainant

Change —This section has been amended by section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVII of 1923. The words "subject to the provisions of section 476" which occurred at the very beginning of the old section have been omitted and proviso (aa) has been newly added. "We would add to this clause a provision that in the case of a complaint under sec 476 the examination of the complainant shall be dispensed with"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

The words "where the complaint is made in writing" have been inserted in proviso (b) by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act II of 1926. The reason has been thus stated —"At present a Presidency Magistrate need not record the substance of an examination even if the complaint is not in writing. It is desirable that where there is no complaint in writing the Magistrate should record the examination in writing"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India 1925 Part V p 214)

657 Taking cognizance —A Magistrate is bound to take cognizance of an offence upon complaint. See notes under sec 190 at p 471 and "A Magistrate is bound to receive all complaints whether they be preferred orally or in writing"—Cal G R C O p 8

If a pardanashin lady makes a complaint to a Magistrate he is entitled to take cognizance of it but before he takes cognizance he must be satisfied that it is her complaint. It is comparatively unimportant by whom the complaint reaches the Magistrate if it is really her complaint.—Abhoyeswari v Kishori Molan 42 Cal 19 18 C W N 1020

658 Complaints —See notes under sec 4 (b)

It is clear from the wording of sections 200 and 201 that a complaint need not be in writing.—J R Das v King Emp 1 Rang 549

Presentation of complaint —Since the complainant is to be examined "at once" it follows therefore that ordinarily a complaint must be presented in person. A complaint shall never be accepted which is not signed by the complainant and is not preferred by a person duly authorised to prefer that specific complaint. Abhoyeswari v Kishori 47 Cal 19 15 Cr L J 348. The presentation of a complaint through a Mukhtar is illegal because the Magistrate can not at once examine the complainant.—Ratanlal 625

where the examination of the complainant would show that the complaint was false frivolous and vexatious and intended merely to harass the accused—Girdhari Lal v Crown 1311 P R 11 The object of the examination is to find out whether there is any matter which calls for investigation by a Criminal Court—Bay Nath v Raja Ram 10 A L J 79 13 Cr L J 704

The examination of the complainant is not to be a mere form but an intelligent inquiry into the subject matter of the complaint carried far enough to enable the Magistrate to exercise his judgment as to whether there is or there is not sufficient ground for proceeding—Cal G R & C O p 9

The law requires that the complainant shall be examined at once the Court cannot fix a future date for the examination of the complainant

A Magistrate cannot refuse to take cognizance of an offence on receipt of a complaint but he is bound to examine the complainant—13 Cal 334 Even in a case in which a charge can in the first instance be laid before the Police the Magistrate is bound to examine the complainant if the latter chooses to make a complaint—14 W R 36 Even if a Magistrate finds a complaint to be false and groundless he cannot refuse to examine the complainant—3 N H P H C R 272 Although it is competent for him to dismiss the complaint still he cannot dismiss it without examining the complainant—Jalaluddin v Md Khalil 1884 A W N 47 3 C W N 17

Mode of examination—On presentation of a complaint the Magistrate shall examine the complainant on oath the substance of that examination must be reduced to writing and must be distinct from the complaint itself Mere calling upon the complainant to attest the complaint is not a sufficient compliance with this section—18 All 221 If however the complaint is made in writing and is sufficiently clear it may frequently be a sufficient compliance if the Magistrate reads it over to the complainant and the complainant is on oath asked to subscribe to it—6 Bom L R 667 Mahomed v Mahomed 26 Cr L J 1101 (Sind) But if the written complaint is obscure and vague the Magistrate would be bound to examine the complainant at sufficient length for the purpose of clearly ascertaining the allegations on which the complaint is made—6 Bom L R 16

The substance of the examination of the complainant on oath should be read over to him (following the principle underlying sec 360) so that the accuracy of the record of the examination may be vouchsafed particularly if it is to be used as a basis for a possible prosecution for perjury in future—Blagvrathi Bai v Emp 26 Cr L J 1401 A I R 190 Nag 141

If the complainant is a prodanashin lady she may be examined by commission under Sec 503 of the Code The terms of that section are very wide. They refer not only to an inquiry and a trial but to any other proceeding. That section authorises the examination of any witness and a complainant is certainly a witness—Abhay stuart v Akshori Molan 42 Cal 19. Contra 1876 P R 10 where it is laid down that in the preliminary stage of a proceeding the complainant is not a witness but a mere complainant and cannot be examined by commission.

Signature of complainant If the complaint is in writing it must be signed by the complainant. A complaint cannot be accepted if it is not signed by him. 42 Cal 19. Jitendra Lemp 1 P L T 564.

After the complainant has been examined and the substance of the examination has been reduced to writing by the Magistrate such writing shall be signed by the complainant. Unless it is signed the Magistrate cannot take cognizance of the complaint—3 B L R 67. Such is the vitiating effect of want of signature that a conviction on the alternative charges of making two statements, one in the examination under this section of the accused as a complainant and the other in his examination subsequently as a witness both the statements contradicting each other is bad if the statement recorded under this section does not bear the signature of the complainant—Daijoo v Lemp 6 C W N 840. The examination of the complainant being taken on oath and signed by him can be used as a basis for a prosecution for perjury. The evident object of getting the substance of the examination of the complainant signed by him is to make use of it in case of need, as against the complainant's subsequent deposition as a witness for starting against him a prosecution for perjury on the ground that the two statements contradict each other—Bhagirathibai v Lemp 6 Cr L J 1401. A I R 1926 Nag 141.

660 Omission to examine—Effect.—The examination of the complainant is not a mere matter of formality and when a Magistrate dismisses a complaint without making an examination himself the omission is a material one and cannot be cured by sec 537 of the Code—Pangu Koeri v Lemp 1 P L T 346. In re Ramasami 43 M L J 710. Mool chand v Kessoomal 13 S L R 200. U B R (190) 1st Qr 73. The cognizance of an offence by a Magistrate on complaint is not complete until the complainant has been examined on oath—Pangu Koeri v Lemp, 1 P L T 346. A Magistrate cannot dismiss a complaint without examining the complainant—Lok Nath v Sanjayi 30 Cal 923. Kartik v Lemp 1 P L T 142. Iadar Rahman v Ibidhar Ralaman 23 C W N 392. 9 C W N 191. 3 C W N 17. 1884 A W N 47. 8 W R 17. No investigation can be ordered under Sec 200 without examining the complainant—6 Cr L J 552 (Patna). Jitan v Lemp 1 P L T 64. 7 Cal 92. 4 C W N 305. Ali Muhammad v Crook 191 P R 2. (This is now expressly provided in the proviso of sec 201. No process can be issued against the accused unless and until the Magistrate has examined the complainant—Abhoyeswar v Kishori Mohan 42 Cal 19

But in several cases it has been held that the omission to examine the complainant on oath before issuing process is a mere irregularity and does not invalidate the conviction in the absence of any prejudice to the accused by reason of such irregularity—Phagun Shahu v K E, 1 P L J 592, Emp v Heman Gope 1 P L T 349 1 P L T 446 Bhairab v Emp, 46 Cal 807 11 Mad 443 Bateshar v Emp 37 All 628, Gopchand v Emp 1 Rang 517 15 Cr L J 649 Thus where the complainants made a complaint to the Police that the accused beat them causing grievous hurt, but the police did not send up the case and the complainants applied to the Magistrate who sent for the police papers and summoned the accused without examining the complainants it was held that the irregularity did not vitiate the proceeding—Bateshar v Emp, 13 A L J 840 37 All 628 The omission to examine the complainant under sec 200 is a mere irregularity and not an illegality. The person prejudiced by such an irregularity is the complainant and when the case ends in a conviction he has no grievance. The accused cannot in general complain of the irregularity, as the omission to take a sworn statement from the complainant cannot prejudice the accused—Ambajara v Pachamuthu, 19 L W 46 25 Cr L J 730

661 Complainant by Court or public servant.—Under the new provision (aa) when a complaint is preferred by a Court or a public servant, the examination of the complainant may be dispensed with. Even before this amendment it was held in several cases that the omission to examine the Court or the public servant did not vitiate the proceedings. Thus where the complainant who was a bailiff and who was resisted by the accused in the execution of a civil process, was not examined but his report was brought on the record through the Nazir it was held that the fact of the complainant not being examined would not justify the setting aside of the conviction because there were other witnesses who gave a full account of the matter—Muso v Crown 8 S L R 41 15 Cr L J 649 Where the complaint in writing and signed was preferred by a responsible public official and was accompanied with a sanction of the Local Government for the prosecution of one of its servants, it was held that the failure by the Magistrate to examine the complainant on oath had not in any way prejudiced the accused or caused a failure or miscarriage of justice—Girdhari Lal v Crown 1911 P R 11 12 Cr L J 217 Where the Sub Inspector preferred a complaint for the prosecution of a certain person, and the Magistrate, without examining the complainant recorded the evidence and convicted the person complained against, held that the omission to examine the complainant (Sub-Inspector) did not occasion a miscarriage of justice, the irregularity being cured by the provisions of sec 537 (a)—

Chiragh Din v. Crown 4 Lah 359 25 Cr L J 125 Where the District Judge made a complaint to the District Magistrate by means of a letter and the Magistrate ordered a police investigation without examining the District Judge on oath in support of his statement in his letter it was held that the omission to examine was a mere irregularity curable by sec 537 (a)—In re Aparao 20 Bom L R 1018 20 Cr L J 42 Under the present law no question of irregularity would arise to be made by any officer subordinate to such Magistrate or by a police-officer, or by such other person, not being a Magistrate or police officer, as he thinks fit, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint

Provided that, save where the complaint has been made by a Court, no such direction shall be made unless the complainant has been examined on oath under the provisions of Section 200

(3) This section applies also to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay

[Change —This section has been amended by sec 55 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

The main changes introduced are the following —

(1) Third class Magistrates have been given power to make preliminary inquiries personally. (2) Authority to make a preliminary inquiry has been given in any case in which the Magistrate thinks fit for reasons to be recorded in writing. The only ground contemplated by the old section was if the Magistrate is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint. This is thought to be undesirably narrow. (3) The words in quiry or investigation have been substituted for the expression previous local investigation and power is given to take evidence upon oath in the case of such a preliminary inquiry (4) Presidency Magistrates are enabled to act under this section without special authorisation — Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Or which has been transferred to him under section 19 — We have made a small amendment in sec 202 (1) to cover cases which have been transferred to a Magistrate under sec 19 as well as cases of which he has taken cognizance himself—Report of the Select Committee of 1916 This amendment supercedes the ruling in 18 C W N 95

The present proviso to subsection (1) has been substituted by the Cr P Code Amendment Act II of 1926 in place of the old proviso which was added by the Amendment Act of 1913 and which ran thus —

Provided that no such direction shall be made—(a) unless the complainant has been examined on oath under the provisions of section 200 or (b) where the complaint has been made by a Court under the provisions of this Code

Thus this proviso laid down that a Magistrate receiving a complaint need not direct an inquiry or investigation if the complaint was made by a Court This has caused difficulties in the case of a Court complaining under sec 476 of the Code Under that section the Court has only to record a finding that it is expedient that an inquiry should be made into an offence which appears to have been committed and it seems clear that cases will arise in which an inquiry or investigation should be made before a person is put on his trial The difficulty was brought to light by the Bombay High Court and the Local Government and the other High Courts have all agreed that some provision is required This clause gives effect to this proposal — Statement of Objects and Reasons (Government of India, 1925 Part V p 214)

The present proviso lays down by implication that an inquiry or investigation may be directed in any case including the case of a Court complaining under sec 476 but that in such a case the examination of the complainant is not necessary before the inquiry or investigation

662 Scope and application of section — This clause lays down the procedure to be followed by a Magistrate upon taking cognizance of an offence upon complaint and when he takes cognizance under sec 190 (a) and not when he takes cognizance upon a Police report or information mentioned in clauses (b) and (c) of sec 190 See 2 V 25 243 This section applies only to cases where there is a complaint distinguished from a mere information A Magistrate taking cognizance of information cannot be said to be acting upon complaint — 1889 P R 24 So also a Magistrate taking cognizance of a case

a police report cannot proceed under this section and cannot therefore refer the case to a subordinate Magistrate for local investigation—Abdulla v Emp, 40 Cal 854, Imp v Shoukaimal, 7 S L R 75, Sarba Mahton v Emp 17 C W N 824 Tiloki v Emp, 2 P L T, 220 22 Cr L J 735

The old section applied only to those cases where the Magistrate was not satisfied as to the truth of a complaint—27 Cal 798, 2 Weir 241, Narain v Emp 1888 P R 24 Under the present section the Magistrate can direct inquiry on any ground See notes under 'Change' above

If the complainant is not speaking from personal knowledge, a Magistrate taking cognizance would exercise a wise discretion in making the inquiry under this section—Sukumar v Mofizuddin, 25 C W N 357

This section applies to a complaint of an offence A petition for maintenance under Sec 488 is not a complaint of an offence, and therefore this section is inapplicable to proceedings in maintenance The Magistrate to whom a maintenance petition is preferred has no power to refer it to a Subordinate Magistrate for inquiry and report, but must inquire into it himself—1905 P R 29

663 Recording reasons —If the Magistrate on examining the complainant distrusts the statement of the complainant, he is bound to record his reasons before directing a local investigation—Balai Lal v Pasupati 21 C W N 127 17 Cr L J 396 and failure to do so is not a mere irregularity but a grave illegality as the provisions of this section in this respect are imperative—27 Cal 921 14 Cal 141, 40 Cal 41 But in some cases it has been held that omission to record the reasons is at most an irregularity which will be cured by section 537 of the Code unless it has occasioned a failure of justice—2 Weir 241 25 Mad 546, In re Arula, 10 M L T 120 Madho v Rashid Ahmed, 15 A L J 642, 11 A L J 754, Rim Saran v Md Jan Khan 26 Cr L J 1394 A I R 1926 Pat 34, Balai v Pasupati, 21 C W N 127

664 "Postpone the issue of process —The process shall ordinarily issue after the examination of the complainant unless the Magistrate has reason to doubt the truth of the complaint, when only he is authorised to postpone the issue of process and order an inquiry or local investigation—27 Cal 798

The procedure prescribed by this section can be adopted when no process has been issued to compel the attendance of the accused A Magistrate who after issue of process directs an inquiry and report acts in contravention of the procedure prescribed by law—1896 A W N 140 Once a process has been issued against the accused the Magistrate cannot exercise his option of holding a preliminary inquiry He must proceed with the trial—Gaji v Jumanshah, 6 S L R 83 13 Cr L J 749, 1901

A W N 44 Thus it is illegal to order a preliminary inquiry after the accused has been brought before the Court under a warrant—21 W R 44 When a Magistrate has accepted a complaint and issued process upon it and taken evidence for the complaint he or his successor cannot refer the case to the Police for inquiry and report—9 Mad 282 Where a subordinate Magistrate has taken cognizance of a case and has issued process the District Magistrate has no power to interfere and order an inquiry—27 Cal 798, and it is doubtful whether he can make such order even after withdrawing the case to his own Court for trial—Ibid On the other hand if a Magistrate directs a local inquiry he cannot issue process before he receives the report of the inquiry—Krishna Bala v Nirodabala 41 C L J 170 A I R 1925 Cal 989 But where after the Magistrate had issued processes against two accused persons one of them appeared and laid a cross-complaint and then the Magistrate rescinded the order of issue of process and sent forth the cases to a subordinate Magistrate for local inquiry and report held that the action of the Magistrate was right and proper—Lalit Mohan v Nani Lal 39 C L J 329 25 Cr L J 464

665 If the accused appears—This section speaks of postponement of issue of process If however the accused appears of his own accord without a summons he is entitled to require that the complaint shall be proceeded with or dismissed If no evidence is offered against the accused he must be formally discharged—26 Bom 55

666 Inquiry—Under the old section the inquiry was to be conducted by the Magistrate himself who tried the case he could not direct the inquiry to be held by a subordinate Magistrate or a police officer These persons could only hold a local investigation See 38 Cal 68 Gangadhar v K E 43 Cal 173 20 C W N 63 Md Imamuddin v Debendra 18 C W N 95 The present amendment now empowers these persons to hold an inquiry as well as an investigation See also Amrit Mahji v K E 46 Cal 854 23 C W N 623 in which the order referring the complaint to a subordinate Magistrate for inquiry and report was held to be legal

The inquiry contemplated by this section does not necessarily mean an inquiry by the Magistrate himself examining witnesses or holding investigation into the case It is open to the Magistrate to investigate into the matter in order to ascertain the truth or falsity of the complaint in any way he thinks proper Where an investigation has been made by the police and witnesses had been examined by the investigating police officer there is nothing in law to prevent the Magistrate from looking into the police papers for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint If upon looking into the police papers the Magistrate is satisfied that this is not a fit case in which process should issue he can dismiss the complaint—Ramanand v Ali Hassan A I R 1924 Pat 797

Before the present amendment the only Magistrate who could make an inquiry under this section was the Magistrate taking cognizance of the case a Magistrate to whom a case was transferred could not hold an inquiry under sec 202 See Md Imamuddin v Debendra 18 C W N 95 Under the present amendment such Magistrate is empowered to hold the inquiry by reason of the addition of the words or which has been transferred to him under section 19

Under this section the Magistrate has the option of only one of two alternatives viz either to inquire into the case himself or to direct a local investigation He cannot have recourse to both the alternatives, and if he after partially inquiring into the case himself makes an order directing local investigation the procedure is irregular—Emp v Durga Prasad 20 A L J 355 44 All 550 3 Cr L J 279

The police inquiry contemplated by this section cannot take the place of such evidence as the complainant may desire to produce before an adjudication is made of his complaint Such inquiry can be ordered before evidence is recorded to enable the Magistrate to determine how far the complaint was prima facie well founded When the Magistrate decides to record the evidence himself he should complete the inquiry and determine upon the evidence adduced how far the complaint is borne out—Mahalei v Ram Sahai 22 O C 371 The inquiry under this section cannot take the place of hearing the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the case cannot refer the case under this section to a subordinate Magistrate for calling upon the accused to show cause against prosecution and for submitting a report thereon—Bharrab v A E 46 Cal 807 23 C W N 484 29 C L J 318

This section makes no provision for the manner in which the evidence in an inquiry should be recorded The failure to take down the deposition of the witnesses by the Magistrate in a case in which he had before him the final report of the police containing a detailed account of the statements of witnesses examined by the police and the witnesses repeated the same statements before him is not an error of law—Tilakhdari v Misri 26 Cr L J 1346 A I R 1925 Pat 584

Second inquiry —A Magistrate may hold an inquiry even after a local investigation has been made by a subordinate officer If he is dissatisfied with the result of such investigation—38 Cal 68 But in Ram Prasad v Mohi 11 A L J 754 it has been held that the Magistrate taking cognizance cannot hold a further inquiry after the holding of a local investigation

667 Local investigation —The object of the local investigation is to ascertain the truth or falseness of the complaint a local investigation was not intended by the Legislature to supersede a regular trial The object of this section is to prevent the issue of process where there is some initial ground for doubting the truth of the complaint and where on a local investigation there appears no evidence to support it. Where it is found that there is some evidence in support of the complainant's charge the function of the officer making the local investigation is fulfilled. Process should then be issued and the truth or falsity of the evidence should be determined in a regular manner—U B R (1910) 1st Qr 73

A local investigation can be ordered when there is a quarrel about boundaries or any matter of that kind. Otherwise the Magistrate taking cognizance should make an inquiry himself—Barj Nath v Paja Ram 10 A L J 79 13 Cr L J 704

The words local investigation are not restricted to the investigation of the physical features only but they mean an inquiry into the truth or falsity of the allegations made in the complaint petition. The word local is used with a view to hold the investigation in the locality for the convenience of the parties and their witnesses and also it may in certain cases necessitate an inspection of the place of occurrence but certainly it is not confined only to the inspection of the locality—Munshi Mian v Emp, 19 Cr L J 126 (Pat)

668 Who can investigate —If the offence is one triable only by a Court of Session the local investigation must be directed to some Magistrate who is competent to deal with a case triable by the Court of Session. It should not be directed to a second class Magistrate—4 C W N 305. But see 6 C W N 295 where it has been held that a Magistrate holding a local investigation under this section need not be competent to entertain the complaint which he is asked to investigate.

A local investigation can be directed to a subordinate Magistrate and not to a superior Magistrate—Emp v Dhatu Hossein 39 Cal 1041 18 C W N 885. This section does not contemplate the subordination of a 1st class Magistrate to a District Magistrate. Both are first class Magistrates and the latter cannot direct the investigation to be held by the former—Aly Mohd v Emp 1912 P R 2. A Deputy Magistrate attached to the sub-division is subordinate to the Sub Divisional officer—Munshi Mian v Emp 19 Cr L J 126 (Pat)

The investigation may be made by any person subordinate to the Magistrate even though he be a clerk—36 Cal 1

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a local inquiry by a pleader in the nature of a commission in a civil case—Molan Khan v Gayzuddin 18 C W N 399

It is not a proper course to make indiscriminate use of police agency for investigating complaints. The object of law is to give persons who have been injured an access to justice independent of Police and it is improper for the Magistrate when a complaint is made to him to refer complaint to a Police officer. Such a course would foster abuses and defeat the purpose of the law—In re Jankidas 12 Bom 161. In petty cases of assault and the like the Police ought not to be directed to make inquiries because in petty matters the Police are under a strong temptation of making money out of the complaint. In such matters the proper course for the Magistrate is to take action at once upon the complaint—1894 P. R. 19.

Magistrates are cautioned against the indiscriminate use of Police agency for the purpose of ascertaining matters as to which a Magistrate is bound to form his own opinion upon evidence given in his presence. This caution is specially needful in respect of all cases regarding offences not cognizable by the Police—Cal. C. R. & C. O. p. 9.

If the complaint is made against a police officer it is improper for the Magistrate to call for a report from the police officer who is himself the accused person—14 Cal. 141 or from some other police officer—1884 A. W. N. 47. Meena Lal v. Emp. 18 A. L. J. 620 or even from a superior police officer or the Superintendent of Police—9 C. W. N. 179. Shana v. La 18 A. L. J. 731. In such cases the inquiry had better be held by the Magistrate himself—40 Mad. 387. Shana v. Eza Ahmad 18 A. L. J. 731. Meena Lal v. Emp. 18 A. L. J. 620. 21 Cr. L. J. 416. Mahadev v. Ram Sahai 22 O. C. 321. 21 Cr. L. J. 343 (All).

669 Proviso—Examination of complainant.—Before directing a local investigation the complainant must be examined either by the Magistrate who receives the complaint or by some other Magistrate to whom the case might have been transferred—In re Bai Kashi Ratanlal 368. Unless the complainant is duly examined an inquiry and report under this section cannot be called for and if made are without jurisdiction and can not form the basis of any further action—27 Cal. 921. 4 C. W. N. 305. Jitan v. Emp. 1 P. L. T. 564. 20 Cr. L. J. 552 (Pat.) and the complainant who was not examined cannot be prosecuted in respect of his complaint (if it is false) which was dismissed on a report called for under this section—Aly Mohd v. Emp. 1917 P. R. 2. 27 Cal. 921. Ram Sarup v. A. E. 4 O. C. 177.

Where after the complainant was examined by the Magistrate who took cognizance of the case a superior Magistrate transferred the case to his own file and without re-examining the complainant and without recording any reasons referred it to the police for inquiry and report it was held that the procedure was illegal and the fact that the complainant was previously examined by the Magistrate who took cognizance was of no avail—2 Weir 244.

670 Powers of the investigating officer.—A Magistrate conducting a local investigation can exercise all the powers of a Magistrate including the power to administer oath (see the new subsection 2A). Such a proceeding is a judicial proceeding within the meaning of Sec 476—1 Cr L J 118 (Mad), and the investigating Magistrate can direct the prosecution of the complainant under sec 476 if the complaint turns out to be false—Kanchan v Ram Krishun 36 Cal 72 Conly — Kachu Madar v Emp., 21 M L J 795 12 Cr L J 323 where it was held that a preliminary investigation made by a Magistrate under this section was not a judicial proceeding and therefore a person could not be prosecuted for an offence brought to the notice of the Court during such investigation. This ruling is no longer correct.

The Magistrate holding the investigation is not disqualified thereby from afterwards trying the case, when there is nothing to indicate that he initiated or directed the proceedings or took any personal interest in the matter of the complaint presented before him—24 Cal 167. The fact that the investigating Magistrate expressed an opinion in submitting the report is no bar to his holding the trial—4 C W N 604. But where a Magistrate took an active part in forwarding the police inquiries and collecting evidence against the accused he is disqualified from trying the accused—23 Cal 328. So also where a Magistrate during a local investigation himself discovered the evidence of crime and collected or ascertained the evidence in support of it and thereafter directed recommended or invited the institution of criminal proceedings it is undesirable that he should try the case—Bhop Singh v Kermoti, 8 N L R 1.

In a recent Patna case it has been held that if a Magistrate sends a cognizable case to the police to investigate under this section, the police officer making the investigation can arrest and send up a charge sheet. The Magistrate's order under this section does not debar the police from exercising their general powers of arrest and investigation in regard to the same matter as formed the subject of the complaint. It is possible to conceive of cases where although the Magistrate may distrust a complaint or delay in passing orders (i.e. postpone the issue of process and order an investigation under this section), the police would be failing in their duty if they did not arrest an offender against whom a cognizable offence has been made out. Much more so would this be the case where the Magistrate after recording the complaint finds that a regular police investigation would be more suitable and intentionally keeps the complaint pending in order that the police may exercise their powers of investigation and arrest independently of the Magistrate.—King Emperor v Bhola Bhagal, 2 Pat. 379 (382, 383).

671. Position of the accused —A person complained against does not become an 'accused' person or a 'person against whom any proceedings have been instituted' until it has been decided to issue process against him under Chapter XVII, Sec 340, therefore, does not entitle him to be represented by a pleader during the preliminary inquiry held under this section—Shaikh Chand v Mahomed Hanif 4 N L R 81 Golap Jan v Bholanath 38 Cal 880 (887) or during the proceeding when the Magistrate is considering the report of the local investigation ordered by him—Balai Lal v Pasupati 21 C W N 127 17 Cr L J 396 If he chooses to attend the proceedings he may do so like any other member of the public but has no locus standi as a party the purpose of the law being clearly to exclude him until sufficient ground for joining him has been made out by the complainant Therefore the Magistrate can refuse him permission to cross examine the complainant's witnesses—Shaikh Chand v Md Hanif 4 N L R 81 See also Glands Charan v Manindra 27 C W N 196 A I R 1923 Cal 198 In a proceeding under this section the Magistrate acts illegally in sending for the accused person and calling for a report from him as to the truth or falsity of a charge preferred against him—5 P L J 61 14 Cal 141 A preliminary inquiry should not be held in the presence of the person complained against and he should not be allowed to cross examine the complainant's witnesses—Bh n lai v Emp 40 Cal 444 17 C W N 290 19 Cr L J 527 4 P L W 307 When a Magistrate holds an inquiry under this section he should not hear arguments on behalf of the accused—Bachoo v Anwar 26 Cr L J 305 A I R 19 5 Cal 576 Contra—In Ram Baran v Mohd Jan 26 Cr L J 1394 the Patna High Court did not object to the action of the Magistrate in calling the accused to the inquiry and in Sheikh Akbar v France 12 Cr L J 207 (Cal) it was held that the accused should be permitted to watch the proceedings and his pleader should be allowed to act as amicus curiae But this practice has been severely condemned in all the other cases cited above

Statements made by the person complained against during an inquiry under this section cannot be regarded as having been recorded under sec 164 or Sec 364 Such person does not stand in the position of an accused person during the inquiry and such statements cannot be admitted in evidence against him—32 Cal 1085

672 Evidence in the inquiry —The Magistrate conducting the preliminary inquiry need not confine himself to the evidence of the complainant alone but he may examine such witnesses as he thinks fit—Ratanlal 669 There is nothing in section 202 to prevent the investigating officer from making a full inquiry by obtaining information from the complainant and his witnesses and the defendant and his witnesses if any—33 Cal 1282

673 Submission of report —The officer who conducted the investigation must submit the report of his investigation to the same Magistrate who had originally ordered him to investigate he is not authorised to submit it to another Magistrate for the purpose of dismissing the complaint and declaring that no offence had in reality been committed—Thakur Singh v Kirpal, 1918 P L R 53 19 Cr L J 436

674 Revision —If an irregularity in procedure has not resulted in any miscarriage of justice, the High Court will not make an order which can result only in harassment and waste of public time. In a case in which a perfunctory inquiry has been made by the Police and the report considered in a perfunctory manner by the Magistrate the High Court will interfere and insist on the provisions of this section being strictly enforced. But where the inquiry has been carefully made and carefully considered, the High Court will refuse to re-open the matter—Sheonandan v Emperor, 4 P L W 114 19 Cr L J 263

203 The Magistrate before whom a complaint is made, or to whom it has been transferred, may dismiss the complaint, if, after examining the complainant, and considering the result of the investigation (if any) made under Section 202, there is in his judgment no sufficient ground for proceeding. In such case he shall briefly record his reasons for so doing.

203 The Magistrate before whom a complaint is made, or to whom it has been transferred, may dismiss the complaint if after considering the statement on oath (if any) of the complainant and the result of the investigation or inquiry (if any) under Section 202, there is in his judgment no sufficient ground for proceeding. In such case he shall briefly record his reasons for so doing.

This section has been amended by sec 56 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The words 'the investigation or inquiry (if any)' have been substituted recently by the Cr P C Amendment Act II of 1926, for the words 'any investigation or inquiry' occurring in the Amendment of 1923. See Note 677 below.

675 Dismissal of complaint —Where on a complaint made against several persons the Magistrate proceeded against only one of them and convicted him, but refused to issue process against the others held that the order of refusal was to all intents and purposes an order of dismissal of complaint against those persons under sec 203—Girish Chandra v Emp, 29 Cal 457 Hari Lal v Emp, 20 Cr L J 835 (Pat). Where on a complaint being filed the Magistrate called for a police report, and subsequen-on a consideration of that report passed the order. Enter mistake of law and refused to issue processes held that the order must be regarded as an order dismissing a complaint—Shah Siddik v Shah Chakuri 17 C W N 451 14 Cr L J 123 17 C L J 608

An application under Sec 107 does not fall within the definition of a complaint and therefore sec 202 does not apply to it but every Magistrate has the inherent power of refusing an application which he finds to be groundless and so if he is satisfied after making an inquiry that the apprehension of a breach of the peace complained of does not exist he can refuse the application under sec 107 without taking any evidence which the applicant wanted to produce—Shamsuddin v Ram Dayal 25 Cr L J 89 A I R 1924 Lah 630

Dismissal when can be made—This section gives very large powers to the Magistrate to dismiss a complaint without issuing a process at all against the accused persons but certain conditions are laid down in the chapter in which the section occurs and those conditions must be strictly fulfilled in making an order under this section. A Magistrate may dismiss a complaint (1) if upon the statement of the complainant reduced to writing under sec 200 he finds that no offence has been committed (2) if he distrusts the statement made by the complainant (3) if he distrusts that statement but his distrust not being strong enough to warrant him to act upon it he directs further inquiry as provided by sec 202 and after considering the result of the investigation he finds there is no sufficient ground for proceeding—Daidyanath v Muspratt 14 Cal 141 In re Ganesh Narain 13 Bom 600

There can be no dismissal of complaint under sec 203 after process has issued. This section refers to cases falling within Chapter XVI where there has been no issue of process. Where the accused has been summoned to answer a charge there is a proceeding within the meaning of Chapter XVII and the complaint cannot be dismissed under sec 203—Q L v Budhunbhai Ratanlal 544. Even an order directing withdrawal of process issued against the accused will not amount to an order of dismissal of complaint—12 C W N 68

Who can dismiss complaint—The complaint can be dismissed either by the Magistrate who took cognizance of it or by the Magistrate to whom it was transferred for local investigation. The District Magistrate has no power to pass any order for dismissal of complaint unless he first removes the case to his own file—6 C W N 843. When a case has been transferred to a subordinate Magistrate and is pending on his file the District Magistrate has no power to pass an order of dismissal of complaint—3 C W N 490. Unless he withdraws the case to his own file the District Magistrate cannot pass any orders in the case and the only person who can deal with the case is the subordinate Magistrate—Q v Belhios 12

W R 53 A complaint was originally made before a Deputy Magistrate. The Deputy Magistrate sent the case to the District Magistrate with a view to the Dt Magistrate transferring it to another Court but the Dt Magistrate instead of transferring the case to another Court examined the record and came to the conclusion that the complaint was wholly without foundation and so he dismissed it held that the District Magistrate was sufficiently seized of the case and the order passed by him was not without jurisdiction—Gaund v Ram Das 25 Cr L J 555 A I R 1974 All 666

Duty of Magistrate before dismissal—Before a Magistrate can dismiss a complaint he must according to the words of this section examine the complainant and consider the result of the investigation (if any) made under sec 207. In other words a Magistrate cannot dismiss a complaint without complying with the provisions of law as laid down in sections 200 and 207. Where there was no previous local investigation ordered under sec 202 nor any examination of the complainant as directed by sec 200, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to dismiss the complaint under this section—30 Cal 923

If a Magistrate holds an inquiry under sec 207 he should not dismiss the complaint without giving the complainant an opportunity to adduce evidence in support of his case—Dr Sandyal v Kunjeswar 16 C W N 143. It is improper for a Magistrate to dismiss a complaint while sitting in his private room and without giving the complainant or his pleader an opportunity of being heard—10 C W N 1036

676 Examination of complainant—Before dismissing the complaint the Magistrate is bound to examine the complainant. Until he has at least examined the complainant he is not in a position to exercise the discretionary power to issue process or to dismiss the complaint. Therefore an order dismissing the complaint without examining the complainant is illegal—In re Ningappa 46 Bom 360 In re Ganesh Narain 13 Bom 590 Rajgaram v Sabapathy 4 M II C R 16

When a deposition in the shape of a complaint is made orally or in writing and is sworn to the requirements of this section as regards examination of complainant are fulfilled—9 All 666 Thakoor Das v Bhagvan Das 4 Bom L R 609. But merely cross examining the complainant or taking the deposition of certain witnesses in the preliminary inquiry held under sec 159 is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—30 Cal 923

Where a Magistrate examined the complainant and only one of his witnesses and without examining the rest of the witnesses dismissed the complaint it was held that the entire evidence for the prosecution should have been received by the Magistrate unless for some very strong he considered the evidence unnecessary—Gokul Chand v Mah A L J 451 14 Cr L J 412

In the case of a complaint of a serious offence like murder, the dismissal of the case without any judicial examination of the complainant or his witnesses is extremely illegal—Ful'ar Rahman v Abidhar, 23 C W N 392 20 Cr L J 175 29 C L J 50

There is nothing in this section to show that the Magistrate must at once consider the complaint and may not take time to consider the complaint petition and the examination on oath—Laua v Jadu 19 Cr L J 28 (Patna)

677 Investigation or inquiry (if any) —This section empowers a Magistrate to dismiss the complaint without any investigation under sec 202 if after examining the complainant he considers there is no sufficient ground for proceeding—Lawati v Jadu Dhanuk 19 Cr L J 228 (Patna) The Amendment of 1923 contained the words any investigation or inquiry and the words if any were omitted This led to the view that an investigation or inquiry under sec 202 was compulsory before dismissing a case under sec 203 Hence the recent amendment made in 1926 in which the words if any have been restored The Calcutta High Court in a recent decision (in the case of Srish Chandra Bose v Madan Lal Surena) has held that under sec 203 an investigation or an inquiry under sec 202 is necessary in all cases because the words if any have been omitted from Sec 203 after the words investigation or inquiry No such change was intended by the amendment made by Act XVIII of 1923 and the proposed addition is to make this matter clear—Statement of objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925 Part I p 215) See also Dukhiram v Jamuna 6 P L T 727 26 Cr L J 921 A I R 1925 Pat 704

Where an investigation has been ordered under sec 202 the Magistrate is not bound after receipt of the report of such investigation to examine any witnesses or hold any inquiry before he dismisses the complaint It is sufficient that he takes into consideration the result of the investigation arrived at by the subordinate officer—Munshi Mian v Enp 19 Cr L J 126 (Patna)

678 Grounds of dismissal —A complaint can be dismissed if the Magistrate thinks that there is not a sufficient ground for proceeding The expression 'sufficient ground' in this section points exclusively to the facts which the complainant brings to the knowledge of the Magistrate and to their establishing a prima facie case against the accused In exercising his discretionary power of summary dismissal of complaint the Magistrate should not allow himself to be influenced by considerations altogether apart from the facts adduced by the complainant in support of the charge nor by a consideration of the motive by which the complainant is actuated What he has to consider is whether there is a prima facie evidence of a criminal offence which in his judgment calls upon the alleged offender to answer—In re Ganesh 13 Bom 590 The decision whether there is sufficient ground must be reached by the exercise of discretion based upon judicial considerations That the Magistrate considered the probable result of the proceeding undesirable or the motives and conduct of the complainant discreditable are not relevant considerations—Ganga v Samarapathi 38 Mad 512 In the absence of any finding that the complaint was false or unsustainable on the evidence likely to be available the passing of an order of dismissal under this section constitutes an irregularity with which the High Court can interfere in revision—Ganga Reddi v Samarapathi 38 Mad 512 25 M L J 510 14 Cr L J 633

The reasons for dismissing a complaint should be based on inference of facts arising from or disclosed by (1) the complaint (2) the examination of the complainant and (3) the investigation if any made under Sec 202 This provides a wide field Anything outside it is extra judicial and must be discarded—Mustafa v Motilal 9 Bom L R 742

A Magistrate ought to dismiss a complaint where the subordinate Magistrate to whom the case was made over for inquiry and report under sec 20, held an elaborate inquiry examined a number of witnesses and submitted a report that there was no case against the accused In such a case the trying Magistrate acts wrongly in disregarding the report and ordering issue of summons against the accused—Abdullah v Emperor, 40 Cal 834 (857)

What are not proper grounds of dismissal —If the allegations contained in the complaint disclose a criminal offence a Magistrate should not dismiss the complaint simply because the case is one in which a civil remedy is obtainable —Koshal Singh v Toolshee 10 W R 40 A complaint cannot be dismissed on the ground that the entertaining of the complaint would encourage hundreds of such complaints and would stir up old religious feelings of animosity between the Hindus and Mussalmans—Q L v Ram Chandra Ratanlal 562 or on the ground that a more responsible person ought to have preferred the complaint—Boodhoo v Ram Dyal 18 W R 55 or on the ground that the complainant is a man of low caste and the alleged offence is theft of a turban merely a harm under Sec 95 I P C rather than an offence—Q L v 35 or on the ground that the complainant is actuated by a private grudge and that the alleged offence was committed six years ago and that the act of the accused was held criminal a large part of the evidence would go to jail—Q L v Manji Ratanlal 549 or on the ground that the complainant had no personal knowledge of the facts alleged—In re Kankuchand Ratanlal 667 or on the ground that the complainant has been exonerated in a previous proceeding as to the facts alleged in the complaint—1887 P P 22

679 Recording reasons.—The Magistrate is bound to record his reasons for dismissing the complaint, for if that is not done, it would be impossible for the High Court to consider whether the discretion vested in the Magistrate under this section has been properly exercised or not—Baidyanath v Muspratt 14 Cal 141, 2 P L T 142, Harnandan v Atul, 26 Cr L J 1502 (Pat). An order of a Magistrate dismissing a complaint under this section without recording any reasons for dismissal but merely stating that he agrees with the police report, is improper and will be set aside—Ahmed v Ameena 7 M L T 175, 11 Cr L J 331.

The words in this section are he shall record therefore failure to record reasons is a direct disobedience of law and not a mere irregularity—Maniruddin v Abdul Rauf 40 Cal 41. Contra—5 M L T 79 where such failure was held to be a mere irregularity but in this case the omission was supplied by a statement under Sec 441.

680 Effect of dismissal.—A dismissal of a complaint after hearing the complainant and after considering the result of an investigation ordered under sec 202 amounts to a legal determination of the complaint, and the complainant can be prosecuted for making a false charge under sec 211 I P C—6 C W N 295. Until a complaint is dismissed under this section or is otherwise disposed of, no proceedings can be taken under sec 211 I P C against the complainant—3 C W N 758, followed in 4 C L J 88. Where a complaint has been illegally dismissed (e.g. without examining the complainant), the complainant cannot be prosecuted under sec 182 or 211 I P C for bringing a false charge—In re Ningappa, 48 Bom 360, 26 Bom L R 153, 27 Cal 921, Aly Mohd v Emp 1912 P. R. 2, Ravi Sarup v A L 4 O C 127.

When a complaint has been dismissed under this section, before the issue of process to the accused no compensation to the accused (Sec 250) can be awarded—Azam v Mir Abdulla, 1897 P R 14, Harphul v Manku, 1906 P R 3. It can be awarded only when the accused being summoned to attend Court is discharged or acquitted, and the complaint is found to be frivolous or vexatious—Har Phul v Manku, 1906 P R 3.

So also, no suit for malicious prosecution will lie against the complainant, when the complaint is dismissed under this section—25 M L J 1.

681. Power to rehear complaint or hear fresh complaint.—A dismissal under this section is a dismissal without a trial, it is therefore open to a Magistrate to rehear a complaint which he has dismissed under sec 203 or to hear a fresh complaint, though the order of dismissal has not been set aside by a higher Court—Emp v Chinna Kaliappa, 29 Mad 126 (T. B.), Subbareddi v Kamal, 16 Cr L J 814 (Mad), Q L v Dolegoind, 28 Cal. 211, 9 All 85, 36 Cal 415, Makkhatambi v Hassan Ali, 1 N L R 18, Emp v Heryer, 36 All 53, 5 A L J 137, 29 All 7, Jai Kishen

v Kalla 1 Cr L J 379 (All) 1907 P R 9 1911 P R 10 (overruling 1894 P R 33) H E v Nga Pu 2 L B R 27 (F B) (Contra—Kamal chandra v Gour Chand 4 Cal 286 73 Cal 983 18 Mad 255 where a fresh complaint was held to be barred) In Jasua v Enp 21 A L 215 it has been held that the Magistrate cannot reopen the same case but there is no bar to the entertainment of a second complaint on the same facts

Where a first complaint has been dismissed under sec 259 it is not a sufficient ground for refusing to entertain a second complaint and dismissing it again under sec 203—Bulchand v Chandoomal 8 S L R 196

When a Magistrate has dismissed a complaint his successor or any other Magistrate can entertain a fresh complaint on the same facts—36 All 129 Bijoo v H E 2 P L J 34 18 Cr L J 296 Sheogovind v Emp 1 P L T 293 In re Mahadev 27 Bom L R 357 26 Cr L J 991 (But in 22 All 106 it has been held that a Magistrate of co ordinate authority cannot entertain a fresh complaint on the same facts or re open the old complaint as if it were an appeal or matter of revision In 2 C W N 290 it is laid down that a complaint once dismissed by a Magistrate can not be revived by his successor in office)

But although a previous order dismissing the complaint or discharging the accused is no bar to the institution of a fresh case against the same accused still a new complaint on the same facts should not be entertained unless new facts which could not with reasonable diligence have been brought forward in the previous proceedings would be adduced or unless there was some manifest error or manifest miscarriage of justice in the previous proceedings—U Shue v Ma Sein 26 Cr L J 284 A I R 1925 Rang 114 M Tha Kin v Nga E Tha (1904) U B R 119

682 Further inquiry —Where a complaint has been dismissed under this section the High Court or Sessions Judge may direct further inquiry See Sec 436 Where a further inquiry having been ordered under sec 436, the Magistrate after taking some evidence again dismissed the complaint under sec 203 and the Sessions Judge being moved was of opinion that the Magistrate could not dismiss the complaint under sec 203 for the second time but was bound to issue process against the accused held that the Sessions Judge's view was wrong and the second order of dismissal by the Magistrate was perfectly legal—Nidaran Chandra v Sital Chandra 25 C W N 317 But see 11 C W N 316

It has been held in some Calcutta cases that if an order of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused is passed by a Presidency Magistrate, the High Court has no power to direct further inquiry under any of the provisions of this Code Sec 36 does not apply to orders of discharge passed by a Presidency Magistrate sec 439 confers on a Court all the powers of an Appellate Court under sec 123 but that section does not enable a Court of Appeal to direct that further inquiry be made into a case in which an order of dismissal or discharge may have been passed but it confers a power to direct further inquiry only in respect of a case of an appeal from an order of acquittal. Hence it follows that the High Court cannot order further inquiry under this Code after discharge or dismissal of complaint by a Presidency Magistrate but the High Court can do so only under sec 15 of the Charter Act. And its powers of interference under the Charter Act are very limited. It cannot interfere on the ground of any error of law but only on a ground affecting jurisdiction i. e. where the subordinate Court refused or failed to exercise jurisdiction or erred in the exercise of its jurisdiction—Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal 126 (129) Debi Bux v. Jismal 33 Cal 1282 Kedar Nath v. Akhetranath 6 C. L. J. 705. But in several other cases it has been laid down that secs 435 and 439 of this Code confer upon the High Court the power of sending for the records of Presidency Magistrates and of reversing the order of the Magistrates and ordering a further inquiry in the case of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused—Cohille v. Krishno Krishore 26 Cal 746 Duarka Nath v. Beni Madhab 28 Cal 65- (1 B) Malik Pratap v. Khan Mahomed 30 Cr L 994 and the High Court can direct further inquiry, if there are good reasons for doing so although no question of jurisdiction arises in the case—36 Cal 994.

683 Death of complainant—Effect.—As there is no abatement of a criminal case on the death of the complainant a fresh complaint on the same facts need not be made but the old complaint must be treated as pending and proceeded with to its disposal—In re Ramasamiar, 16 Cr L J 713 (Mad.)

CHAPTER XVII

OF THE COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS BEFORE

MAGISTRATES

204 (1) If in the opinion of a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence there is sufficient ground
 Issue of process for proceeding, and the case appears to be one in which, according to the fourth column of the second schedule, a summons should issue in the first instance, he shall issue his summons for the attendance of the accused. If the case appears to be one which, according to that column, a warrant should issue in the first instance, he may issue a warrant, or, if he thinks fit, a summons, for causing the accused to be brought or to appear at a certain time before such Magistrate or (if he has not jurisdiction himself) some other Magistrate having jurisdiction

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the provisions of Section 90

(3) When by any law for the time being in force any process-fees or other fees are payable, no process shall be issued until the fees are paid, and if such fees are not paid within a reasonable time, the Magistrate may dismiss the complaint

685 Magistrate taking cognizance —Where a Joint Magistrate who took cognizance of a case made over the case to a Deputy Magistrate for disposal the former ceased to have any control over the case. The case having been transferred to the Deputy Magistrate that officer alone had jurisdiction to deal with an application for summons until the case was withdrawn from his cognizance. Therefore if he refused to issue process is unnecessary the Joint Magistrate had no jurisdiction to order for its issue—Ijab Lal v. Imp. 3 Cal 783; Fant Bhu an v. Imp. 10 C W N 1086

Offence —Process can issue only for an offence already committed. It is not competent for the Magistrate to issue process in anticipation of an offence. Such a case is for the interference of the Police and not of the Magistrate—Ratanlal 90

A neglect to maintain a wife is not an offence therefore an application for maintenance under sec 488 should not be dismissed under subsection (3) of this section owing to the applicant's failure to comply with an order for the payment of process fees—16 Mad 234

686 Sufficient ground —The only condition requisite for the issue of process is that the complainant's deposition must show some sufficient ground for proceeding. Unless the Magistrate is satisfied that there is sufficient ground for proceeding with the complaint or sufficient material to justify the issue of process he should not issue process—Jogesh v. Abdul 18 Cr L J 626 (Cal). Where the complainant who instituted the prosecution had no personal knowledge of the allegations made in the complaint, the Magistrate should satisfy himself upon proper materials that a case had been made out for the issue of process—Thakur Prosad v. Imp. 10 C W N 1090; Chamroo v. Imp. 11 C W N 170

In exercising the discretion under this section as to whether a should issue, the Magistrate must be guided by his own independent

ment and not by the judgment of others e g an expression of opinion by the Police—4 M H C R 162

687 Issue of process —Proceedings are said to commence under this chapter when processes are issued against the accused, after the issue of process a complaint cannot be dismissed under sec 203—Ratanlal 544 See Note 675 under sec 203

If the Magistrate issues a warrant in a case in which he ought to have issued a summons the error of the Magistrate is not a ground for questioning the proceedings—1 W R 16 Under such circumstances the Magistrate can cancel the warrant and issue summons instead—1 S L R 69 Crown v Zaki Khan 7 S I R 40 14 Cr L J 604

An order directing issue of process is not a judgment within the meaning of sec 369 and therefore a Magistrate making the order of issue of process can rescind the order on sufficient grounds—Lalit Mohan v Nani Lal 27 C W N 631 A I R 1923 Cal 662

When unnecessary —Process is unnecessary when the accused voluntarily appears to answer the charge against him—Ratanlal 8 Where the complainant has taken process against some of the accused the others are entitled to appear and insist that the complaint against them shall be proceeded with or dismissed—76 Bom 557

Refusal to issue process —Where the Police report is true and the Magistrate has directed the case to be entered as such he cannot refuse to issue process simply because there is no chance of conviction and no useful purpose would be served by an inquiry the complainant is entitled to a process against the accused and for the attendance of his witnesses—29 Cal 410 In an inquiry before the Magistrate in a Sessions case the evidence for the prosecution discloses a prima facie case against the accused and the evidence stands un rebutted the Magistrate cannot discharge the accused simply because the evidence appears to be improbable In doing so the Magistrate is really trying the case instead of merely considering whether there are sufficient grounds for commitment—1904 A W N 5

So also when from the examination of the complainant it appears that there is reason for the issue of process against all the accused the Magistrate exercises a wrong discretion in issuing process against some of the accused and in refusing to issue process against the others He must issue process against all—Bishan Dayal v Chedi Khan 4 C W N 560

But where two counter complainants preferred complaints before a Magistrate and he issued process in one case and postponed the issue of process in the counter case until after the disposal of the first case held that the action of the Magistrate was not illegal—Lali v Naurangi 24 Cr L J 120 3 P L T 764 A I R 1922 Pat 618

688 Sub sec (3)—Process fee —An application for maintenance under sec 488 cannot be dismissed for default to pay process fees See 16 Mad 234 cited in Note 685 above

If the case is adjourned the witnesses should be told to appear on the adjourned date and the party should not be required to repeatedly summon his witnesses on payment of fresh process fees A dismissal of complaint on failure to pay such fees in such a case is not proper—Balinaki and v Naval Chand 1917 P I R 60 13 Cr L J 176

205 (1) Whenever a Magistrate issues a summons, he may, if he sees reason so to do dispense with the personal attendance of the accused and permit him to appear by his pleader

(2) But the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case, may, in his discretion at any stage of the proceedings, direct the personal attendance of the accused and if necessary enforce such attendance in manner hereinbefore provided.

689 Scope of section —Although this section speaks of issue of summons it is not confined to summons cases only If in a warrant case the Magistrate issues a summons instead of a warrant to a pardanashin lady he can dispense with her personal attendance—21 Cal 588 Prem Katar v Mai Sham 1908 P W R 20 8 Cr L J 454

Again the section applies only where a summons has been issued to the accused if however a warrant is issued against him his personal attendance cannot be dispensed with unless he is too ill to attend the Court—13 C W N cl In a Patna case where the accused had been arrested by warrant the High Court held that it was illegal to dispense with his personal appearance and to allow him to be represented by a pleader even though he was ill—Abdul Hamid v K E 2 Pat 793 4 P I T 648 24 Cr L J 872 Where the accused absconded after the charge had been framed against him and he was convicted and sentenced in his absence held that as in this case a warrant had been issued for his arrest in the first instance the Magistrate could not dispense with his personal attendance—Crown v Sardar 1917 P R 36 18 Cr L J 975

690 Pardanashin lady —A pardanashin lady cannot as of right claim exemption from personal attendance in Court and the Magistrate cannot dispense with her appearance simply because she is a pardanashin lady—5 All 92 But in a summons case the Magistrate should use his discretion under this section by dispensing with her personal attendance and allowing her to appear by a pleader until he has before him clear direct

69 Appearance by a pleader—On service of summons the accused need not personally attend but may appear by a pleader. Such appearance is a valid appearance and the Magistrate cannot prosecute the accused under section 171 I P C for non appearance (disobedience to summons)—27 Cal 985 no can the Magistrate proceed ex parte and decide the case—24 W R 25 If however the Magistrate requires personal attendance he should direct such appearance on a fixed date and in default may issue a warrant—27 Cal 985

The pleader appearing for the accused may perform all the acts which devolve upon the accused in the course of the trial, thus he can answer the questions put to him by the Court in his examination under sec 342 he can plead or refuse to plead to a charge under sec 255—Crown v Jamal Khatoon 6 S L R 206 14 Cr I J 272

Although the Magistrate can, under sub-section (2) revoke the permission to appear by pleader and enforce the personal attendance of the accused still the Magistrate ought not to do so in a trivial case (e g a case under the Income Tax Act) and on a trivial ground e g merely on the ground that the accused objects to the case being tried by that Magistrate and wants it to be transferred to some other Magistrate—Dwijendra v Emp 38 C L J 9 24 Cr L J 902

Appearance by other persons—Where the accused was represented by her mother in law and the Magistrate proceeded with the case and convicted the accused the conviction was set aside by the High Court as there was no proper representation of the accused in the case—Q E v Vithi Ratanlal 205 but where in an extremely trivial case the accused was represented by her father in law and convicted the High Court refused to interfere—Q E v Chandrabhaga Ratanlal 206

OF INQUIRY INTO CASES TRIABLE BY THE COURT OF SESSION OR HIGH COURT

692 Object of preliminary inquiry —The object of the law in requiring an inquiry before a trial in the Court of Session is to prevent the commitment of cases in which there is no reasonable ground for conviction. This provision of law while it saves the accused persons from detention in custody and prolonged anxiety of undergoing trials for offences not brought home to them also saves the time of the Court of Session from being wasted over cases in which the charge is obviously not supported by such evidence as would support a conviction—Lachman v Juala 5 All 161. A preliminary inquiry also affords the accused an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the circumstances of the offences imputed to him and enables him to make his defence—Rama Larma v Q 3 Mad 351.

No accused can be committed to the Sessions without a preliminary inquiry under this chapter—Emp v Bu Malalaxmi 17 Bom L R 910 16 Cr L J 747.

206 (1) [* * * * *] Any President v Magistrate District Magistrate Sub Divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, or any Magistrate (not being a Magistrate of the third class) empowered in this behalf by the Local Government may commit any person for trial to the Court of Session or High Court for any offence triable by such Court.

(2) But save as herein otherwise provided no person triable by the Court of Session shall be committed for trial to the High Court.

Change —The words Subject to the provision of sec 443 occurring in the old section at the very beginning have been omitted by section 9 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XII of 1923) because the old section 443 which specified the Magistrates competent to inquire into or try a charge against an European British subject has now been repealed and substituted by an entirely new section. See Chapter XVIII.

The italicised words have been added by sec 57 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923). This amendment is on the same lines as that of section 144 (1). We do not think that the powers under this section should be granted to a Magistrate of the third class—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

693 Committal by Magistrate without jurisdiction.—Where the committing Magistrate has authority to commit but has no territorial jurisdiction in the place where the offence is committed the irregularity will be cured by sec 531 unless it has occasioned a failure of justice—Mad 640 17 Mad 402 In 11 C L R 55 3 All 251 and Ratanlal 977 such a committal was held to be void.

Committal to wrong sessions—See Note 549 under sec 177.

649 Offence triable by such Court.—The procedure to be adopted under this chapter is not confined to cases exclusively triable by the Court of Session but is also applicable to cases which in the opinion of the Magistrate concerned ought to be tried by such Court—6 All 477 as for instance cases in which the Magistrate cannot inflict a adequate punishment upon the accused—24 Cal 429 4 Bom L R 85. In such cases the Magistrate must state his grounds in the order of commitment so as to enable the High Court in revision to judge whether he has exercised a proper discretion—11 Bom I R 18 Diwan Chand v Crown 8 S L R 73 15 Cr L J 664.

If the case is one which the Magistrate can try and in which he can inflict adequate punishment he cannot commit it to the Sessions but should try it himself—Diwan Chand v Crown 8 S L R 23 Emp v Asha Bhatti 15 Bom L R 908 K E v Dharam Singh 3 A L J 14 Emp v Ram Jatan 21 A L J 470.

If the offence is one triable exclusively by the Court of Session the Magistrate is bound either to discharge the accused or commit him for trial but he cannot make over the case for trial to a Deputy Commissioner with special powers under sec 30—7 C W N 457 nor can he try it himself—Ratanlal 953.

It is illegal to commit summons cases to the Sessions—K E v Dharam Singh 3 A L J 14.

207 The following procedure shall be adopted in inquiries before Magistrates where the case is triable exclusively by a Court of Session or High Court, or, in the opinion of the Magistrate ought to be tried by such Court.

Procedure in inquiries preparatory to commitment

695 Ought to be tried.—The words ought to be tried in this section and sec 347 must be read with sec 254. A case which ought to be tried by the Court of Session is one which the Magistrate is not competent to try or one in which in his opinion adequate punishment cannot be inflicted by him—4 Bom L R 85 16 Bom 580 1886 A W N 256 Emp v Hanuman 20 Cr L J 97 (Nag) Emp v Ismail 11 S L R 79 Dixitichand v Crown 8 S L R 23 Q L v Kayimulla 24 Cal 429 See also Emp v Jagmohan 6 A L J 989 Emp v Bindeshin, 41 All 424 If the case is one which he has jurisdiction to dispose of or if he can inflict adequate punishment he should not send up the case for trial to the Court of Session—Dixantichand v Crown 15 Cr L J 664 8 S L R 23 A L v Dharam Singh 3 A L J 14 Emp v Asha Bhatti 15 Bom L R 998 14 Cr L J 637 he should not commit the case if he can try it himself, on the sole ground that the accused had been committed in another case—Emp v Hanuman, 20 Cr L J 97 (Nag) But in Crown v Ali 1917 P R 13 and Crown v Bhagatathi 42 Mad 83 (dissenting from the above cases) it has been held that the incompetency of the Magistrate to try the case or to pass adequate sentence is not the only ground for committal The Magistrate may commit for any other sufficient reason Thus where the Magistrate committed certain persons to the Sessions on charges under sec 147 I P C not because he could not pass adequate punishment but because other persons on the other side have been committed to the Court of Session on charges under Secs 304 325 148 and 149 I P C it was held that the committal was not illegal—Crown v Ali 1917 P R 13 18 Cr L J 524

208. (1) The Magistrate shall when the accused appears Taking of evidence or is brought before him, proceed to hear produced the complainant (if any), and take in manner hereinafter provided all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution or in behalf of the accused, or as may be called for by the Magistrate

(2) The accused shall be at liberty to cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution, and in such case the prosecutor may re-examine them.

(3) If the complainant or officer conducting the prosecution, Process for production of further evidence or the accused, applies to the Magistrate to issue process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of any document or thing, the Magistrate shall issue such process unless, for reasons to be recorded, he deems it unnecessary to do so

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to require a Presidency Magistrate to record his reasons

696 Remand of accused before taking evidence—A person arrested under a warrant should be brought promptly before the Magistrate and the Magistrate has then no authority to further detain him in custody or remand him to prison without sufficient cause—70 W R 23 If from the absence of the witness or from any reasonable cause it becomes necessary or advisable to defer the inquiry the Magistrate instead of immediately examining the complainant and his witnesses is required by this section may remand the accused person If there is some evidence available and further evidence is forthcoming it may be desirable to postpone the inquiry for a short period in order that when commenced it may be continuous But the fact that there is or may be a great body of evidence forthcoming against the accused is not a ground of detention for an inordinate period—6 Mad 63 Similarly where there is no evidence at all to begin with a Magistrate will not be justified in remanding the prisoner in the expectation that evidence might turn up 4 B L R App 1

697 Taking evidence pro d ced A commitment made without taking any evidence on a preliminary inquiry is illegal Ratanlal 100 Under this section it is the duty of the Magistrate to take all evidence tendered by both sides before framing a charge—Crown v Po Njan 1 L B R 348 In every inquiry into a Sessions case it is the duty of the committing Magistrate to make a full and careful inquiry and to record the whole evidence in the case He should do so even when the accused has made a confession as confessions are in many cases retracted at the trial—Ratanlal 842 The Magistrate is bound to take all such evidence as may be produced (1) in support of the prosecution (2) on behalf of the accused and (3) as may be called for by the Magistrate—Durga Dutt v K E 10 A L J 144 13 Cr L J 443 A commitment or discharge without examination of all the witnesses for the prosecution is illegal—4 Mad 227 4 Mad 329 The prosecutor is bound to produce all evidence in his favour directly bearing on the charge and to call those witnesses who prove their connection with the transaction in question and are able to give important information unless there is reasonable belief that they will not speak the truth—8 Cal 121 The prosecutor should not refuse to call or put into the witness box any witness for the prosecution merely because the evidence of such witness might on some respects be favourable to the defence—15 All 84 It is his duty to call all witnesses who can throw any light on the inquiry whether they support the prosecution theory or the defence theory—1 P L T 161 But if the prosecutor is of opinion that a witness is a false witness or is likely to give false testimony he is not bound to call that witness—16 All 84 14 All 521 15 All 6

If all the witnesses are not called for the prosecution without sufficient cause the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution—8 Cal 121 But no corresponding inference will be drawn against the accused for non production of his witnesses. He may rely on the witnesses for the prosecution or call his own witnesses or meet the charge in any other way he chooses—8 Cal 121 Ashraf Ali v K E 21 C W N 1152 19 Cr L J 81. In a recent Patna case it has been laid down that if the prosecution did not send up all the material witnesses it is the duty of the committing Magistrate to call and examine them himself in order to determine which side was speaking the truth—Pers ad v Emp 26 Cr L J 1589 A I R 19 6 Pat 5.

The Magistrate is competent to cross examine the prosecution witnesses in order to consider whether the witnesses are credible or not—Emp v Bai Mahalaxmi 17 Bom L R 910 16 Cr L J 747.

Evidence for the accused—The Magistrate is not empowered to frame a charge or make out an order for commitment until he has taken all such evidence as the accused may produce or is prepared to produce before him for hearing—Q E v Ahmed 20 All 264 Emp v Muhammed Hadi 26 All 177 Jaswant Singh v Emp 21 A L J 911 46 All 137. The accused must be given an opportunity of adducing evidence on his behalf and the Magistrate cannot refuse to take it without recording his reasons—Ratanal 100.

698 Sub section (2)—Right of cross examination—Under this subsection the accused has a right to cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution. Refusal by a Magistrate to allow the accused to cross examine the prosecution witnesses during the inquiry is arbitrary and improper. The deposition of the prosecution witnesses during the inquiry are not to be deemed as duly taken if the accused had not had an opportunity to cross examine them and cannot be treated as evidence at the Sessions trial—Q E v Sagal 21 Cal 642.

Under this section the accused has the right to cross examine the prosecution witnesses before the proceedings have reached the stage in which it may be necessary to draw up a charge—5 C W N 110 21 Cal 642 Durga Dutt v K E, 10 A L J 144 Baldeo v K E 19 O C 239 18 Cr L J 105. Where an application to cross examine was made before the charge was framed and before the Magistrate had decided to commit the case to the Court of Session, he was bound to allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses—Jyotsna Nath v Emp 31 Cal 44 (445). The proper time for cross examination of a witness in an inquiry under this chapter is in the ordinary course immediately after the examination in-chief of that particular witness—Emp v Arnold 6 L B R 129 5 Bur L T 239 Tam v Emp 9 L B R 109 11 Bur L T 144. As each witness is examined by the prosecution he should be then and there cross-examined by the accused and re-examined by the prosecution and allowed to go home.

and it is not a convenient procedure to allow cross examination to be reserved until after the examination in chief of all the prosecution witnesses has been finished—Durga Dutt v K E 10 A L J 144 13 Cr L J 443 In re Mahomed Hasim 14 M L T 532 15 Cr L J 29 Tam's v Emp 11 Bar L T 144 In Jogendra v Mohlal, 39 Cal 885 16 C W N 1155 however, it has been held that it is open to the Magistrate to allow cross examination of the prosecution witnesses even after a charge is drawn up See this case cited under sec 213 (2)

But where a case was at first begun as a warrant case and the accused had not cross examined the witness because in a warrant case he could reserve his rights to do so until after the framing of the charge but after hearing the prosecution evidence the Magistrate came to the conclusion that the case was a Sessions case and thereupon converted the proceeding into one under this chapter held that the accused had a right to have the witnesses recalled for cross examination as he had been prejudiced by the sudden change of procedure—Diamirchi v Emp, 19 A L J 463 23 Cr L J 496

The procedure of this section is to be followed in cases under sec 347 See sec 347 as now amended

699 Sub section (3) —Summoning witnesses —Before committing the accused to the Sessions the Magistrate should if so required by the accused compel the attendance of witnesses for the defence If he commits an accused to the Sessions without examining the witnesses applied for under this subsection the order of commitment is invalid—Emp v Muhammal Hadi 26 All 177 The accused (as well as the complainant) has the right to call upon the Magistrate to compel the attendance of witnesses who have been summoned but failed to attend—1 C W N 548 But the Magistrate has also a discretion to refuse to issue process if he thinks it unnecessary to do so He may refuse process where there has been an inordinate delay in asking for it e g when the accused made the application for process not until the charge was about to be drawn up—Sessions Judge v Kangaya 36 Mad 321 23 M L J 368 The Magistrate may reject the application for summoning witnesses if it is made on the date fixed for passing the order of commitment—Emp v Sarath 42 Cal 608 19 C W N 335

Moreover it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to summon every person named as a witness by the complainant 23 W R 9 For instance Hindu ladies of respectability and secluded habits would not be compelled to attend as witnesses when no distinct case is made out against the accused—3 W R 46

If the Magistrate refuses to issue process he must record his reasons for so doing if he rejects the application for process without recording reasons he acts illegally—3 All 392

But if the Magistrate issues process for the attendance of witnesses, he is bound to examine them and cannot refuse to do so. Therefore where on the application of the accused the Magistrate summoned witnesses for the defence and consented to make a local inspection, but under a direction from the Sessions Judge committed the accused for trial without examining those witnesses and without making the local inspection it was held that the commitment was illegal and should be set aside—Emp v Mathura, 1906 A W N 306 4 C L J 451

209 (1) When the evidence referred to in Section 208, sub-sections (1) and (3), has been taken, and

When accused person to be discharged

he has (if necessary) examined the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, such Magistrate shall, if he finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial, record his reasons and discharge him, unless it appears to the Magistrate that such person should be tried before himself or some other Magistrate, in which case he shall proceed accordingly

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case, if, for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless

700 Examination of the accused.—The object of examining the accused is to enable a Judge to ascertain from time to time particularly if the accused is undefended what explanation he may offer regarding any facts stated by a witness appearing against him so that these facts should not stand unexplained—1 M H C R 199 6 Cal 96 But the accused should not be examined for the purpose of making him confess his guilt or admit facts which may go to incriminate him—2 C W N 702 1 C L R 436, 1 M H C R 199 10 Mad 295 6 C L R 431 See Note 974 under sec 342

Moreover, the accused should not be examined for the purpose of filling up gaps in the evidence for the prosecution—26 Cal 41 nor for the purpose of supplementing the evidence where it is deficient—1 C L R 436 The accused must be examined as an accused and not as a witness. Where on a complaint against two persons for an offence the committing Magistrate inquired into the case against one of them and examined the other as a witness, the second accused could not be committed to the Sessions in the absence of a preliminary inquiry into his case and without examining him as an accused—Emp v Bai Mahalaxmi 17 Bom L R 910 16 Cr L J 747

It is not left to the discretion of the committing Magistrate as to whether he should examine the accused or not he is bound to examine It is the duty of the Magistrate before committing the accused to examine him for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him If the Magistrate commits the accused without examination the commitment should be quashed if it has occasioned a failure of justice—3 Mad 636

The accused should not be ordered to file any written statement—Weir 255 but if he chooses to make any statement the Court should not refuse to allow him to do so—10 C L R 54

701 Duty of Magistrates—sufficient grounds —A Magistrate should not commit an accused to the Sessions simply because the case is a Sessions case and because the evidence for the prosecution discloses an offence He may examine the accused and his witnesses and decide whether there are sufficient grounds for commitment—Emp v Dukes 1899 A W N 135

The words sufficient grounds of commitment are ambiguous and have led to a difference of opinion among the High Courts as to whether the Magistrate should weigh the evidence and decide whether the conviction of the accused is certain or whether the Magistrate should merely see if a prima facie case has been made out and there is a possibility of conviction

On the one hand it has been laid down that in deciding whether there are sufficient grounds for commitment the Magistrate is to see whether there are credible witnesses to facts which if believed by a jury would justify the conviction of the accused but it is not the duty of the Magistrate to weigh the evidence If he proceeds to weigh the evidence to accept some statements and reject others to deal with probabilities or to draw inferences as to knowledge or intention he is in reality dealing with the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused and is usurping the functions of the trial Court He must not in any way encroach upon the functions of the jury—National Bank v Kotlandarama 14 M L T 200 14 Cr L J 529 The Magistrate has not to pronounce a definite judgment on the question whether the accused is guilty or innocent The only question he has to decide is whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial i.e. whether there is or is not sufficient legal evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion—Fattu v Fattu 26 All 564 The words sufficient grounds of commitment do not mean sufficient grounds of conviction but evidence which is sufficient to put the accused on his trial and such a case arises when credible witnesses make statements which if believed would sustain a conviction The weighing of their testimony with regard to improbabilities and apparent discrepancies is more properly a function of the Court which is to try the case than that of the committing Magistrate Ratanlal 319 11 Bom 372 27 Bom 84 1903 P R 14 When the Legislature speaks of sufficient grounds for committing for trial it should not be supposed to have spoken of sufficient grounds for conviction The intention of the legislature is to make a distinction between grounds of commitment and grounds for conviction Satisfactory proof of the guilt of the accused is the ground for conviction Satisfactory evidence to go to trial must be regarded as the ground for committing for trial What the inquiring Magistrate has got to try and determine is not whether the case has been made out by the prosecution but only whether there is a case for trial There is always a case for trial when the evidence is of such a nature that the guilt of the accused can be held to be proved or disproved only as the result of the valuing and the weighing of evidence But if the evidence be of such a nature that no reasonable person and no tribunal Judge or jury would ever on that evidence hold the accused guilty it follows that there is no case for trial and it is then a case for the enquiring Magistrate to discharge—In re Mania Manicka 48 Mad 874 49 M L J 155 26 Cr L J 1570 A I R 1925 Mad 1061 What the Magistrate has to consider is not whether the conviction of the accused is reasonably certain but whether there is evidence on which a conviction is possible in law—27 Bom 84 Where the prosecution produced a good deal of direct evidence it is no function of the Magistrate to weigh the evidence but he should commit the accused person for trial It is the duty of the Magistrate to commit when the evidence for the prosecution is sufficient to make out a prima facie case against the accused—Manila v Crown 4 Lah 69 5 Lah L J 276

On the other hand there are some cases in which it has been laid down that a Magistrate is competent to weigh the evidence and to decide whether it is credible or not Thus in an earlier Allahabad case it has been held that the power given to Magistrates under this section extends to weighing of evidence and the expression sufficient grounds must be understood in a wide sense so as to indicate such evidence as would justify a conviction—5 All 161 Notwithstanding direct evidence adduced against the accused it is not incompetent to a Magistrate to examine the credibility of the evidence to see whether the prosecution case is improbable and the evidence unreliable—Rash Behari v Emp 1 C W N 117 In re Bai Parbati 35 Bom 163 Munshi Mander v Haru 25 Cr L J 1089 6 P L T 146 Tinkhori v Emp 1 P L T 153 21 C L J 328 1922 M W N 326 Sultan v Crown 1909 P R 10 Mir Abdulla v Crown 1910 P L R 215 11 Cr L J 751 The Magistrate has discretion and power to weigh the evidence in order to see whether the case is a fit one for the jury to decide or whether there is no prima facie case for the accused to meet—Thun Malai I anlaya v Lmp 42 M I J 49 30 M I T 77 23 Cr L J 209 It is open to the committing Magistrate to form his opinion with regard to the credibility of the witnesses called before him but of course it is not his duty to closely criticize their evidence—Tarapada v Kalipada 51 Cal 81 (852) 24 C W N 587 Where charges exclusively triable by a Court of Session are brought before a Magistrate and some evidence is offered in support thereof it is not his duty in all cases to commit the accused to the Sessions The Magistrate should exercise his discretion and after weighing the evidence decide whether or not he should try the case himself—Lmp v Hari Das 37 C I J 34 In re Kalyan Singh 21 All 265

702 When Magistrate should commit—(1) Where there is credible evidence which if believed shows that there is a prima facie case which ought to be tried at the Sessions the Magistrate should commit the case to the Sessions and not try it himself—15 Mad 39 Tarapada v Kalipada 51 Cal 849 (852) 1908 P R 14 National Bank v Kathandarama 14 M L T 200 Jamal Mahomed v Moideen 9 M L T 71 12 Cr L J 20 2 Weir 258 1904 A W N 5 11 Bom 372 Makhni v Iarand Ali 18 A L J 23 21 Cr L J 318

(2) Where the question of discharge or commitment turns on probabilities the Magistrate ought rather to leave the decision to the Sessions Court than to order a discharge on the improbabilities of the case by giving the benefit of doubt to the accused—Fattu v Fattu 26 All 564 Chiranj Lal v Ram Lal 1904 A W N 5 Akbar Ali v Raja Bahadur 27 Cr L J 2 (All) Makhni v Far and Ali 18 A I J 23 In re Bai Parvati 35 Bom 163 11 Bom 372 14 W R 16 1917 L B R 3rd Qr 29 Idas Tekchand v Saban 15 S L R 1

(3) Where a person is charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session and there is some evidence to support the story of the complainant it is the duty of the Magistrate to commit the accused for trial by that Court and not to disregard the graver charge merely because he considers the prosecution story to be an exaggeration and to convict the accused of other minor offences immediately connected with the graver offence—23 C W N 1021

(4) Where the evidence discloses a circumstance of aggravation which makes the offence one cognizable by a higher Court it becomes the duty of the Magistrate to use the proper procedure for sending the case to the higher Court and not to try it himself It is an evasion of law to treat an aggravated offence as an ordinary offence and thus to introduce a different jurisdiction or a lower scale of punishment—13 Bom 502 Jamal Mahomed v Moideen 9 M L T 71 12 Cr L J 20 10 Cal 85 24 M d 675

703 When Magistrate should not commit—(1) Where no prima facie case has been made out—15 Mad 39 2 Weir 255

(2) When the Magistrate is clearly of opinion that the evidence for the prosecution is on the whole untrustworthy and that there is no reasonable probability of the case ending in a conviction—7 C W N 77 Tarapada v Kalipada 51 Cal 849 Fattu v Fattu 6 All 564 In re Bai Parvati 35 Bom 163 In re Damappa 15 Cr I J 373 (Mad) 5 All 161 Thirumalais v Emp 42 M L J 49 In re Naramban 19 A M W N 376 Manlu v Crown 4 Lah 69 23 Cr I J 601 (Lah) Dharam Singh v Jyoti Prasad 37 All 355 Id Abdul v Baldeo 44 All 57 Akbar Ali v Raja Bahadur 27 Cr I J 2 (All) Emp v Ganpat 46 All 537 (538) 27 A I J 411 Tinkouri v Emp 1 P I T 153 15 S L R 1 1917 U B R 3rd Qr 29 If the Magistrate is satisfied that the charge is without foundation he is entitled and indeed it is his duty to discharge the accused even though the statements of the prosecution if accepted at their face value might make out a prima facie case against the accused—Emp v Ganpat Lal 46 All 537 (dissenting from Chiranjil Lal v Ram Lal 1904 A W N 5) Though in case of doubt the Magistrate may be justified in leaving the case for the jury to decide still if he is convinced that the evidence is false it is his duty to discharge the accused—Kasim Ali v Sarada 30 C. W N 336 But the Magistrate must exercise a proper discretion in ordering the discharge of any person charged with a serious offence. It is not enough for the Magistrate merely to doubt some portions of the prosecution evidence. He must be satisfied that the prosecution will fail and rightly fail in the sessions Court—Citlida v Emp 1 O W N 402 11 O L J 654 25 Cr L J 1189

(3) Where no evidence is forthcoming against the accused owing to the absence of the prosecutor and his witnesses and the case is not one in which the Magistrate ought to adjourn the inquiry—15 W R 53

In all the above cases the Magistrate should discharge the accused

(4) Where the charge is not so serious as to justify a committal the Magistrate should not shirk the responsibility of trying the case by committing it to the Sessions—Crown v Ahmed Shah 1 S I R 103

704 Recording reasons—A Magistrate discharging an accused person under this section should record his reasons for so doing. But if he omits to record reasons it cannot be said that the order of discharge is illegal—41 B R 36 But the Magistrate is not authorised to write a judgment. All that he is empowered to do is to record reasons for a discharge if he makes such an order and to sign the order of discharge—Haid Rim v Ganga Sahai 40 All 615 16 A L J 486 19 Cr I J 706

705 Effect of discharge—fresh proceedings—An order of discharge does not amount to an acquittal. The discharge of a person accused of offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session is no bar to his apprehended and brought before a Magistrate with a view to his commitment—Q v Telkoo, 8 W R 61 10 Bom 319 See sec 437 Even if the Magistrate purports to acquit the accused such an acquittal is really a discharge and is no bar to fresh commitment Thus where a complaint was made of an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session and the Magistrate took evidence and framed a charge for a minor offence and acquitted the accused the order of acquittal was in effect an order of discharge in respect of the original offence complained of, and the Sessions Judge in revision could order the commitment of the accused on the original charge under sec 436 (now sec 437)—24 Mad 136 Khaun v Emp 25 Cr L J 1368 (Sind) Contra—20 Cal 633 23 Mad 225 See these cases cited under sec 437

The District Magistrate or Sessions Judge directing further inquiry or commitment under sec 437 is bound to consider all the grounds upon which the order of discharge has been passed including a consideration of the evidence which has been disbelieved or held to be insufficient to establish a prima facie case—7 C W N 77

Compensation—No compensation should be awarded to the accused person discharged under this section on the ground that the charge is vexatious if the case is one triable exclusively by the Court of Session—Q E v Lalbu Ratanlal 961 See sec 250

706 Subsection (2)—Discharge at early stage—Subsection (2) relieves a Magistrate from the necessity of going on with an inquiry or trial when he is reasonably convinced on what has been already deposed to that a criminal charge cannot be sustained—Dhanjibhai v Pyarji Ratanlal 201 Thirumalais Pandaya v Emp 42 M L J 49 23 Cr L J 209

707 Interference by High Court—See secs 436 437 If an order of discharge is passed by a Presidency Magistrate the High Court can interfere and direct a commitment not merely by virtue of the power given by sec 15 of the Charter Act but also by the powers conferred by sec 439 of this Code—Emp v Varjundas 27 Bom 84 (following 26 Cal 746 and dissenting from 27 Cal 126) See Note 682 under sec 203

210 (1) When, upon such evidence being taken and such examination (if any) being made, the Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, he shall frame a charge under his hand, declaring with what offence the accused is charged

(2) As soon as such charge has been framed, it shall be read and explained to the accused, and a copy thereof shall, if he so requires, be given to him free of cost

Charge to be explained, and copy furnished to accused.

Change —The words "such charge" have been substituted for the words "the charge" by section 58 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 "We have made this verbal amendment to meet a suggestion of the Bengal Government"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

708 "Upon such evidence" —See section 208 It is illegal to commit an accused without taking any evidence in the preliminary inquiry—Ratanlal 100 So also, it is illegal to frame a charge or order commitment without taking all the evidence produced by the accused—20 All 264 If the case is transferred from the Court of one Magistrate to another, the latter can commit the case to the Sessions acting upon the evidence recorded by the former—K E v Nanhua, 12 A L J 467 36 All 313 13 Cr L J 354

709. Sufficient grounds —See Note 701 under section 209 A commitment can be made only when there are sufficient grounds for committing, that is to say, not merely sufficient allegations as to the offence which may or may not be credible but such grounds as satisfy the Magistrate as being sufficient to support a charge A District Magistrate cannot therefore order a Subordinate Magistrate to commit a case unless it appears that the latter had no good reason to discredit the prosecution witnesses and that their evidence was sufficient in law to form the basis of a conviction—Emp v Rauji, 9 Bom L R 225 5 Cr L J 213

The discretion given to Magistrates to decide whether there are sufficient grounds for commitment is a judicial discretion and must be exercised with care and on some proper ground It is an improper exercise of discretion to add a grave charge without sufficient evidence, for the mere purpose of committing the case to the Sessions—Emp v Mahomed Khan, 11 Bom L R 18 9 Cr L J 163

710 Commitment of case triable by Magistrate —A Magistrate is competent to commit a case not exclusively triable by the Court of Session, if he cannot inflict adequate punishment in the case See notes under sections 206 and 207

But a Magistrate going on leave does not exercise proper discretion if he commits a case triable by himself to the Sessions simply because the witnesses for the accused are not in attendance and it would be inconvenient for his successor to begin the trial afresh—Anonymous, Ratanlal 110, so also, a Magistrate ought not to commit the accused in a case of theft merely because the case was connected with another case which he was bound by law to commit—Imp v Asha Bhatti 15 Bom L R 998 14 Cr I J 657

When two or more persons are jointly indicted and the jurisdiction of the Magistrate is ousted in the case of one of them by reason of the offence committed by him being one triable only by the Court of Session the proper course is to commit all of them to the Sessions and not to try the others himself and commit that one person to the Sessions—Anonymous 1 Weir 418 Probodh Kumar v Mohini 22 Cr L J 480 (Cal)

711 Frame of charge—See section 216 as to the procedure in case of commitment without any charge or with an erroneous or imperfect charge

The Magistrate when he has framed a charge is bound to read it out to the accused and to ask him if he wishes to have any witnesses summoned to give evidence on his behalf before the Sessions Court—Q v Hurnoth 2 W R 50

When a Magistrate has given his reasons for committing the case for trial the Sessions Judge must either accept the charge as framed or frame others himself. But the Code does not authorise him to insist on a re-drawing of the charge by the Magistrate unless he specifies the charge which he wishes to be set up—In re Randhona 25 W R 17

The framing of a charge does not amount to an order of commitment and after the charge is framed the Magistrate does not become functus officio in respect of the case. He can amend the charge or can proceed with the case himself. He can consider whether he ought to commit or not—Emp v Vankatesh 1 Bom L R 571 11 Cr L J 486. He can even discharge the accused. See sec 213 (2) and notes thereunder. The ruling in Ratanlal 161 is no longer good law. But once an order of commitment is passed under sec 213 the Magistrate has no power to proceed any further with the case—12 Bom L R 51

211 (1) The accused shall be required at once to give in List of witnesses for orally or in writing a list of the persons defence on trial (if any) whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on his trial

(2) The Magistrate may, in his discretion allow the accused Further list to give in any further list of witnesses at a subsequent time and, where the accused is committed for trial before the High Court, nothing in this section shall be deemed so preclude the accused from giving, at any time before his trial, to the Clerk of the Crown a further list of the persons whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on such trial

712 Magistrate's duty to require list—The Magistrate is bound under this section to require the accused to give a list of the witnesses he desires to call. It is not enough to put him the question: Have you any evidence? such a question is ambiguous and might suggest to the accused only an inquiry as to whether he had witnesses ready in Court—Emp v Konds 7 Bom L R 723 2 Cr L J 601

If a Magistrate commits an accused person to the Sessions without asking him if he wishes to have any witnesses to be summoned on his behalf to give evidence before the Sessions the omission may be supplied subsequently—Q v Hurnath 2 W R 50

Refusal of accused to give list of names of witnesses—If an accused person, on being called upon under sec 211 declines to give the list he cannot compel the Magistrate after committal to issue any summons for witnesses on his behalf. He is of course entitled to call any witnesses in the Sessions Court whom he may have in Court whether or not he has caused such witnesses to be summoned. The Sessions Judge may in his discretion cause any witnesses to be summoned on the application of the accused and is bound to summon them if he considers that their evidence may be material—19 All 507

The accused is entitled before the committing Magistrate to refuse to disclose the names of the witnesses he wishes to call at the trial and the Magistrate cannot force him to disclose their names or the nature of the evidence they would be called upon to give—14 All 242

Refusal of Magistrate to summon and examine witnesses—On receipt of the list of witnesses the Magistrate is bound to exercise his discretion and state distinctly whether he would summon the witnesses or not. If he is of opinion that the witnesses were included in the list for the purpose of vexation delay or of defeating the ends of justice he ought to proceed under the second proviso of section 216—Q v Rajeswar 16 W R 14

But a Magistrate should not refuse an application for summons on the ground that the witnesses are implicated in the offence with which the accused is charged—Ram Sahai v Sankar 15 W R 7 or on the ground that the number of witnesses is very large—11 Cal 762 or on the ground that he entertains doubts as to the value of their evidence—In re Mohima Chunder 15 W R 15

212 The Magistrate may, in his discretion, summon and

Power of Magistrate to examine such witnesses examine any witness named in any list given in to him under Section 211

713. Discretion of Magistrate—This section gives the Magistrate the widest possible discretion to summon and examine any of the witnesses named in any list given under sec 211 even in cases where the accused has reserved his defence for the Sessions trial. The Magistrate is not bound to record reasons before exercising his powers—18 All 380. The Magistrate is not bound to examine any witness named in the list—Sessions Judge v Kangaya 36 Mad 321 23 M I J 368 13 Cr I J 778.

The discretion of the Magistrate ought not to be interfered with by the Sessions Judge. Therefore when the Magistrate intended to summon some witnesses for the accused and to make a local inspection but had to commit the case to the Sessions at the direction of the Sessions Judge it was held that the Sessions Judge's direction was ultra vires as it unduly interfered with the discretion of the Magistrate and the committal was bad in law—Emp v Mathura 1906 A W N 306 4 Cr L J 451.

213 (1) When the accused on being required to give in a list under Section 211 has declined to do so or when he has given in such list and the witnesses (if any) included therein whom the Magistrate desires to examine have been summoned and examined under Section 212 the Magistrate may make an order committing the accused for trial by the High Court or the Court of Session (as the case may be) and (unless the Magistrate is a Presidency Magistrate) shall also record briefly the reasons for such commitment.

(2) If the Magistrate after hearing the witnesses for the defence is satisfied that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused he may cancel the charge and discharge the accused.

714 Commitment—As to when the Magistrate should or should not commit, see Notes 702 and 703 under sec 209.

A commitment made in the absence of the accused is illegal—C W N 110 but where the accused was allowed to appear by an agent under section 205, a commitment made in the absence of the accused but in the presence of the agent is not illegal—Q v Hurnath 2 W R 50.

Commitment after discharge—Where a Magistrate after examining four witnesses for the prosecution discharged the accused but subsequently becoming aware that there was a fifth witness he cancelled his order of discharge examined the witness and committed the accused to Sessions it was held that the commitment was not illegal—Anonymous 7 M H C R App 40 2 Weir 258.

Commitment to wrong Sessions —See Note 549 under section 177

Signature of Magistrate —The signature of the Magistrate to the warrant of commitment should not be impressed with a stamp. But such a signature is only an irregularity and does not vitiate the proceedings—6 Mad 396

Reasons for commitment —The Magistrate shall briefly record the reasons for commitment. If a Magistrate commits a case triable by himself he is bound to record his reasons for commitment so as to enable the High Court to judge whether the committal is a sound exercise of discretionary power—11 Bom L R 18 Emp v Nanji 38 Bom 114 he must state why the case was not disposed of by himself—8 S L R 73

The Magistrate in his grounds of commitment should specify exactly and precisely the proof against each particular prisoner and the manner in which it is supported—Q v Kodat Kahar 5 W R 6

Commitment of some trial of others —Where several persons are jointly charged with the same offences and it is considered necessary to commit one of them to the Sessions the most convenient course is that all the prisoners should be committed and not that the one person should be committed and the others tried by the Magistrate himself. If however the Magistrate adopts the latter course it cannot be said that he has acted in contravention of any provision of law—In re Kallu Chandelugadu 2 Weir 258 Anonymous 1 Weir 44^a Joint commitment —Where several persons are jointly charged with having committed an offence especially in cases of rioting etc where there are two hostile parties each person should be committed for trial separately and not all together and the trial should also be separate—Q v Sheikh Ba oo 8 W R 47 but a commitment is not to be set aside as illegal because all the accused were jointly committed. The sections of the Code relating to joinder of charges and the Privy Council ruling in 25 Mad 61 refer to trials only and not to commitments—26 Mad 592 1909 A W N 206 7 Bom L R 457 (Contra—Ratanlal 925). In such cases of joint commitment the Sessions Judge should frame separate charges and try the accused separately as if there had been separate commitments—26 Mad 92 1900 A W N 66

715 Subsection (2)—Scope —Subsection (2) is intended to apply for cases where the evidence recorded after the charge so charges are of the case as to leave no reasonable doubt that a conviction is sustainable but it does not apply where the evidence for the offence casts some doubts on the case—Crown v Po Nyah 11 B P 248 Under this section the Magistrate has a discretion even after the charge of cancelling it if after hearing the evidence he considers that there are no longer sufficient grounds for the trial.

on his trial—Nga Hmyin v A L U B R (1917) 3rd Or 29 19 Cr L J 102 If the Magistrate after hearing the defence witnesses comes to the conclusion that their evidence rebuts the evidence produced for the prosecution or renders it so incredible or unreliable that a conviction will not follow he may act upon his opinion and pass an order of discharge under this subsection He is not bound to commit merely because there was some prima facie evidence—Id Abdul v Baldeo 44 All 57 19 A L J 831 22 Cr L J 703

The words witnesses for the defence in subsection (2) are wide enough to cover evidence extracted by cross examination of the prosecution witnesses and therefore it is open to a Magistrate after he has drawn up a charge to allow the accused to cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution and as a result to cancel the charge—Jogendra v Mahlal 39 Cal 885 16 C W N 1155 13 Cr L J 774

This section has been omitted by section 10 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XII of 1933) It provided that if an European British subject and an Indian subject were jointly accused of an offence triable by a Court of Session the Magistrate must commit the case to the High Court and not to the Sessions Judge

215 A commitment once made under Section 213 or Section 214 by a competent Magistrate or by a Court of Session under Section 477 or by a Civil or Revenue Court under Section 478, can be quashed by the High Court only, and only on a point of law	215 A commitment once made under Section 213 [* ] by a competent Magistrate [ *] or by a Civil or Revenue Court under Section 478 can be quashed by the High Court only and only on a point of law
--	--

Change —The words or section 214 occurring in the old section have been omitted by sec 11 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923 This is consequential to the repeal of sec 214

The words or by a Court 477 have been omitted by sec 59 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 This is consequential to the repeal of section 477

716 Scope of section —This section applies only to commitments made under the two sections specified therefore an order of commitment

under sec 436 (now section 437) cannot be quashed under this section—31 Cal 1 In re Kalagava 27 Mad 34 but can be quashed under the revisional powers of the High Court—Pirthi Chand v Sampatta 7 C W N 327 and in that case the High Court can quash the commitment on points of law and of fact—Tambi v Emp 12 Bur L T 6 9 L B R 208 Similarly an order of commitment made by the Sessions Judge under sec 423 cannot be quashed under this section but can be dealt with by the High Court under its revisional powers—King Emp v Nga Thet She 1 Bur L J 230 But an order under sec 576 clause (iv) can neither be quashed under this section nor under the High Court's revisional powers—In re Kalagava 27 Mad 34

This section does not apply to a commitment which is ab initio void e.g. a commitment made by a Magistrate having no territorial jurisdiction over the offence No reference to the High Court is necessary to set aside such a commitment—Emp v Ahim Mundle 11 C L R 55

717 Commitment—This section refers only to a commitment actually made Where a Sessions Judge under sec 436 (now 437) set aside a Magistrate's order of discharge and directed a commitment to be made the High Court could interfere in its revisional powers and could consider the facts as well as the question of law involved—Muthia Chetty v Emp 30 Mad 224 16 M L J 59

A commitment once made stands unless quashed by the High Court and if the High Court is not moved to quash the commitment the trial of the persons must take place in pursuance thereof If a trial has already taken place it serves no purpose to impugn the commitment and it is futile to contend in appeal or in revision that the commitment was illegal—Nair v Emp 7 Lah L J 18 26 P I R 767 A I R 1925 Lah 527

When cannot be quashed—A commitment cannot be quashed after the accused has been put on his trial and has pleaded to the charge before the Sessions Judge—Emp v Sagambar 11 C L R 120 1 S L R 6 2 Weir 261 Kasim Mulla v Emp 4 C L J 114 6 Cr L J 1560 In such a case the Judge should proceed according to law and discharge of the case or the Public Prosecutor may with the consent of the Court withdraw the prosecution under sec 494—Sessions Judge v Arohin 2 Weir 261 In 6 Cal 584 however it has been held that the High Court can quash a commitment at any stage of a criminal proceeding

Only by the High Court—A commitment can be quashed only by the High Court A Magistrate cannot quash the commitment and discharge the accused even though the complainant wishes to compound the case—4 All 150 2 W R 57 A Sessions Judge cannot set aside the commitment and direct the Magistrate to try the case himself—In re Bheema 16 M L J 525 5 Cr L J 99

The Judicial Commissioner when sitting in the Sessions division is not divested of his capacity as a High Court Judge and he has full power to make an order under sec 15 even when sitting as a Sessions Judge—Uthbai v Crown 17 S L R 188 26 Cr L J 148

Where the commitment is made to the High Court (original criminal jurisdiction) the Appellate Criminal Bench of the High Court cannot quash the commitment. In such a case the practice is to apply to the Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction in the High Court—Phanindra v Emp 36 Cal 48 Contra—Crown Prosecutor v Bhagavathi 42 Mad 83 (84) and Em v Ma lay 30 C W N 276 (F B) A I R 1926 Cal 470 where it was held that an application to quash such a commitment should be made to the Appellate or revisional side of the High Court and not to a Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction. In Venkatagiri v N M F r 43 Mad 361 an order of commitment was made by the original civil side of the High Court under sec 478 and an appeal against the order of commitment was preferred to the Appellate side of the High Court.

718 Point of law —The High Court cannot quash a commitment made under sections 213 and 478 except upon a point of law—Emp v Goda Ram 15 A L J 756 19 Cr L J 224 Though an appeal lies under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from an order of commitment made under section 478 by a Judge of the High Court in the original civil side the order cannot be set aside except on a point of law—Venkatagiri v N M Firm 43 Mad 361

The High Court can quash a commitment on the following points of law —(1) Where the Magistrate who committed the case was competent to try it himself and to inflict adequate punishment in the case—A E v Dharam Singh 3 A L J 14 A L v Jagmohan 6 A L J 989 Emp v Asha Bhatti 15 Bom L R 998 Uthbai v Crown 17 S L R 188 (2) Where the order of commitment rests upon a misapprehension and there is no evidence upon which it can be supported—In re Jagathanbal 2 Weir 262 (3) Where the case was triable exclusively by the Magistrate and the Sessions Court had no jurisdiction over it e g a commitment for an offence under the Opium Act (Act I of 1878)—19 All 465 or under Madras Act I of 1866—5 M H C R 277 or under sec 29 of Police Act V of 1861—In re Indrabeer 1 W R 5 (4) When there is absolutely no evidence sufficient to warrant a commitment—2 C L J 46 Nga Hinyin v A E 1917 U B R 3rd Or 29 19 Cr L J 10 Tambi v Emp 9 L B R 208 12 Bur L T 62 5 C W N 411 6 All 98 but see 13 Bom L R 201 and 27 M L J 593 cited below (5) Where the commitment was made in the absence of the accused—5 C W N 110 (6) Where the commitment was based on evidence recorded while the accused was not arrested on the charge at all—Weir 259 (7) Where the commitment was made by the Magistrate not in the exercise of his own discretion but at the suggestion of the District Magistrate and without examining the witnesses for the defence—Emp v Mathura 1906 A W N 306 15 Mad 39 (8) Where the commitment was made without examining the witnesses for the prosecution—1 Mad 27 or without examining the witnesses for the defence—Emp v Md Hadi 20 All 177 Emp v Mathura 1906 A W N 306 Q E v Ahmadi 20 All 204 (9) Where the Magistrate committed the approver who had broken the conditions of pardon tendered to him, along with the other co-accused—23 Bom 493 Q E v Briji Varain 10 All 529 or where such approver was committed before the trial of the other accused was finished—Q E v Sudra 14 All 336 (10) Where the committing Magistrate had no territorial jurisdiction over the offence—KE v Nga Taung, 1 Bur L T 26 (11) Where the committing Magistrate held the inquiry without the certificate of the Political Agent which was necessary in the case—Rim Charan v Crown 5 Lah 416 see this case and other cases cited under sec 188

719 What are not proper grounds for setting aside commitment—

- (1) The High Court cannot set aside a committal merely because the Magistrate made a joint commitment of several accused—see 26 Mad 592 1906 A W N 306 and 7 Bom L R 457 cited under sec 213 (2) A commitment can be quashed only on a point of law and cannot be quashed on the ground that there was no evidence on the committing Magistrate's record to support the charge Emp v Suleman 13 Bom L R 201 1 Cr L J 256 Emp v Emp 6 Cr L J 1045 (Nag) In re Session Judge 7 M L J 503 1 Cr L J 665 so also a commitment cannot be quashed because of its reliance on the credibility of the evidence for the prosecution if there is at least some evidence which would justify the Sessions Judge in his conclusion of guilt or innocence to the jury Mohomed Moideen v Emperor 1 Rang 526 25 Cr L J 61 A commitment cannot be quashed on the ground that the evidence was doubtful The proper remedy in a case will be for the District Magistrate to instruct the Prisoner to withdraw from the prosecution under sec 491 A F v Emperor 7 Bur L T 20 (3) Where a Magistrate going on leave committed a case triable by himself on the ground that the witnesses were not in attendance and that his successor would find it difficult to try the case afresh it was held that the commitment was not illegal and not illegal so as to justify the High Court in setting it aside (4) A commitment is not illegal because it is made by a Magistrate or Judge who gave the direction for the prosecution of a witness (giving false evidence) committed before him Emp v Emperor 7 Bur L T 20 (5) A commitment for false complaint (sec 211 I P C) is not illegal

Magistrate has proceeded on the report of a police officer and has not made a judicial inquiry into the complaint—6 Cal 582 (7) The fact that some of the accused were committed while other persons who were concerned in the offence had not yet been arrested is not a ground for setting aside the commitment—7 M L T 187 (8) A commitment ought not to be quashed on the ground that a civil suit is pending in respect of the subject matter of the offence—18 Bom 581 but the trial of the case may be postponed until the determination of the civil suit—2 Weir 260 (9) Where the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction over the place of offence but the objection taken on this point was overruled by the Sessions Judge the High Court held that there was no sufficient ground for questioning the commitment—17 Mad 402 (10) The High Court cannot interfere when the Magistrate being of opinion that he cannot adequately punish the accused exercises his discretion by committing the case to the Sessions—King Emp v Baldeo 11 A L J 439 14 Cr L J 304 (11) The High Court cannot quash a commitment where the Magistrate though he can inflict the maximum sentence provided for the offence commits the case being of opinion that it should for other reasons be tried by a Court of Session—Crown Prosecutor v Bhagpathi 35 M L J 559 19 Cr L J 997 Ghani v Crown 21 Cr L J 791 14 S L R 83 (12) A commitment will not be quashed on the ground that the committing Magistrate has failed to observe the provisions of sec 360 in respect of some of the witnesses in such a case the trial Court will be directed to recall the witnesses in respect of whom sec 360 was not complied with and to comply with those provisions so far as these witnesses are concerned—Iblur Rahim v Emp 29 C W N 698 A I R 1925 Cal 928

216 When the accused has given in any list of witnesses

under Section 211 and has been committed Summons to witnesses for defence when accused is committed for trial, the Magistrate shall summon such of the witnesses included in the list, as have not appeared before himself, to appear before the Court to which the accused has been committed

Provided that, where the accused has been committed to the High Court, the Magistrate may, in his discretion leave such witnesses to be summoned by the Clerk of the Crown, and such witnesses may be summoned accordingly

Provided, also that if the Magistrate thinks that any witness is included in the list for the purpose

Refusal to summon unnecessary witness unless deposit made of vexation or delay, or of defeating the ends of justice, the Magistrate may require the accused to satisfy him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the evidence of such witness is material, and if he is not so satisfied may refuse to summon the witness (recording his reasons for such refusal) or may, before summoning him, require such sum to be deposited as such Magistrate thinks necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness and all other proper expenses

719A Shall summon —Where the accused has made an application for summoning witnesses the Magistrate must deal with the application and pass an order either granting the prayer of the petition or refusing it. He should not simply order the application to be filed—6 C W N 548. Where a witness once summoned failed to appear there being some delay in the service of summons the Magistrate is bound to make a second attempt (the first attempt being a nominal one) to secure the attendance of the absent witness—Emp v Ruknuddin 4 All 53

720 Second proviso —The second proviso is not intended to enable the Magistrate to inquire generally into what the defence of the accused is to be and to consider whether on learning the nature of the defence he is absolutely to abstain from summoning the whole of the witnesses cited by the accused. The meaning of this proviso is that if among the persons named by the accused as witnesses the Magistrate considers that any particular witness is included for the purpose of vexation and delay he is to exercise his judgment and inquire whether such witness is material—3 Cal 573. And he can require the accused person to satisfy him that the evidence of the witnesses to be summoned is material only when he thinks that the witnesses were included in the list for the purpose of vexation etc otherwise not—In re Raja of Kantis 8 All 668

Refusal to summon witnesses —The accused is entitled to have the witnesses mentioned in the list summoned and examined and the only ground on which a Magistrate can refuse summons is when the Magistrate thinks that the witnesses have been included in the list for the purpose of vexation and delay. The Magistrate should not refuse to summon the witnesses named in the list merely because he thinks that their evidence would not be reliable or material—In re Maring Reddi —Weir 463. Indeed he cannot decide beforehand on the credit to be attached to the evidence of a particular witness unless he has an opportunity of hearing him. By thus prejudging he exceeds the discretion given by this section—Q E v Virasami 19 Mad 375. Again the fact that the accused declined to examine witnesses at the close of the case would be no reason for refusing to summon them to meet fresh evidence taken by the Magistrate subsequent to the close of the defence—6 Cal 714

Recording reasons for refusal —When a Magistrate refuses to summon witnesses he must record his reasons for such refusal and the reasons must show that the evidence of such witnesses is not material. The fact that the Magistrate thought that the reasons assigned by the accused for summoning a witness were not sufficient is not a good ground for refusing to summon him—In re Raja of Kantu 8 All 668

Order to deposit expenses —Though the Magistrate is competent to refuse to summon witnesses still he should fix the amount which he considers necessary to defray the cost of the attendance of persons named in the list and intimate his readiness to issue summons on that amount being deposited—In re Subbaraya 4 M H C R 81. An order refusing to issue summons should be sparingly passed and such an order is improper in a case where the accused is unable or unwilling to deposit money and in consequence is convicted without his witnesses being heard especially if the case is one in which a severe sentence is inflicted—Qadu v. Lm press 1898 P R 7

217 (1) Complainants and witnesses for the prosecution and defence, whose attendance before the Court of Session or High Court is necessary and who appear before the Magistrate, shall execute before him bonds binding themselves to be in attendance when called upon at the Court of Session or High Court to prosecute or to give evidence, as the case may be

(2) If any complainant or witness refuses to attend before the Court of Session or High Court, or to execute the bond above directed, the Magistrate may detain him in custody until he executes such bond or until his attendance at the Court of Session or High Court is required, when the Magistrate shall send him in custody to the Court of Session or High Court as the case may be

721 Whose attendance is necessary —There is no law which obliges the committing Magistrate to cause the attendance at the Sessions Court of every one of the witnesses examined by him irrespective of their evidence being material for the prosecution. It is for the Magistrate to judge as to the necessity of the attendance of those witnesses—Fimp v. Naik Lal 1883 A W N 37

218. (1) When the accused is committed for trial, the

Magistrate shall issue an order to such person as may be appointed by the Local Government in this behalf notifying the commitment and stating the offence in the same form as the charge unless the Magistrate is satisfied that such person is already aware of the commitment and the form of the charge and shall send the charge the record of the inquiry and any weapon or other things which is to be produced in evidence to the Court of Session or (where the commitment is made to the High Court) to the Clerk of the Crown or other officer appointed in that behalf by the High Court

(2) When the commitment is made to the High Court and any part of the record is not in English an English translation of such part shall be forwarded with the record

219 (1) The Magistrate may if he thinks fit summon and examine supplementary witnesses after the commitment and before the commencement of the trial and bind them over in manner hereinbefore provided to appear and give evidence

(2) Such examination shall if possible be taken in the presence of the accused and where the Magistrate is not a Presidency Magistrate

219 (1) The committing Magistrate or in the absence of such Magistrate any other Magistrate empowered by or under Section 206 may if he thinks fit summon and examine supplementary witnesses after the commitment and before the commencement of the trial and bind them over in manner hereinbefore provided to appear and give evidence

(2) Such examination shall if possible be taken in the presence of the accused and where the Magistrate is not a Presidency Magistrate

a copy of the evidence of such witnesses shall, if the accused so require, be given to him free of cost. a copy of the evidence of such witnesses shall * * be given to the accused free of cost.

Change —The italicised words in subsection (1) have been substituted for the words 'The Magistrate' by section 60 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. This amendment provides that the supplementary witnesses may be examined not only by the committing Magistrate but by any other Magistrate in his absence who is empowered to commit for trial.

The words "if the accused so require" occurring in subsection (2) of the old section have been omitted by the same Amendment Act. The accused is now given an absolute right to a copy of the evidence.

722 Scope —This section provides for cases in which there may be an accidental gap in the evidence. In such a case, the Sessions Judge may call additional evidence at the trial under sec 540 or the committing Magistrate may himself take steps before the trial, under sec 219 to supplement the evidence—Mahabir v Emp, 23 Cr L J 79 (Oudh).

The power of the committing Magistrate to call and examine supplementary witnesses ceases with the commencement of the trial. After the trial has commenced the Sessions Judge can cause witnesses to be summoned before himself or under certain circumstances have them examined by commission. But he cannot direct the committing Magistrate to call additional witnesses and hold an inquiry—Hassan v Emp, 1888 P R 29. If after receiving the order of commitment the Sessions Judge, in view of the Magistrate's recorded opinion thinks that further evidence should be taken the proper course is to point out to the committing Magistrate that he should summon and examine any supplementary witnesses who can give evidence and bind them over to appear at the trial, and not to send the case to the Magistrate after the conclusion of the trial and after the opinions of the assessors have been taken—Azalkhan v Emp, 1892 P R 4.

220. Until and during the trial, the Magistrate shall,

Custody of accused subject to the provisions of this Code pending trial regarding the taking of bail, commit the accused, by warrant, to custody

CHAPTER XIX

OF THE CHARGE

Form of Charges

221 (1) Every charge under this Code shall state the offence with which the accused is charged

(2) If the law which creates the offence gives it any specific name the offence may be described in the charge by that name only

(3) If the law which creates the offence does not give it any specific name so much of the definition of the offence must be stated as to give notice of the matter with which he is charged

(4) The law and section of the law against which the offence is said to have been committed shall be mentioned in the charge

(5) The fact that the charge is made is equivalent to a statement that every legal condition required by law to constitute the offence charged was fulfilled in the particular case

(6) In the presidency towns the charge shall be written in English elsewhere it shall be written either in English or in the language of the Court

(7) If the accused has been previously convicted of any offence and it is intended to prove such previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment of a different kind for

(7) If the accused having been previously convicted of any offence is liable by reason of such previous conviction, to enhanced punishment or to punishment of a different kind for which the Court is competent to award, the fact, date and place of the previous conviction shall be stated in the charge. If such statement is omitted the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

subsequent offence, and it is intended to prove such previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment which the Court may think fit to award for the subsequent offence the fact, date and place of the previous conviction shall be stated in the charge. If such statement has been omitted, the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

Illustrations

(a) A is charged with the murder of B. This is equivalent to a statement that A's act fell within the definition of murder given in Sections 299 and 300 of the Indian Penal Code, that it did not fall within any of the general exceptions of the same Code, and that it did not fall within any of the five exceptions to Section 300, or that, if it did fall within Exception I, one or other of the three provisos to that exception applied to it.

(b) A is charged under Section 326 of the Indian Penal Code, with voluntarily causing grievous hurt to B by means of an instrument for shooting. This is equivalent to a statement that the case was not provided for by Section 335 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the general exceptions did not apply to it.

(c) A is accused of murder, cheating, theft, extortion, adultery or criminal intimidation, or using a false property mark. The charge may state that A committed murder, or cheating, or theft, or extortion, or adultery, or criminal intimidation, or that he used a false property mark, without reference to the definitions of those crimes contained in the Indian Penal Code, but the section under which the offence is punishable must, in each instance, be referred to in the charge.

(d) A is charged, under Section 184 of the Indian Penal Code, with intentionally obstructing a sale of property offered for sale by the lawful authority of a public servant The charge should be in those words

Change —Subsection (7) has been amended by sec 61 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 There is some doubt whether under section 221 it is permissible to prove a previous conviction if the enhanced punishment which it is sought to award is not beyond the competence of the Court and the amendment directs that in such a case evidence of the previous conviction may be given —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) This amendment supercedes the ruling in 2 Weir 464 where it was held that if the sentence passed was within the Magistrate's competency the details of the previous conviction need not be given

723 Particulars to be stated in the charge —The object of these sections is to enable the accused to know the substantive charges which he will have to meet and to be ready for them before the evidence is given—Ram Chandar v Emp 17 Cr L J 411 (All) An accused is entitled to know with accuracy and certainty the exact value of the charge brought against him Unless he has this knowledge he will be prejudiced in his defence especially in cases where it is sought to implicate him for acts not committed by himself but by others with whom he is in company —11 Cal 106 Amritlal v K F 42 Cal 937 Chhakari v Emp 26 Cr L J 567 (Cal) Kedar Nath v K F 29 C W N 408 26 Cr L J 849 An accused is entitled to be informed with the greatest precision what acts he is said to have committed and under what section of the Penal Code the acts fall Shes Sa Far v K F O W N 962 27 Cr L J 62 Failure to state in any substantial form the nature and particulars of the offence alleged against the accused would in some cases be a fatal defect which would vitiate the whole proceedings Where an offence charged involves consequences which may be charged in general terms such as may arise in a case of arson where a man may by one act of arson set fire and destroy several stacks of hay or several persons no particular is required, the nature of the offence being sufficiently stated by the date time and place of the setting fire but extortion or obtaining money from persons by unlawful means involves stating with some approach to accuracy the approximate amounts alleged to have been obtained from each person and the nature of the extortion used against each person—Ram Chandar v Emp 17 Cr L J 411 (All)

In a charge of rioting the common object of the unlawful assembly should be specified—9 C W N 599 11 Cal 106 33 Cal 295 Where the object of the unlawful assembly is to take possession of some property the property must be specified in the charge—33 Cal 295 Where there are two objects of an unlawful assembly both the objects must be fel and not one—22 Cal 276 For a charge of conspiracy only an agreement is sufficient so it is sufficient to include in the charge the agreement which is alleged to have been arrived at between the conspirators—Dishambhar v K E 2 O W N 760 26 Cr L J 1602 Where a conspirator is present at the commission of the offence he may under the provisions of sec 114 I P C be deemed to have committed the offence but if that is the way in which the accused is to be made responsible for the offence he should be specifically charged with such offence as read with the provisions of sec 114 I P Code—Alimuddi v K E 52 Cal 253 29 C W N 173 40 C L J 541

Where a particular intention is an important element in the offence the intention must be specified—22 Cal 391

In a charge of sedition the actual seditious words need not be set out in the charge if the substance of the words is given—1 S L R 14

The existence of aggravating circumstances which go to enhance the punishment must be set out in the charge—Ratanlal 55

Subject matter of offence —Where the law and the section as well as the words of the section are mentioned in the charge the subject matter of the offence need not be specified Thus where the illegal act charged is the unlawful and malicious possession of explosive substances within the meaning of Sec 4 of the Explosive Substances Act it is not essential to specify in the charge the explosive substance which the accused had in their possession—Amrita Lal v K E 10 C W N 676 42 Cal 957 16 Cr L J 497

Liability to whipping —Where the accused is liable to be punished under the Whipping Act the charge must state the liability—5 Mad 158

Law and section of the law —A charge for an offence under the Penal Code must refer to the section of the Penal Code under which the offence is punishable—9 W R 33 Moreover in framing the charge the Court should adhere to the language of the section as far as practicable—42 Cal 957 Chhakari v Emp 26 Cr L J 567 (Cal) Where the law and section were mentioned in the charge and the accused fully understood the nature of the offence with which they were charged the omission of the words unlawfully and maliciously and in British India occurring in the section was held not so material as to prejudice the accused—Amritalal v K E 42 Cal 957

724 Sub section (7)—Previous conviction —The prosecution is bound to prove the previous conviction and the identity of the accused with the person previously convicted—2 Weir 266

Where the previous conviction is not mentioned in the charge it cannot be used for the purpose of enhancing the sentence —Ratanlal 70 et seq for the purpose of adding the sentence of whipping to imprisonment—Apony moss, 2 Weir 265 and 267. In 7 M. L. T. 77 and 1917 P. R. 29 however, it is held that the omission to set out the previous conviction is not a sufficient reason for interfering with the enhanced sentence in appeal or revision unless there has been a failure of justice by reason of such omission. See sec. 225, see also 8 L. B. R. 461 where it has been held that the omission to state the fact, date and place of previous conviction is not material where the previous conviction was put to the accused and admitted by him before judgment was passed.

The previous conviction must be entered in the charge and the accused should be called on to plead thereto: the mere admission by the accused that he had once been in jail is insufficient to show that he pleaded guilty to a previous conviction—4 Bom. L. R. 177.

Fact, date, place of previous conviction—When a person is charged with previous convictions it is not sufficient to state that the accused is an 'old offender', as that does not sufficiently bring home to the accused person the particular offence or class of offences which renders him liable to a more severe sentence than would otherwise be imposed—In re Yip-pakka 2 Weir 266. If the fact, date and place of the previous conviction are not stated, no enhanced sentence can be passed on the accused—1883 A. W. N. 110. But where the accused was at the time lying under sentence of the previous conviction referred to, the omission to mention the particulars of the previous conviction would in no way prejudice the accused and would afford no ground for interfering with the enhanced sentence—1881 A. W. N. 32.

In passing an order under sec. 365 it is not necessary that the details of the previous conviction should be mentioned in the charge—9 N. L. R. 88 (cited under Sec. 365).

222 (1) The charge shall contain such particulars as to the time and place of the alleged offence, and the person (if any) against whom, or the thing (if any) in respect of which, it was committed, as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

(2) When the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, it shall be sufficient to specify the gross sum in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed, and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed, without specifying particular items or exact dates, and the charge so far shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of Section 234

Provided that the time included between the first and last of such dates shall not exceed one year

725 Particulars as to time, place et c. The charge must contain sufficient particulars as to time place person and circumstance so that the accused may have notice of the matter with which he is charged Q E v Fakirappa 15 Bom 491 Oates v Emp 38 C L J 163 A charge for house breaking and theft is bad for vagueness if it does not specify the articles stolen or the name of the person whose house was broken into and omits to mention one of the places where the offences were committed—Subbadu v A E 28 M L J 381 16 Cr L J 298 A charge of defamation is defective if it does not set forth the particular occasion on which it was committed—30 Cal 402 A conviction under sec 377 I P C is illegal on a charge which does not set forth the time place or the person with whom the offence was committed but only states that the accused habitually wore women's clothes and exhibited physical signs of having committed that offence—6 All 204 In a charge of adultery it is sometimes impossible to specify the particular date or dates on which the sexual intercourse took place it is sufficient to specify two dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed Bhola Nath v Emp 51 Cal 488 (492) 28 C W N 3-3 25 Cr L J 997

The test as to the sufficiency of the particulars of time place etc is whether the accused has reasonable notice of the offence with which he is charged In one case it may be necessary to specify accurately the time and place while in another it may be unreasonable to require the prosecution to do so Ratanlal 659

7 6 Subsection (2) This subsection did not exist in the Code of 1882 The ruling in 2 C W N 341 and 24 Cal 193 to the effect that particular items and exact dates of the misappropriation must be mentioned is no longer good law As the law stood before there was great difficulty in convicting where there was a running account and where the prosecution were unable to put their hands on a specified item out of which the particular sum was embezzled also there was the difficulty of joinder of charges under sec 234 These difficulties have been removed after 1898 Akshrod Kumar v Emp 29 C W N 54 40 C I J 555

This subsection applies only to a charge of criminal breach of trust or misappropriation it does not apply to a charge under sec 477A I P C—Kalka P asid v Emp, 33 All 42 26 Cal 560 Raman B Jari v Emp 41 Cal 7 or to a charge of cheating—1 A L J 599

Again it applies only to misappropriation of money and not to mis appropriation in respect of a number of things—Raghavultra v Emp. (1911) 2 M W L 47 12 Cr L J 567

727 Gross sum only need be mentioned—This is an enabling section and it enacts that it is sufficient to specify the aggregate sum without going into details. It dispenses with the necessity of enumeration of various items but it does not prohibit such enumeration—Emp v Datto Hanmant 30 Bom 43 It is optional with the complainant either to mention the gross sum or to specify all the items misappropriated. And this section does not make compulsory either the one or the other. The complainant may choose to specify all the particular items instead of mentioning the gross sum and this will be treated as a mere superfluity but not an illegality—Samiruddin v Akram 31 Cal 98 or the complainant may mention only the gross amount even where the particular items can be specified—Thomas v Emp. 3 M L 558

But although it is sufficient to frame a general charge of the gross amount the Magistrate should also see that the charge does not become so general as to be vague and the accused is not prejudiced thereby—1907 P W R 16 Though it is sufficient to mention only the gross sum and not necessarily the particular items still the prosecution must prove what total sum the accused has unlawfully expended or failed to account for in such a way as to leave no doubt that he has been engaged in a criminal misappropriation and how that total sum is made up. There must be a definite finding of a certain definite sum traced to the accused and clearly shown to have been wilfully and unlawfully appropriated to his own use. It is not sufficient to fling into the charge an alleged balance or net profit which the accused, an agent of the complainant is supposed to have earned and say that in respect of that net profit he is guilty of misappropriation of every rupee which he cannot produce or explain—Mohun Singh v Emp. 4- All 522

If the particular items are specified the charge will not be illegal by reason of the fact that the items exceed three in number—Emp v Gulzari Lal 24 All 254 This section is not controlled by Sec. 234 but rather modifies it.

728 Charge so framed charge of one offence—This section clearly limits of the trial of any number of acts of breach of trust committed within the year as amounting only to one offence—Emp v Datto Hanmant 30 Bom 49 A charge in respect of a gross sum without specifying several items is a charge of one offence and not of several offences—33 All 36 Where an accused person is tried on charges of criminal breach of trust in respect of two cheques and also on another charge in respect of a gross sum made up of three distinct items which might have been were not specified the trial is in fact not on five distinct charges but for three offences (2 cheques plus gross sum) and is therefore legal under Sec 234—Thomas v Emp 29 Mad 558 see also Emp v Ishlaq 27 All 69 32 Cal 1085

Thus subsection enacts that the charge in respect of a gross sum shall be treated as a charge for one offence within the meaning of Sec 234 but it does not provide that the several acts of misappropriation will be treated as forming one transaction within the meaning of Sec 235—Kasi Viswanathan v Emp 30 Mad 328

One year —The time covered by the several acts must not be more than one year where the charges related to items misappropriated in the course of two years the conviction was quashed—Dhanjibhoy v Kaim Khan 1905 P R 14

223 When the nature of the case is such that the particulars

mentioned in Sections 221 and 222 do not give the accused sufficient notice of the matter with which he is charged the charge shall also contain such particulars of the manner in which the alleged offence was committed as will be sufficient for the purpose

Illustrations

(a) A is accused of the theft of a certain article at a certain time and place The charge need not set out the manner in which the theft was effected

(b) A is accused of cheating B at a given time and place The charge must set out the manner in which A cheated B

(c) A is accused of giving false evidence at a given time and place The charge must set out that portion of the evidence given by A which is alleged to be false

(d) A is accused of obstructing B a public servant in the discharge of his public functions at a given time and place The charge must set out the manner in which A obstructed B in the discharge of his functions

(e) A is accused of the murder of B at a given time and place The charge need not state the manner in which A murdered B

(f) A is accused of disobeying a direction of the law with intent to save B from punishment The charge must set out the obedience charged and the law infringed

729 The question as to whether further particulars are necessary under this section is a question of discretion in each case—Kudru's v. Imp. 33 Cal 781. In a case of cheating the charge must set out the manner in which the offence was committed. Whether the words of the charge are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the accusation in which he has got to meet depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. The omission to state the manner of cheating is reasonable as material or not accordingly as the accused has or has not in fact been misled by the omission and the omission has or has not occasioned a failure of justice (see sec. 225 III b and c)—Kedar Nath v. Imp. 23 C. S. 438 4 C. I. J. 17 26 Cr. I. J. 54. Where the manner of the offence was set out as follows:—By deceiving with false representations and promises as well as by concealment held that the expression was vague and indefinite to give the accused proper notice of the nature of the offence—Kedar Nath v. Imp. (supra).

A charge of an attempt to cheat must specify the person to be cheated and the manner in which the attempt was made—sec. 278

224 In every charge words used in description shall be deemed to have been used in the sense attached to them by the law under which the offence is punishable.

Words in charge taken in sense of law under which offence is punishable 225 No error in stating either the particulars required to be stated and no omission to state particulars, shall be regarded at any stage unless the accused was in fact misled by and it has occasioned a failure of justice.

Effect of errors

Illustrations

(a) A is charged, under section 242 with 'having been in possession of counterfeit at the time when he became possessed was counterfeit,' the word 'fraud' in the charge. Unless it appears that this omission, the error shall not be

(b) A is charged with cheating B he cheated B is not set out in the charge

A defends himself calls witnesses and gives his own account of the transaction. The Court may infer from this that the omission to set out the manner of the cheating is not material.

(c) A is charged with cheating B, and the manner in which he cheated B is not set out in the charge. There were many transactions between A and B and A had no means of knowing as to which of them the charge referred, and offered no defence. The Court may infer from such facts that the omission to set out the manner of cheating was in the case, a material error.

(d) A is charged with the murder of Khoda Baksh on the 21st January 1882. In fact the murdered person's name was Haidar Baksh, and the date of the murder was the 20th January 1882. A was never charged with any murder but one and had heard the inquiry before the Magistrate, which referred exclusively to the case of Haidar Baksh. The Court may infer from these facts that A was misled and that the error in the charge was immaterial.

(e) A was charged with murdering Haidar Baksh on the 20th January 1882 and Khoda Baksh (who tried to arrest him for that murder) on the 21st January 1882. When charged for the murder of Haidar Baksh, he was tried for the murder of Khoda Baksh. The witnesses present in his defence were witnesses in the case of Haidar Baksh. The Court may infer from this that A was misled and that the error was material.

730. Error or omission—Where the common objects of an unlawful assembly were to steal mangoes and to cause the death of a person and the Judge in summing up the case to the jury spoke of the two objects but the charge mentioned only the latter object it was held that the omission to specify both the objects in the charge was material in as much as it is difficult to say which of the two common objects had been accepted by the jury and if the jury had accepted that object which was not mentioned in the charge there had been a failure of justice—22 Cr. 276. When the charge against the accused was that he embezzled some deeds but he was convicted of embezzling some amounts obtained by dealing with those deeds it was held that the charge was materially defective and the conviction must be set aside—12 C. W. N. 577.

A charge of sedition is not defective if it omits to state the particular passages or particular words used by the accused. It is sufficient if the substance of the words is set out. Even if it is defective it will be cured by this section—Imp v Tithuani 33 Bom 77 & Mad 384 32 Mad 3. The omission of words such as dishonestly or unlawfully or in British India is not material and is cured by this section—Reg v Jahlma 10 B II C R 373. Aurital v Imp 42 Cal 95.

If the charge is drawn up in a somewhat informal manner but is sufficiently explicit as to give the accused notice of the charge the irregularity will be cured by this section—Imp v Tribunal 33 Bom 77.

Test to determine whether error is material—In determining whether the error or omission has occasioned a failure of justice the Court should have regard to the manner in which the accused has conducted his defence and to the nature of the objection raised whether the objection could and should have been raised at an earlier stage of the proceedings—Reg v Rakhma 10 B II C R 373. Q L v Ramji 10 Bom 124. Where the charge did not correctly set out the facts of the case for the prosecution upon which it was founded but it was clear from the answer which the accused gave to the Court when examined under the provisions of sec 347 that he understood exactly what the case against him was held that the defect in the framing of the charge did not prejudice the accused in any way—Gokul v Imp 23 C W N 483 26 Cr L J 906.

Duty of Magistrate—Where a charge is erroneous as to the intention with which the offence was committed it is the duty of the Magistrate before convicting the accused for committing the offence with a different intention to amend the charge to that effect so as to give notice to the accused of what he is charged with. Thus where the charge was house breaking with intention to commit theft but it was found that the intention was criminal intrigue with a woman in the complainant's house the Magistrate before convicting the accused of house breaking with the latter intention should clearly draw up a charge to that effect—Mahomed Hosain v Imp 41 Cal 743. Hajari v King Imp 26 C W N 344. But see 44 Cal 358 in which it has been held under the identical circumstances that it is not necessary for the Magistrate to amend the charge the accused having been charged with criminal trespass with a guilty intention it is competent to the Court to convict him with criminal trespass with some other guilty intention and in such a case the accused is not in fact prejudiced by the conviction.

226. When any person is committed for trial without a charge or with an imperfect or erroneous charge, the Court, or, in the case of a High Court, the Clerk of the Crown may frame a charge or add to or otherwise alter the charge, the Court, or, in the case of a High Court, the Clerk of the Crown may frame a charge or add to or otherwise alter the charge as the case may be having regard to the rules contained in this Code as to the form of charges

Procedure on commitment without charge or with imperfect charge

Illustrations

1 A is charged with the murder of C. A charge of abetting the murder of C may be added or substituted

2 A is charged with forging a valuable security under Section 467 of the Indian Penal Code. A charge of fabricating false evidence under Section 193 may be added

3 A is charged with receiving stolen property knowing it to be stolen. During the trial it incidentally appears that he has in his possession instruments for the purpose of counterfeiting coin. A charge under section 235 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be added

731 Charge —Throughout this Code the word charge is generally used as the statement of a specific offence and not as indicating the entire series of offence of which a prisoner is accused and it is in the former sense that the word is used in this and the following sections—Q E v Appa Subhanna 8 Bom 200

Without charge —These words apply not only to the cases where there is no charge at all but also to cases in which there is no charge in respect of such offence as the Sessions Judge or Clerk of the Crown may think the accused ought to be tried for—8 Bom 200

Frame a charge —At the beginning of the trial if the Judge finds that the Magistrate has omitted to frame a charge he may supply the omission and frame the charge that is made out on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate—Dodo v Emp 9 S L R 37 16 Cr L J 573

732 Addition of charge —If the charge framed by the Magistrate is imperfect or erroneous the Sessions Judge may alter or add to the charge having regard to the offences disclosed in the evidence recorded by the Magistrate. But the Sessions Judge cannot go beyond the evidence recorded by the Magistrate in adding to or altering the charge. He cannot add or alter a charge upon the evidence recorded by himself at the trial. If he does so the effect is that he takes cognizance of an offence without any preliminary inquiry in respect of it by the Magistrate and the provisions of Sec 193 of this Code are rendered nugatory. Thus where the charge drawn up by the Magistrate was under Sec 201 I P C and the Sessions Judge on the application of the Public Prosecutor added a charge for an offence under secs 109 and 201 I P C upon the evidence of a person who was examined as a witness for the first time by the Sessions Judge it was held that the action of the Judge was ultra vires and the addition of the charge was not merely an error of procedure but an improper assumption of jurisdiction—Rama Larma v Q 3 Mad 351

Again the Sessions Court can add or alter a charge with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal and not with regard to a matter not covered by the indictment. Thus where a prosecution was instituted by A on a charge under sec 417 I P C and the Sessions Judge altered the charge into one for an offence under sec 420 I P C for cheating B it was held that the procedure was illegal inasmuch as there was no complaint by B and the prosecution was instituted by a person in respect of a matter with which B was not concerned and the Magistrate did not commit the accused with respect to any offence committed against B—3 Cal. Similarly where the accused was committed to the Sessions for the murder of A the Sessions Judge could not add a charge for causing grievous hurt to B—Shah Din v Crown 1909 P W R 20 11 Cr L J 131 (In 8 All 665 however such a procedure was not treated as an illegality but a mere irregularity and the High Court refused to interfere because no prejudice was caused to the accused.) But where the committing Magistrate committed the accused for the murder of A and for causing grievous hurt to B the Sessions Judge could add a charge for the murder of B—Hussenul a v Emp 28 C W N 561 A I R 19 4 Cal 63

The Sessions Judge's power to add a charge is not fettered by the fact that a complaint in respect of it had been previously preferred before the Magistrate and dismissed by him—Q E v Vajiram 16 Bom 414

Power to expunge a charge—The Sessions Judge has power to frame add or alter a charge but he has no power to expunge a charge duly framed by the committing Magistrate—Emp v Poreslolah 7 C L R 143

Charge when can be added or altered—Though the Sessions Judge has power to add a charge at any stage of the proceedings before judgment still he should exercise a sound and wise discretion and he does not exercise such a discretion when he adds a new and grave charge after the close of the defence—5 C W N 72 A charge cannot be altered after delivery of verdict—Reg v Shek Ali 5 B H C R 9

733 Alteration of charge—The Sessions Judge can substitute a charge of abetment for a charge of the substantive offence—11 B H C R 278 If the committing Magistrate does not frame a charge with separate heads for each distinct offence the defect may be remedied by the Sessions Judge—7 W R 8 In a case in which the accused was charged with 45 offences and committed to the Sessions the proper procedure is to amend the charge and to hold separate trials and not to confine the prosecu

to three heads of charges acquitting the accused of all the rest—8 Cal 450

Altering a charge includes the withdrawal of a charge which has been added by the Sessions Judge after commitment—12 All 351

227. (1) Any Court may alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment is pronounced, or Court may alter charge in the case of trials before the Court of Session or High Court, before the verdict of the jury is returned or the opinions of the assessors are expressed

(2) Every such alteration or addition shall be read and explained to the accused

734 Addition or amendment of charge—Where a Magistrate summoned the accused under a certain section of the Penal Code but the evidence disclosed an offence under another section he can amend the charge—Birao Sarlar v. Ariff 6 Cr L J 302 (Cal) Sessions Judge, when they receive an indictment should compare the charge sheet with the section and when necessary amend the charge sheet using the words of the section so far as possible—Bhulan v. Emp 27 Cr L J 57 (Oudh)

A Court of Session though vested with large powers of amending and adding to charges can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and commitment and not with regard to a matter not covered by the indictment—Muthu Goundan v. Emp 27 M I T 231 1 Cr L J 57

In amending a charge the Magistrate should not write over the original charge but should leave it on the file for reference and should write the new charge separately—Nga Pan v. Emp 8 Bur L T 17 16 Cr L J 7

The Court in substituting one charge for another cannot ignore the preliminary requisites of a charge thus a charge for rape cannot be altered into a charge for adultery because the complaint of the husband is a preliminary requisite in the latter offence—9 Cal 415 nor can the Court alter a charge of rape into a charge for rape and adultery in the alternative—5 All 33 See notes under sec 193

But the power to add a charge is not limited by the terms of the certificate under section 188 Once a certificate has been obtained the Court has power to add any charge for any offence disclosed by the facts though not specified in the certificate—Emp v. Krishna Nath 33 All 514 See Note 581 under sec 188

Where a prisoner has been extradited for dacoity, the Court may alter the charge of dacoity into theft—17 Bom 369

An nlm nt must not prejudice accused — Although this section gives power to the Court to add to or alter a charge still this power should be exercised with discretion and it is the duty of the Court to see that the accused is not prejudiced by the addition or alteration of the charges—Dolls v Emp, 9 S L R 37 Reg v Goudis 6 B H C R 76 Thus an addition or alteration of charges at a late stage of the proceedings would prejudice the accused in his defence and would be illegal See 6 C W N 73 31 Bom 218 Where upon the trial of an accused person upon specific charges in a Court of Session it is found at the conclusion of the trial that the charges as framed disclose no offence against the accused it is illegal and prejudicial to the accused to alter or amend the charges and to convict him thereon without affording him an opportunity of meeting the amended or altered charges The fact that the accused cross examined the prosecution witnesses to prove the unsustainability of the charges as originally framed is no ground for holding that by substantially altering the charges the accused was not prejudiced—Muthu Gounder v Emp, 27 M L T 231, 21 Cr L J 57.

Amendment cannot cure illegality — An illegal charge cannot be amended or altered and such amendment will not cure the illegality Thus where a charge is drawn up of 4 offences it is wholly illegal under sec 234, and the illegality cannot be cured by striking out one of the offences, and convicting the accused for the remaining three—Mananala Chetty v Empress 23 Mad 563 Chito v Emp 49 Cal 353 So also where a Magistrate at first framed a charge under secs 352 and 304 I P Code, but finding that the two distinct offences which were in no way connected with one another could not be tried together he struck out the charge framed and framed a charge under sec 304 alone Id that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was illegal—Krishna Murthi v Narayanaswami, 49 M L J 93 26 Cr L J 1618 A I R 1925 Mad 1065

735 Addition or alteration when to be made — A charge must be amended before the judgment is pronounced If a charge is defective e g if more than three offences are included in one charge which is invalid under section 234 the Magistrate cannot remedy the defect by saying in his judgment that he would proceed on only three charges If he wishes to strike out any of the charges he should do so before concluding the trial, and should give the accused an opportunity of making such defence as he thinks fit, otherwise the trial is vitiated—Chetty v Emp 49 Cal 535 24 Cr L J 86

Although a charge may be added or altered at any time before the judgment is pronounced, still it is illegal to do so at a late stage of the proceedings e g after the prosecution case has been closed and the defence evidence has been recorded—Emp v Isaf Mahomed, 31 Bom 6 C W. N 73

If the complainant compounds the offence the Court should acquit the accused upon the presentation of the petition of composition and has no power to alter the charge already drawn up—1914 P R 29

In a trial by jury or assessors the Sessions Court has no power to alter the charge after the delivery of the verdict of the jury or the opinion of the assessors.—Reg v Shek Ali 5 B H C R 3 Harbans v Crown 1916 P R 33 The word, return of verdict means the return of the final verdict which the Judge is bound to record—3 Bom 200

Application for alteration of charge.—An application for alteration of charge must be made immediately after the original charge has been read and explained by the Magistrate—27 Cal 839 and the Magistrate should consider the application at once and not postpone passing his order on the application—Q E v Vajram 16 Bom 414

735. Sub-section (2).—An alteration of charge must be read over and explained to the accused. It is not the intention of the legislature to empower a Court to convict an accused person of an offence of which he has not been told anything. Where a person was summoned to answer a charge under sec 34 Police Act but the Magistrate finding that the facts did not prove such offence convicted him under sec 279 I P C without his being informed of the alteration of the charge he'd that the conviction was illegal.—Dhum Singh v Emp 23 A L J 436 A I R 1925 All 448 26 Cr L J 1057 Raghunath v Emp 24 A L J 168 27 Cr L J 152 A I R 1925 All 227 When a new charge was read aloud to the jury but was not specially explained to the prisoner and he was not called upon to plead to that charge but his counsel on being asked did not require a new trial (under section 229) it was held that the accused was not prejudiced by the addition of the new charge and the omission did not affect the trial.—Q E v Appasubhana 3 Bom 200

223 If the charge framed or alteration or addition made

When trial may proceed immediately after alteration under section 226 or section 227 is such that proceeding immediately with the trial is not likely, in the opinion of the Court, to prejudice the accused in his defence or the prosecution in the conduct of the case the Court may, in its discretion, after such charge or alteration or addition has been framed or made proceed with the trial as if the new or altered charge had been the original charge

737 The addition or alteration of a charge does not open up the trial from the beginning and the Court may immediately proceed with the trial if it is of opinion that there will be no prejudice to the accused

If the accused has already been examined under sec 342 before the amendment of the charge and before he has been called upon to enter on his defence it is not incumbent on the Court to re examine the accused after the amendment of the charge—Shamlal v A L J Pat 54 3 P L T 91 3 Cr L J 146

229 If the new or altered or added charge is such that
 When new trial may be directed, or trial suspended, proceeding immediately with the trial is likely, in the opinion of the Court, to prejudice the accused or the prosecutor as aforesaid, the Court may either direct a new trial or adjourn the trial for such period as may be necessary

738 New trial —Sec 8 Bom 200 (cited in Note 736 under sec 227) where the right to a new trial was waived

Where the original and the altered charges are nearly related to each other (the original charge being one of murder and the altered charge being one of abetment of murder) and the accused did not object to the amendment it was held that there was no such material prejudice as would have necessitated a new trial under this section—11 B H C R 278 If however the amendment of charge would raise different questions of law and would admit of a different line of defence the accused would be prejudiced and a new trial would be necessary—Reg v Govindas 6 B H C R 76

In a new trial the Court would not be justified in referring to the record of the former trial as a whole but he may refer to such depositions as are especially put in evidence—7 C L R 193

230 If the offence stated in the new or altered or added charge is one for the prosecution of which previous sanction is necessary, the case shall not be proceeded with until such sanction is obtained, unless sanction has been already obtained for a prosecution on the same facts as those on which the new or altered charge is founded
 Stay of proceedings if prosecution of offence in altered charge require previous sanction

739 Sanction for one offence, conviction for another —The mere fact that the sanctioning authority is of opinion that the facts constitute an offence under one section of the Act is in itself no bar to a conviction of the accused person for another offence under another section provided of course that the facts stated in the order giving sanction are the same as those upon which the conviction is based In such a case it is not necessary vary that fresh consent to the trial upon such altered charge would have to be given by the sanctioning authority. Section 230 of the Code makes full provision for a case of this kind—Amar Singh v Crown 1919 P R 31 11 Cr L J 230

Where sanction has been obtained in respect of a substantive offence it will avail in respect of abetment of such offence and no fresh sanction is necessary. Therefore where sanction was obtained for the prosecution of a Sub Registrar for an offence under Sec 468 I P C the trial of the Sub Registrar for the abetment of that offence required no further sanction—30 Cal 905

231 Whenever a charge is altered or added to by the Court after the commencement of the trial, the prosecutor and the accused shall be allowed to recall or resummon, and examine with reference to such alteration or addition any witness who may have been examined and also to call any further witness whom the Court may think to be material

740 Under this section it is imperative on a Court when it alters or adds to a charge after the commencement of a trial to allow the prosecutor and the accused to recall or resummon and examine with reference to such alteration or addition any witness who may have been examined and also to call any further witness whom it may deem material. If the Court adds or alters a charge after the commencement of the trial without allowing the accused to recall and re-examine the witnesses and the accused has been misled thereby the High Court will order a new trial to be had upon a charge framed in the proper manner—Harlans v Crown 1916 P R 33 17 Cr L J 454. Where the committing Magistrate at first framed a charge and then at a late stage of the commitment proceedings altered the charge without giving the accused an opportunity of re-examining the witnesses for the prosecution and producing his defence in regard thereto and committed the accused to the Sessions on the charge so altered held that the procedure of the Magistrate was entirely illegal and likely to prejudice the accused in his trial before the Court of Session—Mohan Lal v Emp 2 A I J 39 25 Cr I J 798

When a charge is amended the accused has a right to recall and cross-examine all the prosecution witnesses. The right is not restricted to the recalling of those witnesses only who have deposed to the subject matter of the amendment in the charge—Harara Singh v Emp 26 Cr I J 1497 (Lah)

232 (1) If any Appellate Court or the High Court in the Effect of material exercise of its powers of revision or of error its powers under Chapter XXVII is of opinion that any person convicted of an offence was misled in his defence by the absence of a charge or by an error in the charge it shall direct a new trial to be had upon a charge framed in whatever manner it thinks fit

(2) If the Court is of opinion that the facts of the case are such that no valid charge could be preferred against the accused in respect of the facts proved, it shall quash the conviction

Illustrations

A is convicted of an offence under section 196 of the Indian Penal Code upon a charge which omits to state that he knew the evidence, which he corruptly used or attempted to use as true or genuine was false or fabricated. If the Court thinks it probable that A had such knowledge, and that he was misled in his defence by the omission from the charge of the statement that he had it it shall direct a new trial upon an amended charge, but if it appears probable from the proceedings that A had no such knowledge it shall quash the conviction

741 Errors in the charge.—If the Chief Court (High Court) thinks that in consequence of material errors in a charge the accused has been misled it is bound to direct a new trial to be had upon a charge framed in the proper manner—Harbans v Crown 1916 P R 33. Where the owners of land were charged under sec 154 I P C for omission to give information of the riot to the thana but they were convicted for the omission on the part of their agents and not of themselves it was held that the error in the charge prejudiced the accused and a new trial was ordered by the Appellate Court—7 C W N 201. Where the charge framed against the accused was to the effect that they caused hurt under sec 324 I P C to a certain person by means of a dao (a cutting instrument) but they were convicted under sec 334 I P C for assault with a lathi it was held that the accused might have been prejudiced in his defence by this error in the charge and a retrial was ordered—Sital Chandra v Emp 17 C W N 419 14 Cr L J 712

742 Charge for one offence—Conviction for another.—Where the accused were charged with and convicted of rioting and on appeal

Sessions Judge set aside the conviction for rioting but convicted them for house trespass and hurt it was held that the latter offences being distinct and separate offences from rioting should have formed the subject of separate charges and the accused had been prejudiced within the meaning of this section by the omission of charges for the latter offences—30 Cal 288 See also Har Narain v Emp 18 C W N 1274 and Genu Manjhi v K E 18 C W N 1276 where the conviction was quashed on similar grounds

Where the accused was charged for dishonestly using as genuine a forged instrument but was convicted for defamation it was held that not only should the conviction be set aside but also as there was nothing to show that any valid charge could be preferred against the accused for the offence of defamation no trial could be held (see sub-sec 2)—28 Cal 63

Joinder of Charges

233 For every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge and every such charge shall be tried separately except in the cases mentioned in sections 234 235 236 and 239

Separate charges for distinct offences

Illustration

A is accused of a theft on one occasion and of causing grievous hurt on another occasion A must be separately charged and separately tried for the theft and causing grievous hurt

743 Object of Section —The object of this section is to see that the accused is not bewildered in his defence by having to meet several charges in no way connected with one another—Ram Subheg v K E 19 C W N 972 and to see that he is not prejudiced by being accused of several things at once—15 Bom 491 Another object is that the mind of the Court might be prejudiced against the prisoner if he were tried in one trial upon different charges resting upon different evidence It might be difficult for the Court trying him on one of the charges not to be unduly influenced by the evidence against him on the other charges—7 All 174

The general law as to the trial of accused persons is embodied in this section which provides for separate trial of each accused person for every distinct offence and the exceptions are laid down in sections 234 235 236 and 239 which must be strictly construed so as not to defeat the right of independent trial conferred by the general law—Tapanidhi v J F 5 P L J 11 1 P L T 180 21 Cr L J 161

744 Scope of Section —These sections (233-239) relating to joinder of charges refer to the trial of the accused. The ruling in Subrahmanya Aiyar's case 15 Mad 61 (cited below) cannot be extended to preliminary inquiries held by Magistrates committing a case to the Sessions so as to render the commitment itself illegal on the ground of misjoinder of offences or offenders at the preliminary inquiry—26 Mad 592. In re Sessions Judge 35 M L J 259. 20 Cr L J 514. See notes under sec 215.

This section applies not only to warrant cases but also to summons cases although it is not necessary to frame a charge in the latter cases. Therefore a joint trial and conviction for several distinct offences in summons cases is illegal—A. E. v. San Dun 3 L B R 52. 2 Cr L J 739. It also applies where the accused is charged with a summons case and a warrant case—A. E. v. Maung Gale 3 L B R 113. 3 Cr L J 350.

It also applies to trials under the Bengal Excise Act and the fact that the trial has taken place as in a summons case does not exclude the operation of this section—U. N. Biswas v. K. E. 18 C W N 486. 41 Cal 694.

This section applies not only to original trials but the Appellate Court is also bound by it thus an Appellate Court acting under section 423 (1) (b) and altering the finding cannot act in contravention of the provisions of section 233 —(1905) P R 38.

Distinct offences —When two offences are committed and each of these two offences has no connection with the other they are distinct offences—Ram Subheg v. K. E. 19 C W N 972.

745 What are distinct offences —(1) Offences falling under different sections of the I P C e.g. theft and escape from lawful custody—K. E. v. Po Hla 3 L B R 221 kidnapping a boy and assaulting the mother who demanded the boy—26 Mad 454 theft and receiving stolen property—28 Cal 10. 1 C W N 35 receiving stolen property and habitually dealing in stolen property—8 Cal 634 criminal misappropriation and cheating—13 C W N 1089 offences under secs 167 and 466 I P C—8 Cal 450 offences under secs 411 and 489 C I P C—29 Cal 387 offences under secs 454 and 325 I P C—Nga Ta Pu v. K. E. 2 L B R 19 offences under secs 182 and 500 I P C—37 Cal 604 offences under sec 352 and sec 504 I P Code—Krishnamurthi v. Narayanaswami 49 M L J 93. 26 Cr L J 1618 theft in a dwelling house and abetment of criminal breach of trust—5 C W N 294 abetment of falsification of document and fraudulent destruction of document—26 Mad 125 theft and receiving illegal gratification for the restoration of stolen property—14 Bur L R 67 offences under secs 330 and 348 I P C—A. E. v. Humaramulhu 25 M L T 379. 20 Cr L J 354 offence of belonging to a wandering gang of dacoits and the offence of committing dacoity—1882 A W N 178 offences under secs 411 and 458 I P C.—1905 P R 51 simple hurt under sec

323 I P C and grievous hurt under section 325 I P C—Radha Nath v Emperor 50 Cal 94 embezzlement of money (sec 409 I P C) and falsification of accounts (477A I P C) covering items other than those embezzled—Emp v Kalka Prasad 38 All 42 13 A L J 1059

(2) Offences committed on different occasions even though the offences be of the same kind (i.e. falling under the same section of the I P C) e.g. two attempts to cheat committed on two different dates—2 C L J 618 or wrongful confinement and torture committed at several distinct times and places—K E v Kumaramuthu 25 M L T 379 receiving stolen articles on different occasions though the articles were the proceeds of a single burglary—Padmanabha v Emp 2 P L T 47 21 Cr L J 619

(3) Offences committed against different persons—11 C W N 54 e.g. misappropriation of three sums of money from three distinct persons—6 C L J 757 or cheating three persons—Musai Singh v K E 41 Cal 66 or hurt caused to two persons—Ram Subhag v K E 19 C W N 972 wrongful confinement of several persons on several occasions—K E v Kumaramuthu 25 M L T 379 20 Cr L J 354 cheating ten different persons on different occasions—Girja dayal v Emp 25 O C 151

(4) Offences in respect of distinct sums of money e.g. misappropriation of two sums of money collected on different dates—Asgar Ali v K E 40 Cal 846 misappropriation by the accused of three sums of money collected in accordance with their duty as tax collectors from three persons—6 C L J 757

746 What are not distinct offences—Offences of the same kind committed on one occasion though consisting of parts are not different offences but are to be treated as constituting one offence e.g. the making of any number of false statements in the same deposition is one aggregate case of perjury and charges need not be multiplied according to the number of false statements—36 Cal 808 Theft of two articles belonging to two different persons committed at one and the same time constitutes only one offence of theft and not two and hence two convictions and sentences are not legal—Bhura v Emp 26 Cr L J 1495 (Nag) If a person is found in possession of a number of stolen articles the offence committed by the accused (receiving stolen property) is a single offence and not a number of offences and it makes no difference whether the articles belong to a single owner or to different owners But if there were evidence that the accused received the articles at different times or from different thieves the case would be different—Emp v Sreo Charan 45 All 485 (486) The mere fact that property stolen on two different occasions is found at one and the same time in the possession of an accused is not of itself sufficient to prove that the accused has committed two different offences under sec 411 I P C (retaining stolen property), as it is quite possible that the property though stolen on two different occasions may have been received from the same thief at the same time—Q E v Makhan 15 All 317 So also the mere fact that the goods stolen from two different persons are found in the possession of the accused will not be sufficient to try the accused on two separate charges under sec 411 I P Code (receiving stolen property) and to sentence him for each of the charges unless there is proof that he received them at different times or from different thieves All the goods in the possession of the accused may have been stolen by the same thief and may have been delivered to the accused by him at the same time though stolen on different occasions If the accused received all these goods at the same time that would constitute only one offence—Ishan Muchi v Q E 15 Cal 511 In the absence of proof that a person accused of receiving stolen property received the stolen goods on different occasions it is not permissible to charge try and convict him in respect of each of them—1 L B R 39 Where several items of stolen property were found in the possession of the accused on the same date held that the accused committed only one offence and in the absence of evidence that the different articles were received at different times he could not be charged separately for each item of stolen property consequently the trial of the accused in respect of some of the stolen articles barred a second trial in respect of the remaining articles—Ganesh Shaha v Emp 50 Cal 594 King Emp v Bishun Singh 3 Pat 503 (519) 5 P L T 319 25 Cr L J 738 Receiving on one occasion various items of stolen property the result of various thefts is only one offence—K E v Irapa 3 Bom L R 187 So also the stealing of several bullocks from the same man at the same time is but one offence and there need not be as many charges as the number of bullocks stolen—1891 A W N 154 So also misappropriation of several books of account in respect of the same estate though on different occasions is but one offence the several books of account forming one set of books—Promothanath v A E 17 C W N 479 14 Cr L J 219 So also misappropriation of several sums of money on several occasions in regard to one individual is one offence—14 Cal 128 Receiving a bribe partly on one day and partly on another is one offence—5 C W N 322 Theft of a box and a bicycle from one person committed at the same time is one offence—Byoy v Saish 21 Cr L J 682 (Cal)

747 Separate charge—For every distinct offence there shall be a separate charge Even though the offences have been committed in the same transaction there should be a distinct charge for each distinct offence though they can be tried together under sec 235—10 C W N 53 76 All 195 See also the cases cited under heading what are distinct offences above In almost all these cases it has been held that the framing of one charge in respect of several distinct offences is not merely an irregularity but an illegality and the conviction on such a charge must be set aside But in 11 C W N 54 41 Cal 66 and 19 C W N 972 it was held that the error in framing one charge was an error in form rather than of substance and did not amount to an illegality but a mere irregularity curable by sec 537 In 25 M L T 379 the Judges differed in opinion on this point

Alternative charges for contradictory statements —Where a person charged in the alternative with having made two contradictory statements one to a public servant and another contradicting the first on oath before a Magistrate and was convicted in the alternative either under sec 182 or under sec 193 I P C the Magistrate being unable to find which of them was false it was held that the charge was not made in accordance with this section there were two distinct offences of which two separate charges were necessary—Q E v Ramji 10 Bom 124 See also Ratanlal 503 But now see section 236 and illustration (b) to that section

748 Joint trial illegal —The accused was charged and tried at one trial for several distinct offences extending over a period of one year and the Full Bench held that this was an irregularity curable by sec 537 But the Privy Council has laid down that the disobedience of an express provision of law is not a mere irregularity curable by sec 537 but an illegality and that such illegality cannot be made good even if there is enough left upon the indictment upon which a conviction might have been supported—Subrahmanya Aiyar's case 25 Mad 61 (P C) This decision overrules 28 Cal 7 12 Mad 273 27 Cal 839 and 11 Mad 441 in which it was held that such a joint trial was a mere irregularity which could be cured by sec 537

Persons charged with offences committed in the course of separate transactions are entitled to separate trials A joint trial is illegal and must be set aside—Paw Tha v K E 3 L B R 280 Shankar v A E 11 A L J 188 26 Mad 125 The joint trial of several persons charged with rioting together with other persons charged with criminal trespass is absolutely illegal—14 Cal 395

Where the Magistrate heard the prosecution against several persons (charged with distinct offences) together and afterwards called upon them to plead separately in defence it was held that such a trial was in substance a joint trial of all the prisoners and therefore illegal and a retrial was ordered—Paw Tha v K E 3 L B R 280 5 Cr L J 417 So also where the Magistrate framed distinct charges and numbered them as distinct cases but when the witnesses came to be cross-examined he lost sight of the necessity of keeping the two trials separate and allowed the witnesses to be cross-examined promiscuously in respect of both the charges it was held that the joint trial offended against the provisions of this section and the illegality could not be cured by sec 537—Public Prosecutor v Mahabhal 39 Mad 527 29 M L J 101 16 Cr L J 593

"Except.....Sections 234" etc.—The broad rule enunciated in sec 233 (viz that for every distinct offence there should be a separate charge and every charge should be tried separately) is made subject to four exceptions. But a Court cannot and ought not to treat a case as an exception to the general rule, unless it is satisfied that in the case before it the charge should be within one of the four exceptions, and it would be safer if the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge recorded in his charge sheet or judgment his reasons for treating the case as falling under one of the exceptions—Shankar v K E, 11 A L J 188, 14 Cr L J 116

749. Counter cases—It is illegal to try two counter cases between the same parties at one and the same trial, and a conviction at such a trial must be set aside, even though the cross cases were so tried together with the consent of the parties—Manisa v Emp, 13 Bur L T 245, 22 Cr L J 707. But a simultaneous trial of two counter cases is not the same thing as a joint trial, and is not prohibited by this section or by section 239. In certain cases and under certain circumstances a simultaneous trial may be irregular and improper, but that will not entitle the accused to have the whole trial set aside unless it is clearly shown that the procedure adopted has prejudiced him in his defence—Dhako v Emp, 1 P L T 498, 21 Cr L J 739. The proper course is to try the one case after the other. But both the cases must be tried by one and the same Magistrate. The simultaneous trial of two counter cases in two different Courts over one and the same occurrence is undesirable and unsatisfactory—Sheikh Samir v Beni Madhab, 37 C L J 410, Judhisthir v Sheik Samir, 27 C W N 700.

234 (1) When a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of such offences, whether in respect of the same person or not, he may be charged with and tried at one trial for any number of them not exceeding three.

(2) Offences are of the same kind when they are punishable with the same amount of punishment under the same section of the Indian Penal Code or any special or local law.

Provided that, for the purpose of this section an offence punishable under Section 379 of the Indian Penal Code shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an offence punishable Section 380 of the said Code, and that an offence punishable any section of the Indian Penal Code or of any special or local law, shall be deemed to be an offence of the same kind as an attempt to commit such offence when such an attempt is an offence

Change —The italicised words have been added by sec 62 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below

750 Object of section —Secs 234 235 etc are exceptions to the broad and general rule enunciated in sec 233. The object of these exceptions is to avoid the necessity of the same witnesses giving the same evidence two or three times over in different trials and to join in one trial those offences with regard to which the evidence would overlap. But even when several criminal acts can be included in the same transaction (sec 235) no joinder of trials should be permitted which will result in bewildering the accused in his defence. Crown v Gulam 1 S L R 73. The reason of the provision (i.e. the provision contained in sec 234) is obviously in order that the jury may not be prejudiced by the multitude of charges and the inconvenience of the hearing together of a large number of instances of culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to Judges and accused —Subrahmanya Ayyar v K E 25 Mad 61 (P C)

751 Scope of section —This section says that the trial must be limited to three offences. It does not say that the trial must be limited to three charges. The same offence may be charged under different sections of the I P C and any number of such charges can be tried in one and the same trial. Emp v Tribhuvan 33 Bom 77

Again this section simply limits the number of offences that can be tried in one trial. But this does not mean that the prisoner cannot be tried separately in one day for more than three distinct offences of the same kind committed during the year. 3 Cal 540. So where the prosecution chooses under sec 222 (2) and the proviso thereto to prosecute for some out of the different amounts misappropriated during the year they are not estopped by sec 403 from instituting any further prosecution in respect of any fresh items misappropriated during the same period —Emp v Kashinath 12 Bom L R 226. Nagendra Nath v Emp 50 Cal 632 27 C W N 578 38 C L J 286

Moreover this section refers to trial and not to commitment. Where the Magistrate committed the accused to the Sessions on six charges of criminal breach of trust and three of falsification of accounts all the offences having been committed within a year it was held that the order of committal was not illegal but merely irregular and the irregularity could be cured by the Sessions Judge trying the charges separately —Arishna Murthi v Emp (1911) 2 M W N 179 17 Cr L J 369

This section contemplates a joint trial for offences committed within one year if the offences extend over a period exceeding one year the joinder of charges is illegal—1905 P R 14

This section applies where a person is accused of more offences than one it does not apply where a person is charged for one offence only e.g. an offence under sec 401 I P C (belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft) and the trial is not therefore illegal if the period over which the association extends exceeds one year—Kasem Ali v Emp 47 Cal 154 31 C I J 19 21 Cr L J 386

And lastly this section refers to offences and not to transactions It does not provide that all offences committed in a year in three different transactions may be tried in one trial—Gehimal v Crown 10 S L R 192 18 Cr L J 664 30 Mad 328 The operation of the two sections 234 and 235 cannot be combined and therefore a joint trial in respect of two sets of separate and independent transactions in which different offences have been committed is not permissible—Faujdar v K E 24 A L J 39 27 Cr L J 143 A I R 1926 All 261

752 Offences committed by several persons —This section does not apply where several persons committing offences of the same kind are jointly charged to such a case sec 239 clause (c) will apply The present section applies to the trial of one accused only—33 Cal 292 Tulsi v Crown 1917 P R 17 18 Cr L J 282 Saved Lal v Emp 20 Cr L J 7 (Nag) Nga San v Emp 21 Cr L J 794 (Bur) Ram Prasad v K E 19 A L J 796 22 Cr L J 657 In 3 P L J 224 however it has been held that the word person is to have its ordinary and natural meaning as defined by the General Clauses Act and is not to be restricted to the singular number Such a laboured interpretation would no longer be necessary because clause (c) of section 239 now expressly makes provision for the joint trial of several persons committing offences of the same kind within the period of one year

753 Offences of the same kind —See subsection (2) for the definition of this expression Where a person is found in possession of several items of stolen property he has committed offences of the same kind under sec 411 I P C and they do not cease to be so merely because the stolen articles are of very diverse character (e.g. stamps carpets buckets padlocks)—K E v Bishun Singh 3 Pat 503 (519) 5 P L T 319 25 Cr L J 738

The following are not offences of the same kind —Adultery and bigamy—Ratanlal 4 Falsification of accounts and criminal breach of trust—Kasi Viswanathan v Emp 30 Mad 328 Murder and hurt—Shankar v K E 11 A L J 188 Forgery and giving false evidence—Gehimal v Crown 10 S L R 192 For other examples see Note 745 in sec 233 under heading Distinct offences

754 Not exceeding three —An accused can only be charged and tried at one trial for any number of offences of the same kind not exceeding three committed within the space of a year Every act of falsification of a book of account would amount to an offence under this section and not more than three of such offences can be tried together—6 Cal 560 Emp v Salimullah 32 All 57 Raman Behari v Emp 41 Cal 722 In re Chakraborty 44 M L J 67 24 Cr L J 462 Fitzmurray v Emp A I R 1926 Lah 193 One charge under sec 124A I P C in respect of one article in a newspaper one charge under sec 124A I P C in respect of the same article and a third charge under sec 124A I P C in respect of another article can be tried together—In re Bal Gangadhar Tilak 33 Bom 221

Where an accused was charged at one trial with criminal breach of trust with respect to seventeen sums of money and also under sec 477A in respect of distinct offences in excess of three it was held that the course adopted was illegal—Emp v Nathulal 4 Bom L R 433 The joinder of charges of three offences under section 411 I P C and three offences under sec 414 I P C is bad—Chellu Katwar v Emp 49 Cal 555 Three offences of forgery under sec 477A and three offences of criminal breach of trust under sec 408 I P C committed in the course of similar but separate transactions cannot all be lumped together in one charge and jointly tried—Sleeo Saran Lal v K E 32 All 219 Three distinct offences of criminal breach of trust and three distinct offences of falsification of accounts though in respect of the same items cannot be tried together—Emp v Manant 49 Bom 892 27 Bom L R 1343 Kasi Viswanathan v Emp 30 Mad 328 Such a joint trial cannot be justified even under sec 235 because there are three defalcations committed on different occasions and the false entries connected with one defalcation cannot be said to form part of the same transaction with the other defalcations and falsifications—Emp v Manant (supra) Three charges of criminal breach of trust in respect of three items of money and a charge of falsification of accounts in order to conceal the defalcations cannot be legally tried at one and the same trial—Emp v Shujauddin 44 All 540 (following 32 All 219) Three charges of criminal misappropriation (sec 409 I P C) and a charge under sec 210 I P C cannot be tried together—K E v Rayendra 22 C W D 596 19 Cr L J 868 Where the accused was tried under secs 211 409 and 466 I P C on eight counts the trial was held to be illegal—Atadh Behari v Emp 20 Cr L J 784 (All)

Illegality cannot be cured by striking off a charge —A trial of the accused for four offences is altogether illegal and the illegality cannot be cured by the Judge striking out one of the charges after the trial has closed—29 Mad 569 Chellu v Emp 49 Cal 555 Fitzmurray v Emp A I R 1926 Lah 193 Although the Judge has power under sec 227 to alter a charge before judgment is pronounced, still he cannot cure an illegality—Ibid. But the Judge can strike off a charge before the trial begins, as was done in the case of Dal Gangadhar Tilak, 33 Bom 221, where in the trial before the High Court Sessions, four charges were at first framed against the accused, but the Advocate General withdrew one of the charges, and then the trial proceeded on three charges

755. Offences against several persons —There was a conflict of opinion as to whether this section applied where the offences were committed against several persons. In the following cases it was held that the words 'offences of the same kind' were not limited to offences against the same person, an accused could be charged with and tried at the same trial for offences of the same kind though committed against different persons—Chhatra-dhari v Emp, 19 C W N 557 43 Cal 13, Babu Lal v K E, 2 P. L. J 209, 9 Cal 371, In re Raja Rao, 20 M L T 234 17 Cr L J 479, 38 All 457, 38 All 458 (Note), 13 C W N 507, Ratanlal 331, Krishna-yya v Emp, 20 Cr L J 71 (Nag) Nga Po v K E, 11 L B R 45 But the contrary view was taken in some other cases. Thus, it was held in a Madras case that the offences of extorting bribes from three different persons could not be charged and tried together—2 Weir 299. So also in a Calcutta case the joint trial of three complaints by three complainants alleging against the accused three offences of the same kind was held to be illegal—11 C W N 1128

In order to remove this conflict of opinion, the words 'whether in respect of the same person or not' have been added in subsection (1) 'We have inserted words in section 234 (1) which will at all events make it clear that an accused person may be charged at one trial with three offences of the same kind though committed against different persons. The addition will, we think, cover the difficulty which has been referred to in most cases' —Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Proviso —'We have also added a proviso to section 234 (2), which, we think, is required. Sections 379 and 380 Indian Penal Code, refer to theft and theft in a building which should clearly be treated as offences of the same kind and we think that it should also be provided specifically that an attempt to commit an offence where such an attempt is penalized by any law, is of the same kind as the actual offence' —Report of the Select Committee of 1916

This proviso overrules 20 C W N 672 and 20 Cr L J 751 (Nag) where it was held that theft in a building (sec 380 I P C) and theft of paddy in a field (sec 379 I P C) were not offences of the same kind.

235 (1) If, in one series of acts so connected together as than one are committed by the same per-

Scope —This section must not be taken as controlled by the words 'not exceeding three' occurring in sec 234 there is nothing in this section to warrant the rule that not more than three offences can be combined even if those offences have been committed in the same transaction—Sanuman v Emp 22 Cr L J 641 19 A L J 39. If the offences are committed in the course of the same transaction a charge is not illegal by reason of containing more than three offences spread over a period longer than a year—In re Gam Wallu 48 M L J 308 A. I R 1925 Mad 690

This section permits a joinder of charges in respect of offences arising out of the same transaction If two distinct offences are lumped together in one charge instead of framing two charges it is a mere irregularity curable by sec 537—Abdul Rahman v A E 4 Bur L J 213. Ram Subhag v A E 19 C. W N 972 16 Cr L J 641

756 Same transaction —The expression 'same transaction' used in secs. 235 and 239 is an expression which from its very nature is incapable of exact definition and must have been advisedly used because it had this quality—Crown v Gulam 1 S L R 73. 'We think it would be dangerous, if not impossible to attempt any definition of the phrase in the course of the same transaction * An exhaustive definition is not feasible and if the phraseology is altered, the Courts would be deprived of the guidance which they now have from a long series of rulings on the point. It is not found that there has been any pronounced conflict of opinion, the reason being that the Courts, instead of attempting to lay down general principles as a rule discuss each case on its merits"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

The question whether the acts are so connected together as to form part of the same transaction is a question of fact—1910 M. W. N. 236 and the arena of facts covered by the expression 'same transaction' varies with the circumstances of each case—Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S. L. R. 73. Fahim v. Emp., 18 S. L. R. 199. No comprehensive formula of application can be stated to determine whether two or more acts form part of the same transaction, but circumstances which must be taken into consideration of the question in an individual case can be indicated—proximity of time, unity or proximity of place, continuity of action, community of purpose or design—Amrita Lal v. K. E. 42 Cal. 1004. Madhab Laxman, 43 Bom. 147. 20 Bom. L. R. 607. Fahim v. Emp., 50 Cal. 1004 (at p. 1008), Banga Chandra v. Arora, 527, Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S. L. R. 73. Those criminal acts which are regarded as subsidiary to an offence are regarded as part of the 'same transaction' as the offence. If a series of acts are committed together by proximity of time, community of action, continuity of action and purpose and such subsidiary acts are committed in such series of acts—Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S. L. R. 73. L. J. 191. The most essential tests are continuity of action and community of purpose—33 Mad. 502. Virupana v. Emp., 22 B. L. R. 101. v. K. E., 19 C. W. N. 672. 30 Bom. 49. Pahlad v. Emp., 19 B. L. R. 101. midhi v. K. E., 5 P. L. J. 11. In re Lockley, 43 B. L. R. 101. A substantial test for determining whether several acts form part of the same transaction is whether they are related together in point of purpose, as to whether they are principal and subsidiary acts, as to whether they are committed in such series of acts—Crown v. Ghulam, 1 S. L. R. 73. Emp. v. Sherufalls, 27 Bom. 135. Sanuman v. Emp., 22 Cr. L. J. 641, 1918 M. W. N. 525. Gurazam v. Emp., 19 Cr. L. J. 34 (Bur). Woodward v. Emp., 12 B. L. R. 101.

When a proposal for a boycott is made by a group of persons, and shortly afterwards the secretary of the group takes joint action to boycott the person directed, the inference is that they are purpose, or in other words that they are taking part in a conspiracy Acts done in pursuance of such a conspiracy must be deemed to be parts of the same transaction—K E v Maung Aung 1 Rang 604 2 Bur L J 224

Mere proximity of time between two acts does not necessarily constitute them as parts of the same transaction—1 L B R 361 Nga Tha v Emp 5 Bur L T 10r 13 Cr I J 485 The test to be applied to find out whether a series of acts form part of the same transaction is not so much the proximity of time as the continuity of purpose or progressive action towards a single object—Legal Remembrancer v Monmohan 19 C W N 672 Kushai v Emp 50 Cal 1004 Pahlad v Emp 1 Lah 562 21 Cr L J 626 2 N I R 147 Gumant v Emp 13 N L R 35 In re Gam Mallu 48 M L J 308 26 Cr L J 1513 Palit Paban v Emp, 26 Cr L J 369 (Cal) and a mere interval of time between the commission of one offence and another does not necessarily import want of continuity though the length of the interval may be an important element in determining the question of the connection between the two—27 Bom 135 Pahlad v Emp 1 Lah 52 Kushai v Emp 50 Cal 1004 Virupana v Emp 28 M L J 307 A series of acts separated by intervals are not excluded from the same transaction if the accused started together for the same goal—30 Bom 40 Emp v Ganesh Narain 14 Bom I R 972 13 Cr L J 833

759 Separate trial not illegal —This is an enabling section and not imperative. Though it provides for a joint trial of offences committed in the same transaction yet a separate trial for each of the offences is not illegal—8 Cal 481. Thus where the accused has committed house breaking and theft he need not simultaneously be charged with both but he may be tried for and convicted of the two offences separately—Ratanlal 307. And a conviction or acquittal in respect of one of the offences is no bar to the trial of another—1906 A W N 32 Emp v Kashinath

12 Bom L R 226 11 Cr L J 337 Where it is likely that the joinder of charges will result in bewildering the accused such joinder should not be permitted even though the offences were committed in the same transaction—Crown v Gulam 1 S L R 73 Ahmuddi v A E 52 Cal 253 40 C I J 541 Thus in a recent Calcutta case where several offences were committed in the same transaction and a joint trial of several charges was held in the lower court the High Court to be on the safe side upheld the conviction and sentence on only one of the charges setting aside the conviction on the other charges—Radha Nath v Emp 50 Cal 94

760 Offences requiring sanction.—If during the course of the same transaction several offences are committed some requiring sanction and others not the accused can be tried for the offences not requiring sanction when no sanction has been given for the offences which require sanction—31 Mad 43

760A Subsection (2) —A person who has dishonestly received stolen property (sec 411 I P C) can be charged and convicted of voluntarily concealing or disposing of that property (sec 414 I P C)—Emp v Abdul Ghan 49 Bom 878 27 Bom L R 1373 A I R 1926 Bom 71

761 Section to be read subject to sec 71 I P C.—(For the text of section 71 I P C see notes under sec 35 ante) Although in cases falling under section 235 a joint trial of several offences may be held still in awarding punishment Courts are to be guided by the provisions contained in sec 71 I P C Therefore where an offence comes within two sections of the I P C the accused may be charged with and tried at one trial for two offences (subsection 2) but the punishment cannot be cumulative—Ratanlal 506 11 B H C R 13 So also where several acts each of which would by itself constitute an offence constitute when combined a different offence the person accused of them may be charged with and tried at one trial for the comprehensive offence or for any one of the offences

But it should be noted that sec 71 I P C refers only to cases falling under subsections (2) and (3) of this section and does not provide for cases under subsection (1) Therefore where offences are committed in the course of the same transaction but do not fall under subsection (2) or (3) the Court is not precluded from passing sentence on every such offence—Ratanlal 369 10 All 58 12 Mad 36 7 All 414 11 Cal 349 11 Cal 495 but the principle of sec 71 I P C is to be followed and the whole punishment should not be more severe than the punishment for the gravest offence provided—2 All 101 6 Cal 718 2 All 644 Where two offences are so compounded together that one substantive offence can be said to have been committed there should be only one sentence viz for the offence proved e.g. in cases of abduction of a child with intention to steal from its person and theft—7 M H C R 375 house breaking by night in order to commit theft and theft—1 Bom 214 23 Bom 706 Ratanlal 79 2 All 644 rioting and causing grievous hurt (constructively)—10 W R 63 17 Bom 260 riot and murder—Ratanlal 493 riding a horse furiously and causing hurt to a bystander—Ratanlal 159 house trespass with intent to commit assault and grievous hurt 2 W R 29 In all these cases the whole punishment will be the same as that provided for the graver offence

236 If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences Where it is doubtful what offence has been committed the facts which can be proved will constitute the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences and any number of such charges may be tried at once, or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences

(a) A is accused of an act which may amount to theft or receiving stolen property or criminal breach of trust or cheating. He may be charged with theft receiving stolen property, criminal breach of trust and cheating or he may be charged with having committed theft or receiving stolen property or criminal breach of trust or cheating

(b) A states on oath before the Magistrate that he saw B hit C with a club. Before the Sessions Court A states on oath that B never hit C. A may be charged in the alternative and convicted of intentionally giving false evidence although it cannot be proved which of these contradictory statements was false

762 Application of section—This section contemplates a state of facts which constitute a single offence but where it is doubtful whether the act or acts involved may amount to one or other of several cognate offences—Q E v Croft 23 Cal 174 (177) Garesh v Emp, 5 S L R 16 (per Pratt J C) Where it is not at all doubtful which of several offences the facts found would constitute, (e.g. where the facts as disclosed in the proceedings clearly amounted to the commission of acts which would const titute offences under the Excise Act and also offences under the Merchandise Marks Act) this section does not apply—Ib d Akram Ali v Emp 18 C. L. J. 574. Moreover this section does not relate to distinct acts but to a single act or series of acts where the facts being ascertained it is doubtful which of several sections is applicable—Sher Shah v Emp 1887 P. R. 43.

Again this section refers to cognate offences such as theft and criminal breach of trust and does not relate to offences of so distinct a character as murder and theft—Emp v Narottam 1888 A. W. N. 85. So also an alternative charge should not be framed in respect of such distinct offences as offences under secs. 182 and 211 I. P. C.—1910 P. R. 20.

An alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of distinct offences nor even in respect of cognate offences when the difference is one of degree as to the intention imputed to the accused or as to some circumstances of aggravation. The criminal intention imputed to the accused must be specifically determined and not allowed to remain a subject of doubt in an alternative charge—Ganesh v Emp 5 S. I. R. 16 12 Cr. L. J. 224.

An alternative charge under this section can be framed only in those cases in which the prosecution cannot establish exclusively any one offence but are able on the facts to exclude the innocence of the accused and to show that the accused must have committed one of two or more offences—Emp v Ganesh 5 S. L. R. 16 12 Cr. J. J. 224. This section applies where the law applicable to a certain set of facts is doubtful by reason of the nature of the single act or series of acts done and in which it is charged or found proved that the act or series of acts constitute one or more or some one of several offences the doubt being on a matter of law only—Akhan Mahamad v. Emp 1887 P. R. 11. This section relates not to distinct acts but to a single act or series of acts where the facts being ascertained it is doubtful which of several sections is applicable—Sher Shah v Emp 1887 P. R. 43 and not where the facts proved raise a doubt as to whether the accused is guilty of any of the charges at all—12 C. W. N. 530. The Code only contemplates an alternative finding when the facts are ascertained and it would follow beyond doubt that the facts proved constitute one of two offences under one section of the Penal Code or when the evidence proves the commission of an offence falling within one of two sections of the Penal Code and it is doubtful which of such sections is applicable—Ratanlal 20. Sections 236 and 237 are merely provisions against the defeat of justice on technical grounds. Where an offence is proved by the evidence but its legal definition is doubtful or has been incorrectly given in the charge then sec. 236 or sec. 237 may be resorted to. They really deal with tances which the language of sec. 233 might fail to cover—Mahadeo v Emp, 9 N. L. R. 26 14 Cr. L. J. 135.

Therefore this section does not apply where the doubt in the mind of the Judge was not whether on the facts proved the accused's act fell within the purview of sec 302 or sec 201 I P C but whether there was sufficient proof that the accused had in fact committed the murder of the deceased or had merely caused evidence of murder to disappear such a doubt being a doubt as to facts—Pirtapa v Crown 1913 P R 11 14 Cr L J 664 So also the section is inapplicable where the doubt exists as to whether the accused had committed murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder such a doubt being based on facts only—Khan Walid v Emp 1887 P R 11 So also where the accused was charged under two heads of charge with committing dacoity in each of two adjoining houses and it was doubtful as to which house he entered an alternative charge that the accused committed dacoity either in A's house or in B's house is illegal—Ratanlal 20

This section only authorises a charge in the alternative when it is doubtful which of the several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute and not where there may be a doubt as to the facts which constitute one of the elements of the offence—Ilafader v Q E 71 Cal 955 Naya nulla v Emp 26 Cr L J 594 (Cal) Ganesh v Emp 5 S L R 16 (per Pratt J C)

Where the offences are of a cognate nature e.g. theft and receiving stolen property charges may be framed alternatively—1889 P R 76 So also a charge of murder may be joined in the alternative with a charge of causing evidence of murder to disappear—Emp v Hanmappa 25 Bom L R 231 25 Cr L J 1349 Asdal v Emp 18 S L R 185 26 Cr L J 909 Crown v Bawa Maghindas 4 S L R 474 11 Cr L J 731 On charges under sec 489A (counterfeiting a currency note) and sec 410 (cheating) the High Court directed the conviction to be in the alternative—Hira v Emp 15 A L J 587 18 Cr L J 790

Where it is doubtful as to whether the offence was under a certain section of the Penal Code or under a section of any other law (e.g. Post Office Act) the charge should be cumulative. An alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of an offence under the Penal Code and an offence under a special law—Ganesh v Emp 5 S L R. 16 But see Man hari v A L 45 Cal 717 and Tulsi Telint v Emp 50 Cal 564 24 Cr L J 372 where it has been held that a charge under sec 380 I P C may be framed alternatively with a charge under sec 54A of the Calcutta Police Act. The Patna High Court also holds that a charge under sec 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act may be framed alternatively with a charge under sec 338 I P C—Maksuddan v Emp 2 P L T 31

If charges are framed cumulatively and such framing of charge is illegal the illegality cannot be cured by saying that if the charges had been framed alternatively, it would have been valid. Thus a joinder of charges of three offences under section 411 I P C with a charge of three offences under sec 414 I P C is illegal because sec 234 does not allow a joinder of charges of more than three offences but this illegality cannot be corrected by the argument that if the charges had been framed in the alternative under sec 236 there would have been no defect in the trial—Chetto v Emp 49 Cal 555 24 Cr L J 86

763 Contradictory statements—Illustration (b) shows that contradictory statements constitute the offence of giving false evidence although it cannot be proved which of the two statements is false

An alternative charge in respect of two contradictory statements can be framed only when the prosecution is unable to prove which of the two statements is false—1890 P R 27 2 Weir 300 Otherwise two separate charges ought to be framed, one relating to each statement and such evidence as is procurable should be adduced to prove the falsity of one or other of the two statements—Weir 299

To attract the applicability of this section and justify a charge in the alternative in respect of contradictory statements it is essential to remember that it is only when the statements constitute a series of acts that an alternative charge can be framed under this section. Thus there is a common relation between a police investigation an inquiry by the Magistrate preliminary to commitment and a final trial in the Sessions Court the words series of acts would be applicable to the statements made at these different stages and an alternative charge can be framed in respect of the statements—Salah Shah v Crown 16 S L R 285 25 Cr L J 1195 A 1 R 1924 Sind 1 Patraji v Emp 12 O L J 644 2 O W N 637 26 Cr L J 1457

764 Sentence—When the conviction is in the alternative the Court should pass the maximum sentence provided for the lesser of the two alternative charges—Hira v Emp 15 A L J 587 18 Cr L J 790 Sobha Singh v A C 1903 P L R 63

Change.—Subsection (2) has been omitted from this section but been re-enacted as subsection (2A) of section 238, as it should be appropriately placed under that section.

765 Scope of section.—Section 237 has to be read with section 236. It applies to cases where sec 236 applies. If the facts of the case do not fall under sec 236 sec 237 has got no application—Genu Manji K E, 18 C W N 1276. Akram Ali v Emp, 18 C L J 574. Ranath v Emp, 24 A L J 168. 27 Cr L J 152. It is an enabling section which empowers the Court to convict the accused of offences which no charge has been framed but for which a charge could have been framed under sec 236—Dhuanath v Emp, 4 P L W 40 Cr L J 202.

766 Conviction for different offence.—A person charged and tried under sec 411 I P C (receiving stolen property) may be convicted of offence under sec 379 I P C (theft)—1888 A W N 116. Similarly a person charged with theft may be convicted of receiving stolen property—17 M L J 219. A person charged with criminal breach of trust may be convicted of attempting to cheat—12 B H C R 1. A person charged under sec 380 I P C may be convicted under sec 54A of the Calcutta Police Act although he was not charged with the latter offence—Talant v Emp, 50 Cal 564.

But the two offences (i.e. the offence charged and the offence of which the accused is convicted) must be cognate offences. Secs 236 and 237 refer to cognate offences such as theft and criminal breach of trust and do not relate to offences of so distinct a nature as murder and theft—1881 A W N 95. Wallis v Crown, 4 Lah 373. 25 Cr L J 385. Thus a person charged with rape cannot be convicted of kidnapping since the two offences involve different elements and different questions of fact—8 Bom L J 120. Persons charged with dacoity cannot be convicted of receiving stolen property—Ratanlal 31. A person charged with dacoity and not crime may be convicted of house trespass—23 W R 59. But a person charged with murder may be convicted of causing evidence of murder to disappear without any charge in respect of the latter offence because the accused might have been charged with the two offences in the alternative, under sec 236—Begu v Emp, 6 Lah 26 (P C). 41 C I J 437. 27 Bom

A person who is charged under secs 149 and 35 I P C with having constructively committed the offence of causing grievous hurt by being a member of an unlawful assembly cannot be convicted under sec 35 I P C of causing grievous hurt with his own hands—Panchu Das v Emp 34 Cal 698 A L v Madan Mandal 41 Cal 66 Rea uddi v Emp 16 C. W 1077 But the Madras High Court is of opinion that if a person is being charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly one of the members of which caused grievous hurt in pursuance of the common object there is no necessary implication that that particular member (who caused the grievous hurt) is not himself. Consequently if he is charged under secs 36 and 149 I P C with causing grievous hurt by implication by reason of his being a member of an unlawful assembly and it is found that he himself caused the grievous hurt he may be convicted under sec 326 I P C alone of the substantive offence of causing grievous hurt himself—Theethumalai v K L 47 Mad 746 (F B) 47 M L J 221 35 M L T 21

Alteration of charge necessary—When a person is charged with one offence and is convicted of a different offence the Court should alter the charge under sec 227 of this Code before conviction. Sec 237 does not imply that a person charged under one section of the I P C may be convicted under another section without altering the charge—1888 A W N 116 When the charge is altered the altered charge must be read and explained to the accused as provided in clause (2) of sec 227—Dhun Singh v Emp 23 A L J 436 Raghunath v Emp 24 A L J 168 24 Cr L J 15

767 Power of Appellate Court—An appellate Court has power to convict the accused for an offence though he was not charged and tried for that offence in the original Court—26 Cal 863 Kalicharan v Emp 41 Cal 537 18 C W N 309 And the Appellate Court can do so not only under this section but also under sec 423 (b) (2)—Arishnan v Emp (1916) 2 M W N 67 17 Cr L J 384

(a) A is charged under Section 407 of the Indian Penal Code with criminal breach of trust in respect of property entrusted to him as a carrier. It appears that he did commit criminal breach of trust under Section 406 in respect of the property, but that it was not entrusted to him as a carrier. He may be convicted of criminal breach of trust under Section 406

(b) A is charged, under Section 325 of the Indian Penal Code with causing grievous hurt. He proves that he acted on grave and sudden provocation. He may be convicted under Section 335 of the Code

Change —By section 64 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) sub section (2) of section 237 has been transferred to the present section and re enacted as sub section (2A) it being more appropriate under this section than under section 237

768 Principle of section —Where an offence consists of several particulars a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence the graver charge gives notice to the accused of all the circumstances going to constitute the minor offence of which he may be convicted. The latter is arrived at by mere subtraction from the former. But when the circumstances constituting the major charge do not necessarily and according to the definition of the offence imputed by that charge constitute the minor offence also the principle no longer applies because notice of the former does not necessarily involve notice of all that constitutes the latter.—11 B H C R 240

Though a Magistrate has power under this section to convict the accused of a different offence from what he was originally accused of still this must be done only in cases where the accused is not in any way prejudiced by the conviction on the new charge. The accused person is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge brought against him and unless he has this knowledge he must be seriously prejudiced in his defence—Balkesar v Imp 3 P f T 3 2 23 Cr L J 114. But where the accused is charged under sec 457 I P C for criminal trespass with intent to commit theft it is open to the Magistrate to convict him under sec 456 I P C for criminal trespass with intent to carry on an intrigue with a woman and the accused is not in any way prejudiced by such conviction because to sustain a conviction under sec 456 I P C it is not necessary to specify the criminal intention it is sufficient if a guilty intention is proved such as is contemplated in sec 441 I P C—Karali Prasad v Imp 44 Cal 358 20 C W N 1075 17 Cr L J 424.

But the Patna High Court holds in a similar case that on a charge of criminal trespass with intent to commit theft the accused cannot be convicted of criminal trespass with intent to commit adultery because he will be prejudiced by such a conviction—Balkeshwar v L 3 P L T 3 2 13 Cr f J 114.

Minor offence —Minor offence is not defined anywhere in the Code and should be understood in its ordinary and not in any technical sense—22 Cal 1006. It means an offence deserving a lesser degree of punishment.

This section enables a Court to convict a person of a minor offence although he was charged with a major offence but it does not enable a Court to do the contrary i e to convict on a major offence when the accused was charged with a minor one—1 Bom L R 513.

769 Cases under this section —An offence under section 365 I P C can be said to be a minor offence as compared with secs 366 and 376 I P C and a person charged under the latter sections can be convicted of the offence under the former section (365 I P C) even though he was not charged with it—2 Cal 1006. A person charged with dacoity may be convicted of theft though he was charged with dacoity and not with theft—17 Bom 369. A person charged with an offence under sec 457 can be convicted of an offence under sec 414 I P C since the latter offence is included in the former—Ratanat 93.

Where the graver offence of rioting was not proved the Magistrate was competent to try the accused for the lesser offence of assault—7 Mad 454. Where the accused is charged with offences under secs 304 and 325 f P C he may be convicted under sec 323 I P C—34 Cal 375. An offence under sec 211 I P C includes an offence under sec 187 I P C and therefore it is competent for the Magistrate to convict under sec though the accused may be charged under sec 11 I P C—Crown v Anubomali 8 S L R 179 16 Cr L J 104 A person charged under section 457 I P C for criminal trespass with intent to commit theft can be convicted of an offence under sec 456 I P C for criminal trespass with intent to carry on intrigue with a woman—Karali v Emp, 44 Cal 358 20 C W N 1075 Where the common object of an unlawful assembly is to commit criminal trespass a person charged under section 147 I P C for being a member of an unlawful assembly can be convicted under sec 447 I P C (criminal trespass) because the latter offence is a minor one and included in the former—Ariff v Emp, 18 C. W N 992 Where the charge is under sec 430 I P Code (mischief by cutting the embankment of a reservoir) the conviction can be under sec 426 I P C (mischief)—Banamali v A L 6 P L T 39 26 Cr L J 682

In the trial of an accused by a Sessions Judge with the aid of assessors for an offence so triable it is competent to the Judge to convict the accused of a minor offence though that offence is triable only by a jury—Emp v Chargauda 45 Bom Cr 19 Similarly an accused charged under sec 412 I P C (triable by jury) can be convicted under sec 411 I P C (triable with the aid of assessors) though not separately charged with the latter offence—Emp v Gulabchand 27 Bom L R 1416

770 Cases not under this section—A charge under sec 376 I P C cannot be altered into a conviction under sec 366 I P C because the two sections involve different elements and different questions of fact and the latter cannot be said to be minor to or included in the former—Emp v S Kharam 8 Bom L R 120 G G Sircar v Emp 3 Rang 68 4 Bur L 1 29 Similarly where the accused was charged with murder but the evidence disclosed an offence of kidnapping from lawful guardianship a conviction for the latter offence could not be sustained since it was neither minor to nor included in the former offence—Weir 30 An offence under sec 207 I P C is not a minor offence included in the offence under sec 201 I P C and therefore a conviction for the former offence cannot be had where the charge was under the latter section only—Imp v Rina 5 S I R 123 13 Cr L J 18 A person charged with dacoity and not convicted for house trespass the latter offence not being a part of the former—23 W R 59 A person charged with dacoity or house breaking by night cannot be convicted of dishonestly receiving stolen property because none of the particulars which go to make up the offence of dacoity or house breaking constitute by themselves the offence of receiving stolen property and hence the latter offence cannot be considered as a minor offence included in the dacoity or house-breaking—Achpal v Emp 26 Cr L J 1361 A I R 19 6 Lah 13 A person charged with robbery cannot be convicted of house-breaking by night and theft in a dwelling house because all the particulars constituting the latter offences are not included in the definition of robbery with which the accused was charged—Ratanlal 211 A person charged with murder cannot be convicted of robbery—Hall v Crown 1 Lah 373 25 Cr L J 385

Rioting and hurt etc—Where the accused were charged with rioting they could not be convicted of criminal trespass and hurt because none of the latter offences was a necessary ingredient of the offence of rioting and it was not proved that the common object of rioting was criminal trespass or hurt—18 Cr L J 860 (Mad) Where the accused is charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly and with committing grievous hurt by implication (secs 141 and 35 I P C) he cannot be convicted of the substantive offence of causing grievous hurt under sec 325 by his individual act because under no reasonable construction of this section can the substantive offence of causing grievous hurt individually be regarded as minor to or included in the charge under secs 325 and 149 I P C of causing grievous hurt by implication—Panchu v Emp 34 Cal 698 Emp v Madan Mandal 41 Cal 66 34 Cal 35 Rasul v A E 16 C W N 1077 Contra—Theethumalai v A L 47 Mad 746 (T B) cited in Note 766 ante

771 Subsection (2A)—Attempt—Under this subsection when an accused is charged with an offence he may be convicted of having attempted to commit that offence although the attempt was not separately charged—1 P L J 391 Bilnghurst v Blackburn 27 C W N 821 In re Doraiswami 48 Mad 774 48 M L J 190 26 Cr L J 755

Abetment—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a person charged with a substantive offence can be convicted of abetment of that offence In 33 Mad 261 Sitorani v Emp 21 C L J 44 (Pat) Darbari v Emp 22 Cr L J 311 Muthu Karakku v Emp (192) M W N 182 23 Cr L J 206, Emp v Raghya 26 Bom L R 323 25 Cr L J 2135 and 11 B H C R 240 it has been held that it is improper for a Court to find a man guilty of the abetment of an offence on a charge of the substantive offence only because when a man is accused of a substantive offence he may not be conscious that he will have to meet an imputation of collateral circumstances constituting an abetment of it which may be quite distinct from the circumstances constituting the substantive offence itself A charge for the substantive offence as such gives no intimation of a trial to be held for the abetment But in Yedithi v Emp 23 M L J 77-13 Cr L J 453 and Kehr Singh v Crown 191 P W R 11 22 Cr L J 161 it is laid down that if on the facts proved two charges can be framed viz the commission of the principal offence and the abetment thereof the accused can be convicted of the offence of abetment though it was not separately charged against him

An accused may be convicted of a substantive offence though he was charged only with abetment of that offence see 1912 P W R 17

77 Subsection (3)—When minor offence requires complaint—See subsection (3) A person charged with one offence cannot be convicted of a minor offence if the latter offence requires a complaint by a particular person mentioned in secs 198 and 199. Thus the offence of adultery requires complaint by the husband and therefore a person charged with rape cannot be convicted of adultery in the absence of a complaint by the husband. Even the husband's giving evidence in the case will not amount to a complaint—3 All 233. See Note 634 under sec 199 as to what constitutes a complaint by the husband.

773 Power of Appellate Court and High Court—The powers under this section may be exercised by Appellate Courts. An Appellate Court can alter a conviction for a major offence into a conviction for a minor offence—Hanuman v Emp 20 A L J 213 23 Cr L J 198.

Where the jury acquitted the prisoners of certain offences and found some other facts upon which the jury could have convicted them of some other offence but did not convict, the High Court has power to convict the prisoners of the latter offence—3 Cal 189.

(b) A and B are accused of robbery, in the course of which A commits a murder with which B has nothing to do. A and B may be tried together on a charge charging both of them with the robbery, and A alone with the murder.

(c) A and B are both charged with a theft and B is charged with two other thefts committed by him in the course of the same transaction. A and B may be both tried together on a charge charging both with the one theft, and B alone with the two other thefts.

Change—This section has been redrafted by sec 65 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923.

The actual change brought about by this amendment is the addition of clauses (c) (e) (f) and (g). It is provided that when two or more persons are accused of offences of the same kind committed by them jointly during the space of one year they may be tried for the same at one trial. Secondly, it is directed that when one person is accused of any offence which includes theft etc. and another of receiving or retaining or disposing of the stolen property, they may be tried jointly. Thirdly, provision is made for the joint trial of one person accused of counterfeiting coin and another of fraudulently possessing or uttering it. —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). Fourthly, another clause i.e. clause (f) has been added by the Select Committee of 1916 allowing the joint trial of persons accused of offences under secs 411 and 414 of the Indian Penal Code.

774 Scope and Application—This section lays down certain general principles for the combination of charges in a joint trial of several persons. The object of these principles is to avoid the likelihood of bewildering the accused in their defence by having to meet many disconnected charges and of endangering the prospect of a fair trial by the production of a mass of evidence directed to many matters and tending by its mere accumulation to induce an undue suspicion against the accused persons.—Sarun v Emp 19 A L J 39, 2 Cr L J 641.

This is the last exception to sec 233 which lays down the general principle that every offence must be charged and tried separately. This is the only section which authorises a joint trial of several persons under circumstances specified in this section. Except in cases falling under this section a joint trial of several accused renders the trial invalid—4 N L R 71 and a misjoinder thus taking place is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by the provisions of sec 537.—Lachku v Emp 1 O L J 141, 15 Cr L J 420 or by any waiver or consent of parties or their pleaders—6 Cal 96.

This section applies to trials and not to inquiries. The sections of the Cr P C relating to joinder of charges viz 233 to 239 refer to trial of the accused and cannot be extended to preliminary inquiries held by Magistrates prior to commitment to the Sessions—Mad 59. Therefore in a joint commitment of several accused it is not necessary that the conditions of this section should be fulfilled—Nelluri Chetti v Rex 42 Mad 511 36 M I J 296. o Cr I J 379.

But this section is applicable to inquiries under Chapter VIII. The main principles applicable to a criminal trial regarding joinder of charges and the joint trial of accused persons are also applicable to inquiries under Chapter VIII—3 C W N 180 14 Cal 358 Q F v Abdul Kadir 9 All 45 Q L v Vatha 1 All 11 Q I v Gunda Ratanlal 585 Q F v Bapu Ratanlal 556.

Again this section does not apply to trials of cross cases. The trial of the accused in the two cross cases ought to be separate. But a simultaneous trial is not altogether invalid but somewhat irregular—C S v 344 13 C L R 275. See Note 749 under section 233.

775 Clause (a)—Persons accused of the same offence.—The words same offence imply that both the accused should have acted in concert or association and therefore where the allegation was that each of them committed the crime this section does not apply and the accused must be tried separately according to sec 233—Emp 6 Bur L 1 191 7 L B R 68 14 Cr I J 563. It has been shown that part of the stolen property was found in the possession of one person and another part was found in the possession of another; would probably be illegal to try the two men together if the two men were acting in concert and were in joint possession of the property their joint trial would not be illegal—Jafar v 27 P L J 64 17 Cr L J 234 Musai Khamat v Emp 27 Cr L J 757. Two persons found in possession of stolen property cannot be tried together on a charge under sec 401 if there was no connecting link between the two. It is only a suggestion that either or both of them were the thieves. The only connecting link between them was that the property stolen from the same complainant—Emp 563 A I R 1922 All 459. Unless the persons are joint persons cannot be tried jointly under sec 401 if the stolen property merely because the goods were stolen from the same complainant—Emp v Balgovind 17 C L J 477 (All) 815 23 Cr L J 409.

Same offence.—These words signify one and the same act of crime and not different acts constituting the same crime.

name or punishable under the same section. When A and B give false evidence in the same judicial proceeding even though they depose in the same day regarding the same matter and in almost the same words they do not commit the same offence but different offences which cannot be tried together unless they were committed by them in the same transaction—Gurwant v Emp 13 A L R 35 16 Cr L J 339 Imp v Hys Ali 5 S L R 129 13 Cr L J 23. See also 2 Weir 271 L B R (1872 189) 129 2 Weir 304. So also where two persons were charged with criminal misappropriation with respect to a certain sum of money held that there was a misjoinder of charges because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriation of the same parcel of money. The charges against them must be of misappropriation of one case and abetment in the other. It is also open to the Court to frame the charges against each of them in the alternative of misappropriation or of abetment—Girwar v K E 16 C W N 600 13 Cr L J 506.

776 Clause (b)—Abetment.—A person charged with a substantive offence can be tried jointly with a person charged with abetment thereof. Thus where a person who had a license for the sale of opium allowed another who had no such license to sell it they could be jointly tried the offence of the former being an abetment of the offence of the latter—1906 P L R 113. A licensed vendor is punishable under sec 50 of the Bengal Excise Act for the acts of the servant in such a case the master is said to be an abettor of the servant by implication and both may be tried together—Priya Nath v A E 15 C L J 69 13 Cr L J 225. When a person is charged with kidnapping and three others with having abetted that offence at different places all the four persons can be tried jointly at the place where the principal offence was committed—18 All 350.

If A induces B to cheat and B attempts to cheat in consequence A and B may clearly be tried together for abetment of and attempt at cheating—Kal Das v Imp 38 Cal 453 11 C W N 463 12 Cr L J 106.

777 Clause (c)—Offences of the same kind.—Section 234 applies only to the case of one accused committing several offences of the same kind within a year. But where several persons committed several offences of the same kind there was no provision under the old law for the joint trial of those persons and consequently separate trial was necessary—10 C W N 32. Thus it was held that where three dacoities were committed by several dacoits on three different dates and at separate places the dacoits must be separately charged and tried for each dacoity as the offences were not committed in the same transaction—Ran Prosad v A E 19 A L J 796 22 Cr L J 657. So again three acts of robbery committed by several persons on the same night in three distinct places were to be tried separately—6 W R 83 Where several persons looted the linseed crop of the complainant on one day and his tobacco crop on another day the offences must be tried separately as they were not parts of the same transaction—33 Cal 292 These cases are now overruled by this clause Under the present law the offences can be tried together, provided that each offence is committed by the accused persons jointly and it is not necessary that all the sets of offences must be committed in the same transaction If the offences are not joint this section cannot apply thus where three persons were found to be in possession of stolen articles but none of the articles were in their joint possession they could not be tried jointly even though the articles were the proceeds of one burglary—Jivan v Emp 19 A L J 815 Moosan v Emp, 20 A L J 563 Where rape was committed on a woman on a field by two accused persons and subsequently the woman was taken either by force or by fraud by one of the accused alone to different places, and where he alone committed rape on her held that a joint charge against both the accused of having committed rape at different places is improper—Keramal v A E 42 C L J 524 27 Cr L J 263 A I R 1926 Cal 310

The joint trial of two persons for passing counterfeit coins on three different occasions to three persons on the same date is valid under this subsection—In re Kovaganti 44 M. L J 130 23 Cr L J 719 A I R 1923 Mad 181.

778 Clause (d)—Distinct offences committed in the same transaction.—For the meaning of the words same transaction see notes under section 235 If more persons than one are accused of different offences committed in a series of acts so connected as to form one transaction they may be tried together Whether or not the series of acts be so closely connected as to form the same transaction necessarily rests with the Court to decide The limits are wide but no joinder of charges or trials should be permitted which will result in bewildering any of the accused in his defence or in causing undue prejudice against him—Crown v Gulam, 1 S L R 73

To enable the Court to try at one trial several persons for several distinct offences the offences must form part of the same transaction—Po Mya v Emp, 7 L B R 272 16 Cr L J 44 this section does not apply to charges against several persons accused of several offences unless the acts constituting these offences form the same transaction—33 Cal. 299 9 C W N 1027 Gunawant v Emp, 13 N L R 35 [16 Cr L J 339 20 Cr L J 7 Karam Singh v Crown 1911 P L R 122 Nur Khan v Emp, 7 Lah L J 64 26 Cr L J 1167

The expression same transaction would imply oneness of purpose. If, in the course of some quarrel arising accidentally among persons who have collected to witness a festival there happens to be a fight and if some persons inflict injury on others without any common object they would be committing different offences of hurt. And if they do not act with any common intention it cannot be said that they have caused hurt in the course of the same transaction although all the persons committing the offences are there at one and the same place and at the same time. In such a case the joint trial of these persons would be improper—Tufail Ahmed v Emp. 23 A L J 5 26 Cr L J 734 A I R 1925 All 301. Two festivals fell on the same day and on the same evening. An arrangement was agreed upon to the effect that the firing of fire-works should be stopped till the procession of dulendi passed off. But this arrangement was not adhered to by some people and they fired off fireworks at random and thereby caused damage and injury to the person and property of the public. Held that these persons could not be tried together because the offences were not committed in the same transaction there being no oneness of purpose among the accused—Ibid.

It is also necessary that the accused must be associated together in the perpetration of the acts forming the same transaction from start to finish—29 Bom 449 30 Bom 49 50 Cal 1004 (at p 1009) 1917 P R 17. But it is not necessary that all the persons must be charged with all the offences. See illustrations (b) and (c). In such cases it is immaterial whether all the members of the party took an active part in each offence—Ram Prasad v Emp. 20 A L J 926. If the accused started together for the same goal this suffices to justify the joint trial even if incidentally some of them have done an act for which the others may not be responsible—30 Bom 49 Kushal v Emp. 50 Cal 1004 (1010) Kalidas v Emp. 38 Cal 453, Tepanisidhi v K E 1 P L T 180 5 P L J 11 6 M L T 17 Prag v K E 11 O L J 693 25 Cr L J 1169. Thus six persons were accused of waging war under sec 121 I P Code. The sixth accused joined the gang after the 1st and the 2nd accused had been arrested. But the gang to which the accused belonged continued under the leadership of the same man and was actuated by the same purpose. Held that the joint trial of the 6th accused with the 1st and 2nd accused was legal—In re Gam Mallu 48 M L J 308 26 Cr L J 1513 A I R 1925 Mad 690. If the accused started together for the same goal and in the process committed a series of acts they could be jointly tried for those offences although the acts were separated by intervals of time—Ashulosh v Purna Chandra 50 Cal 159 (164). The foundation for the procedure laid down in this section is the association of two persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end. Community of purpose or design and continuity of action are the essential elements of the connection necessary to link together different acts into one and the same transaction. In such cases the acts alleged to be connected with each other must have been done in pursuance of a particular end in view and as necessary thereto—Tepanidhi v K E 5 P L J 11 1 P L T 180 1 P L T 364 Where the accusation against all the accused persons is that they carried out a single scheme by successive acts done at intervals and there was a complete unity of project and the whole series of acts were so linked together by one motive and design as to constitute one transaction a joint trial is not only valid but is demanded in the interest of public time and convenience—Kushal Mallik v Emp 50 Cal 1004 Emp v Ganesh 14 Bom L R 972 Thus where a girl is abducted on a certain night and thereafter various people conceal her the offence being a continuing offence all persons can be tried together—50 Cal 1004 25 Cr L J 1082

Charge need not specify same transaction —It suffices for the purpose of a joint trial that the accusation alleges the offences committed by each accused to have been committed in the same transaction within the meaning of this section. It is not necessary that the charge should contain a statement as to the transaction being one and the same. It is the tenor of the accusation and not the wording of the charge that must be considered as the test—30 Bom 40

Examples of offences committed in the same transaction —

(1) Criminal breach of trust by one person and receipt by another of the stolen property (the proceeds of the breach of trust) knowing it to be so—6 Bom L R 317 In such a case it is not necessary that the offence of receiving should take place simultaneously with the offence of criminal breach of trust—Ibid

(2) Where one set of accused were members of an unlawful assembly with the common object of setting fire to municipal buildings and another accused was a member of that assembly with the object of forcibly closing a college it was held that the proceedings of the mob consisting of several transactions from first to last showed such a continuity of purpose and action as to form one transaction and all the rioters could be tried at one trial—In re Loganatha gar 6 M L T 17 11 Cr L J 30

(3) The offence of keeping a gaming house and the offence of playing therein arise out of facts so inseparably connected together as to form one transaction and therefore the keeper and the players are clearly within the purview of this section as persons accused of different offences committed in the same transaction and can be tried jointly—Sheikh Moti v Emp 9 N L R 68 14 Cr L J 493, Bhana v Crown 1919 P R 6 20 Cr L J 219 Khiluda Ram v Crown 3 Lah 359 23 Cr L J 621, 20 Cr L J 768 (Pat) Ganesh Lal v Emp 20 A L J 967 Contra—

1914 P R 35 and 1910 P W R 5 where it has been held that the two offences cannot be said to be parts of the same transaction

(4) If several accused carry out a systematic scheme of criminal breach of trust, by successive acts done at intervals, each accused alternately taking the benefits, the unity of the project constitutes the acts as parts of one transaction, and all the accused can therefore be jointly tried—30 Bom 49

(5) Charges of murder against three accused, and an alternative charge against one of them for murder or causing disappearance of evidence of murder can be jointly tried—Crown v Gulam, 1 S L R 73, Emp v Hanappa, 25 Bom L R 231 A I R 1923 Bom 262 Contra—8 All 252

(6) Where several persons were members of a secret society and conspired to wage war to deprive the King of the sovereignty of British India and collected arms and ammunitions for that purpose and actually waged war, it was held that the joint trial of all the accused for offences under sections 121, 121A, 122, 123 I P C was legal—Barindra v Emp, 37 Cal 467, and so long as the conspiracy continues the transaction which began with the forming of the common intention continues—Harash Nath v Emp, 19 C W N 706 16 Cr L J 9

(7) Where illegal gratification is paid to a person through another the joint trial of both persons for offences under secs 161 and 162 I P C is valid—7 Bom L R 637

(8) Where several persons were entrusted with a sum of money and those persons in collusion committed criminal breach of trust or dishonestly misappropriated the amount, they could be jointly tried—In re Appadurai, 17 Cr L J 30 (Mad)

(9) Cheating by A in respect of a certain sum collected from several persons on a certain date, and cheating by B in respect of another sum collected from some other persons at the same time, at the same place and in pursuance of the same conspiracy, are parts of the same transaction, and A and B may be tried together—Kailash v K E, 46 Cal 712 29 C L J, 31 So also conspiracy and acts of cheating in pursuance of that conspiracy can be tried together—Abdul Salim v K E, 49 Cal 573 26 C W N 680 35 C L J 279

(10) Where a gang of dacoits assembled on a highway for robbing passers by, and in the course of the dacoity several offences were committed by them, held that all these offences were committed in the course of the same transaction It is immaterial whether all the members of the gang took an active part in each offence—Ram Prosad v Emp, 20 A L J 926

(11) The offence of dacoity, the offence of dishonest possession of stolen property knowing it to have been stolen in the commission of a dacoity, and dishonest reception of such property, knowing it to be stolen, from a known dacoit can be tried together as all the offences can be said to have been committed in the same transaction—Emp v Durga Prasad 45 All 3 30 A L J 981 24 Cr L J 149 It will now fall under clause (c)

(12) The offence of fabricating false evidence in order to procure the conviction of an innocent person the offence of instituting a false prosecution against that person and the offence of giving false evidence in that prosecution in order to secure his conviction—all these offences can be tried together as there was one sustained and continuous plot for procuring conviction of an innocent person—Emp v Ganesh 14 Bom L R 972 13 Cr L J 833

779 Offences not in the same transaction —(1) In case of rioting the two opposite factions cannot be said to commit the offence of rioting in the same transaction the action of each side forming a separate transaction the two parties must be tried separately—6 Cal 96 20 Cal 537 Ala Dja v K L 1906 P R 5 1881 A W N 28 1883 P R 15 Contra—Emp v Mangal 18 A L J 744

(2) Murder and robbery on one occasion and another act of robbery committed a few hours after in another place though close to the scene of the former offences do not form parts of the same transaction—14 All 502 So also murder by four men and grievous hurt by three of them caused upon a person who tried to prevent them from carrying off the dead body some time after the murder are not offences committed in the same transaction—Nawab Singh v Crown 1906 P R 10 4 Cr L J 285 1907 P L R 117

(3) Dacoities committed on different dates do not form part of the same transaction—1882 A W N 180 8 M L T 286 So also offences under secs 147 and 325 I P C committed on one date and offences under secs 147 323 and 342 I P C committed on another date cannot be tried together as they were committed in different transactions—Pulloo Lal v Emp 21 A L J 820 25 Cr L J 446

(4) Where a person obtained a promissory note by cheating and on a subsequent date he went with another person and both cashed the note the two persons cannot be charged and tried together for both the offences since the occurrence of each date formed a distinct transaction by itself—31 Cal 1053

(5) A charge of theft against one person and a charge against another person for rescuing the former from lawful custody cannot be tried together—13 C W N 804 11 Mad 441 Similarly one person committing an offence punishable under the Railways Act and other persons rescuing the former from the custody of the Police while he was arrested cannot be tried jointly—29 Cal 385

(6) The offences of rioting and murder committed by five persons, and the offence of concealing the dead body (of a person killed in the riot) committed by the 5th accused, cannot be tried jointly. The offence of the 5th accused (concealing the dead body) should be tried separately—Su vendra v Emp, 40 C L J 559 A I R 1925 Cal 413 26 Cr L J 467

(7) A charge against five men of having committed a riot, and a charge against four of them of having committed criminal trespass on a different occasion cannot be tried together in the same trial—14 Cal 395

(8) A person charged under sects 414 and 411 I P C cannot be tried jointly with four others charged under section 454 I P C—Sahab Singh v Emp, 1105 P R 38 1905 P L R 115

(9) Two persons fabricating a kabuliyat, and two other persons fabricating another kabuliyat, the two sets of persons not having any community of interest, cannot be tried together—Kazi Safiuddin v Fazl Sheikh, 21 C W N 756 18 Cr L J 833

(10) Two acts of abduction separate and distinct though of the same genus, committed by two sets of persons at different dates cannot be tried together—1 C L J 475

(11) Where several dacoities were committed by several persons, but the persons implicated in one dacoity were not the same as those implicated in the other or others the dacoities were not committed in the same transaction and could not be tried jointly—Ram Sahai v Emp, 19 A L J 610 22 Cr L J 397

(12) The author of a defamatory article who is charged under sec 500 I P C and the printer of the article, who is charged under sec 501 I P C cannot be tried together when there is no evidence of conspiracy between them—Asulosh v Purna Chandra 50 Cal 159 36 C L J 287 24 Cr L J 206 (Bhawal Defamation Case)

(13) Murder by one person and intentional omission by another person who discovered the murder to give information in respect of the murder, cannot be said to be offences committed in the same transaction—Ratan Singh v Emp, 19 A L J 915 23 Cr L J 8

(14) The offence of receiving stolen property (sec 413 I P C) and the offence of belonging to a gang of thieves (sec 401 I P C) relate to different transactions and cannot be tried together—Chhajju v Emp, 26 Cr L J 1097 (Lah)

780 Clause (e) —Under the old law it was held that where A and B were charged with house breaking by night with intent to commit theft and C with having received some of the stolen articles on a certain day, and D with having received some other stolen articles on another day, the joint trial of these persons would be illegal—1882 A W N 215 This ruling is now superseded by clause (e) of this section that the receiving should take place simultaneously with the theft—44 All 276 Even an appreciable interval of time between the two acts which are otherwise connected does not always prevent them from being parts of the same series of connected events and from being tried together

 —14 Bur L R 38 2 L B R 19 In 29 Bom 449 and Ramratan v Emp, 21 C W N 1111 19 Cr L J 17 however it is held that theft and receipt of stolen goods cannot be said to be acts committed in the same transaction because the thief and the receiver of goods are not associated in the series of acts which form the same transaction from the very start the one offence takes place after the other is completed In another Calcutta case also it was held that unless the theft and subsequent receipt were committed in pursuance of the same conspiracy the two offences could not be said to be parts of the same transaction and the offenders could not be tried together—Ohl Bhusan v Emp 46 Cal 741 23 C W N 463 29 C L J 71 Under the present clause however it is not necessary that the two offences must be committed in the same transaction or in pursuance of the same conspiracy all that is now required is that one offender should commit theft and the other offender should receive the stolen property

Dacoity and receiving the property stolen in the dacoity may be tried together under this clause—Durga Prosad v Emp 45 All 23 20 A L J 981

The offence of belonging to a gang of thieves (sec 401 I P C) is not an offence which includes theft within the meaning of this clause because the former offence is committed as soon as a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft is formed and before any theft is actually committed by them Therefore an offence of belonging to a gang of thieves and an offence of receiving stolen property cannot be tried together under this clause—Clayton v Emp 6 Cr L J 1097 (Lah)

781 Clause (f) —The object of this clause and the meaning of the words possession of which has been transferred by one offence have been thus explained by Mr Tonkinson during the debate in the Legislative Assembly Take a concrete example A is a cattle thief two cattle are stolen B is the dishonest receiver to whom A has passed on one of the cattle C is the dishonest butcher who knows the cattle to have been stolen and assists in their concealment by slaughtering the other Well if A is present A B and C can all be tried together under clause
 (e) If A has disappeared then this is not possible and the provisions of clause (f) are required The possession of these cattle has been transferred by one offence the original offence of theft One person has committed an offence under sec 411 I P C and another person has committed an offence under section 414 I P C The two cattle were stolen at the same time, that is one offence—Legislative Assembly Debates, 6th February 1923 page 1992 By this clause, the ruling in 28 Cal 104 is rendered obsolete

The only offences mentioned in this clause are offences under secs 411 and 414 I P C and the provisions of this clause cannot be extended by analogy to a trial of persons accused of offences other than those specifically mentioned herein Therefore, the joint trial of two accused both charged under sec 412 I P C, is illegal—Behari v K L, 12 O L J 339 26 Cr L J 1291 A I R 1925 Oudh 452

782 Clause (g) —A person who passes counterfeit coins and another who is in possession of them can be tried jointly—31 Cal 1007

783 Separate trial —A joint trial is not compulsory under this section the Magistrate has a discretion to proceed jointly or separately against the accused persons—Govinda v Emp, 16 N L R 9 21 Cr L J 769 Though the offences are committed in the same transaction, still it is a question for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to say whether the accused should be tried together or separately—Emp v Charu Chandra 38 C L J 309 25 Cr L J 294 This section gives a judicial discretion to the Court to try the accused persons jointly or separately and the manner in which the discretion should be exercised must depend upon the facts of each case—Dwarkanah v K E 19 C W N 121 16 Cr L J 348 Although a joint trial is allowed under the circumstances specified in this section still it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that the accused are not prejudiced thereby No joinder of charges should be allowed if it bewilders any of the accused in his defence or unduly prejudices him—Crown v Gulam 1 S L R 73 5 Mad 20 Alimuddi v K E 52 Cal 253 29 C W N 173 Thus, a number of murders and an offence of arson were committed Though all the accused were present there was evidence against some of them only as regards those offences There was evidence against all the accused together only of conspiracy to commit murder All the accused were charged with conspiracy, murder and arson and the jury returned a verdict of guilty against all the accused on all the charges Held that the jury were embarrassed and the accused were prejudiced in their defence—Alimuddi v K E, (supra) If the accused appear to have acted independently and have separate defences the joint trial is illegal—2 Weir 303

A separate trial is the rule, and joint trial is the exception, and it is for the prosecution to justify a joint trial—Emp v Durga Prasad, 45 All 223 (224) 20 A L J 981

783A Applicability of sec 234 to sec 239 —In Burma and Oudh it has been held that the words the former part of this chapter occurring at the end of this section mean the part prior to the part headed joinder of charges i. e. the part under the heading form of charge, therefore sec 234 will not control the provisions of sec 239—Bishamb'ar v K L, 2 O W N 760 26 Cr L J 1602 Po Vs A Emp 7 L B R 272 16 Cr L J 44 But in 11 A L J 188 it has been held that the words mean that secs 234 and 235 shall also apply to this section Sec 239 is governed by secs 234 and 235 see notes under sec 234

784 Misjoinder not cured by acquittal—Where several persons were charged with and tried at one trial for dacoity and one of these persons was also tried for an offence under sec 40 Arms Act for being in possession of arms and ammunitions at a time subsequent to the dacoity and after the transaction in which the dacoity was committed it was held that the trial was illegal and the fact that the Sessions Court acquitted him of the offence under the Arms Act observing that the accused could not be legally convicted at the same trial of the offence under the Arms Act, could not cure the illegality—Jaising v Crown 1917 P R 44 19 Cr L J 100

240 When a charge containing more heads than one is framed against the same person and when a conviction has been had on one or more of them the complainant or the officer conducting the prosecution, may, with the consent of the Court withdraw the remaining charge or charges or the Court of its own accord may stay the inquiry into or trial of such charge or charges Such withdrawal shall have the effect of an acquittal on such charge or charges, unless the conviction be set aside in which case the said Court (subject to the order of the Court setting aside the conviction) may proceed with the inquiry into or trial of the charge or charges so withdrawn

785 Scope of section—This section applies where the accused is charged with several distinct offences and not where formal charges are drawn up against him—1889 P R 4 Where the offence is one but the charges are several because the offence falls under several sections of the I P C or because there is doubt as to which offence was committed this section does not apply and the conviction of the accused on one of the charges necessarily makes the other charges nugatory

It however the accused has committed several offences and several charges are therefore drawn up the conviction on one of the charges d

not make the other charges nugatory, but it is open to a Court to convict the accused on the other charges or to withdraw the charges under this section—1889 P R 24 This is an enabling section and gives the Court discretion either to convict or acquit the accused on the remaining charges, and does not make it obligatory on the prosecution, on a conviction on one charge, to withdraw the other charges

If the evidence is sufficient to sustain a conviction on all the charges, and the Court considers a certain term of imprisonment adequate to meet all the offences, it is not a proper course for the Court to convict on one charge and drop the others, but it should convict on all the charges and pass concurrent sentences—Reg v Ram Chandra, Ratanlal 19, Q E v Nadhariya, Ratanlal 288

Again, this section applies only to charges framed in the same case, and the prosecution cannot, on conviction of the accused in one case, withdraw a charge against the accused in another case—Q E v Sadia Ratanlal 362 Q E v Govinda, Ratanlal 977

Charge when can be withdrawn—A charge can be withdrawn at any time before it is tried If however evidence on the charge is recorded and the pleaders heard, it cannot be withdrawn and it is the duty of the Judge to sum up the whole of the evidence and to require the jury to return a verdict on the charge A fortiori, a charge cannot be withdrawn after a jury has returned a verdict convicting the accused on that charge—Q E v Nadhariya, Ratanlal 288

High Court's power to direct withdrawal—Where the accused was charged with 10 offences of criminal breach of trust, in respect of 10 small sums, and the Sessions Judge convicted the accused on three only of the charges, the High Court on appeal approved of the Sessions Judge's action, and also directed that no further proceedings against the accused in respect of the other offences should be taken—9 C L J 257

CHAPTER XX

OF THE TRIAL OF SUMMONS-CASES BY MAGISTRATES

786. This chapter deals only with the trial of summons cases, a warrant case cannot be tried under this chapter. If however a warrant case is joined with a summons-case, e g. where two charges arising out of the same transaction are made against an accused person, one of which is a summons case and the other a warrant case, the procedure should be as in a warrant case—11 Cal 91. 39 Mad. 503; 41 Mad 727. But in such a case if the warrant case is not proved, the Magistrate may proceed with the summons case according to the procedure laid down in this chapter and not under chapter XXI—7 Mad. 454.

Procedure in summons-cases.

241 The following procedure shall be observed by Magistrates in the trial of summons cases

242 When the accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate, the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he shall not be convicted, but it should not be necessary to frame a formal charge.

787 Particulars to be stated to accused —It is necessary that the accused should have a clear statement made to him (a) that he is about to be put on his trial, and (b) as to the offence or facts constituting the offence of the commission of which he is accused. If these particulars are not made known to him, the conviction will be set aside—3 C L R 87. Where the Magistrate did not explain to the accused the particulars of the offence of which he was accused but merely told him that he was accused of an offence under sec 19 of the Burma Village Act the trial was illegal—K L v Nga Sein (1922) 4 U B R 127.

788 Charge —Although it is not necessary to frame a formal charge in a summons case still the provisions of section 233 as to joinder of charges apply to summons cases as well because a charge is an essential element in any trial—3 L B R 52. See also 41 Cal 694 cited under sec 233.

When a summons case is tried jointly with a warrant case the procedure of a warrant case has to be followed and a charge has to be drawn up not only for the warrant case but for the summons case also. Where 243 If the accused admits that he has committed the offence of which he is accused, his admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him and, if he shows no sufficient cause why he should not be convicted, the Magistrate may convict him accordingly.

789 Charge —The word may has been substituted for the word shall, by sec 66 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. Under the old law the Magistrate was bound to convict the accused if the latter pleaded guilty and there was nothing to show that the plea was not unreserved or voluntary—3 S L R 213. If the accused guilty the Magistrate was bound to convict him and pass a sentence though a nominal one he had no power to discharge the accused on the ground that his criminal intention was wanting—U B R (1905) Cr P C 37

This power is now given to the Magistrate by the present amendment. This amendment gives the Magistrate a discretion which he does not now possess as to convicting an accused who pleads guilty in a summons case and the Court is thus able to refuse to accept a plea of guilty which it believes to be untrue.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) By making this amendment the Legislature has reverted to the ordering of the 1872 Code

790 Admission of accused.—Where in a prosecution for obstructing the road with a bullock cart the accused on being questioned whether he drove the cart on the particular road without permission answered that he drove the cart without permission on account of ignorance and begged to be excused held that this did not amount to an admission that he had committed the offence and a conviction based thereon was wrong—Emp v Gulam Ra a 25 Cr L J 707 (Lah) So also it is an incorrect procedure to convict an accused on an admission made by his counsel without examining the accused or recording any evidence—Municipal Board v Tulsi Ram 1 O W N 495 26 Cr L J 179

The Legislature requires that the admission shall be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by the accused because the right of appeal depends upon whether he really pleaded guilty or not—1889 A W N 81 When an accused person makes an exculpatory statement before the framing of a charge the Magistrate should take down the plea in the form of question and answer and in the exact words used by the accused in answer to the charge—5 Bom L R 999

The admission of the accused should be recorded at once at the time of the trial and not afterwards from the rough notes nor from the Magistrate's memory—15 Mad 83

Where a written defence is tendered in a case under this chapter it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to take down the defence of the accused by personally examining him—16 W R 53

If a warrant case is tried under the summons case procedure the Magistrate cannot convict the accused on his own admission without recording evidence and without framing a formal charge—Nabab v R E 27 C W N 93 Even if the case is tried summarily he must frame a charge if he passes an appealable sentence—Ibid

244 (1) If the Magistrate does not convict the accused under the preceding section, or if the accused does not make such admission the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant

Procedure when no such admission is made

(if any) and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution and also to hear the accused and take all such evidence as he produces in his defence

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court

(2) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit on the application of the complainant or accused issue process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of any document or other thing	(2) The Magistrate may, if he thinks fit on the application of the complainant or accused issue a summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce any document or other thing
---	---

(3) The Magistrate may before summoning any witness on such application require that his reasonable expenses incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial be deposited in Court

Change —This section has been amended by section 67 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

The italicised words at the beginning of the section have been added as consequential to the amendment made in sec 243. The proviso has been introduced to provide for the case where a complaint has been made by a Court and we have made a similar amendment in section 252. —Report of the Joint Committee (1922) In sub section (2) the word summons has been substituted for process for reasons see Note 792 below

791 Magistrate's duty to examine complainant witnesses etc — The Magistrate is not at liberty to stop a case whenever he likes. If the accused does not make the admission under sec 243 the Magistrate is bound to hear the complainant and his witnesses and he is not competent to acquit the accused without examining them—Ratanlal 539 2 B L R S N 15 18 All 221 6 W R 75 It is not sufficient to examine the complainant alone if the complainant has any witnesses they must also be examined—5 Mad 160 and the Magistrate is not entitled to acquit the accused on a consideration of the complainant's statement alone—20 Mad 388

Again it is prima facie the duty of the prosecution to call the witnesses who prove their connection with the transaction in question and who from the connection must be able to give important information—8 Cal 121 10 Cal 1070 All persons said to have witnessed the offence should be produced before the Magistrate—1916 P R 12 If such witnesses are not called an adverse inference against the prosecution may be drawn—8 Cal 121

Moreover the Magistrate is bound to examine the accused and his witnesses—6 W R 75 He is bound to examine all the witnesses that are produced by the accused and has no discretion in this matter—13 W R 63 The Magistrate has no power to arbitrarily limit the number of witnesses to be examined though he has undoubted jurisdiction to curtail the number of unnecessary witnesses on the ground that their examination will delay and probably defeat the ends of justice—Biswanath v Shivanand 2 P L T 330 It is also the duty of the Magistrate to enquire of the accused as to whether he has any witness to produce Where no such enquiry is made the conviction is liable to be set aside—1884 P R 7 If the accused does not produce any witness no unfavourable inference will be drawn against him—8 Cal 121 But see 21 C W N 1152 (cited under see 290)

The Magistrate must base his decision on the evidence produced on either side in Court he cannot rely on statements made to him out of Court—14 Bom 572

Cross examination —In summons cases the accused has no right to postpone the cross examination of any prosecution witness as in the case of trial of a warrant case But if the cross examination was postponed in accordance with the direction of the Magistrate he is bound to give further opportunity to the accused to cross examine the witness Otherwise the evidence of such witness will not be legally admissible—Parmeshwar v Emp 3 P L T 347

792 Issue of summons —If the complainant or the accused thinks that any witness is not likely to appear without summons he should apply beforehand to the Magistrate for summons to enforce his attendance—14 W R 76 When such application is made the Magistrate must either grant or refuse the application he cannot simply file it—6 C W N 548

The Magistrate has a discretion as to whether he will issue summons or not—14 W R 76 21 Cr L J 385 (All) Where a complainant mentioned the name of several witnesses but could only produce two of them the Magistrate could decide the case on the evidence of the two witnesses alone 15 W R 87 and was not bound to issue summons to the other witnesses—4 M H C R App 29

But where a summons had already been issued to a witness and he did not appear in obedience to the summons it was held under the old law that the Magistrate was bound to issue further process against that witness and had no discretion to refuse to issue further process—Daulat v Brinda 30 Cal 121 The party at whose instance the process was originally issued had a right to call upon the Court to compel the attendance of his witness—6 C W N 548 But by virtue of the present amendment of sub-section (2) this section read with section 90 will give a discretion to the Magistrate to issue further process (warrant) or not This amendment has been made on the recommendation of the Select Committee of 1916 who observed The difficulty intended to be dealt with by this clause rests upon the words process to compel the attendance as seems clear from the Calcutta decisions We think that the only alteration really required is to substitute for the words referred to above the simpler expression a summons to any witness directing him to attend etc This we think will make section 90 clearly applicable which is in our opinion all that is required

If a witness summoned by the Magistrate does not care to appear the Magistrate is not bound to re-issue the summons but it is in his discretion to issue fresh summons if he likes—Seltanuthu v Chinnappan 27 Cr L J 76 A I R 1926 Mad 361

793 Sub section (3)—Payment of process fee —If the complainant fails to deposit fees for summoning witnesses the Magistrate must deal with the case on such evidence as he may have before him but should not dismiss the complaint—3 Mad 160

If the accused fails to deposit process fees the Magistrate may refuse to issue process but this order of refusal must be sparingly passed and such order would be improper in a case where the accused is unable or unwilling to deposit the money and the result is that he is convicted without his witnesses being heard especially if the case is one in which a severe sentence is passed—1898 P R 7

245 (1) If the Magistrate upon taking the evidence referred to in Section 244 and such further evidence (if any) as he may of his own motion, cause to be produced and (if he thinks fit) examining the accused finds the accused not guilty he shall record an order of acquittal

(2) If he finds the accused Sentence guilty he shall pass sentence upon him according to law	(2) Where the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section 349 or Section 562 he shall if he finds the accused guilty, pass sentence upon him ac- cording to law

Change —Subsection (2) has been amended by sec 68 of the Crimi nal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 This amendment is merely one of drafting

794 Acquittal—Discharge —A Magistrate who does not find the accused guilty, must record an order of acquittal No order of discharge can be passed under this section—1900 P R 19 Even if he styles his order as an order of discharge, the discharge will amount to an acquittal for no other order is contemplated in summons cases That being so the Sessions Judge has no power to take action under sec 437 (now 436) against a person alleged to be discharged—8 M L T 78

If on the contrary, the Magistrate tried a warrant case as a summons case without framing a charge and passed an order of acquittal the so called acquittal would operate as a discharge under sec 253 of the Code—1886 A W N 260 If, however, the Magistrate framed a charge in a summons case, the acquittal should be under sec 258 and not under this section—22 W R 12

Compensation to accused —When the Magistrate acquits an accused under this section on the ground that the complaint was vexatious he can under sec 250 direct the complainant to pay compensation to the accused—10 Bom 199 5 Mad 381 Even if the Magistrate tries a warrant case as a summons case and acquits the accused, he can award compensation

'Shall pass sentence —If the Magistrate convicts the accused, he is bound to pass some sentence at least a nominal one—4 M H C R App 66, 2 Bom L R 611 U B R (1905) Cr P C 37

246 A Magistrate may, under Section 243 or 245, convict the accused of any offence triable under this Chapter which from the facts admitted or proved he appears to have committed, whatever may be the nature of the complaint or summons

Finding not limited by complaint or summons.

795 Scope of section —This section enables the Magistrate to proceed in regard to any other offence prima facie established by the evidence for the prosecution It is not necessary that the case started by the complainant must be the one which the Court should find proved, before it arrives at a conclusion of the guilt of the accused The Court is not bound by all the statements of the complainant Its duty is to find out the truth in the midst of the conflicting evidence—Emp v Somnath, 14 Bom L R 135 But it is not necessary, when the Magistrate thinks that other offences have been committed, to reopen the trial or to follow the procedure of secs 243 and 244 Such a procedure would involve the rehearing of all the evidence in the same trial and is clearly opposed to the intention of the Legislature—36 Cal 869

This section does not mean that the accused in a summons case can be convicted of an offence alleged to have been committed on a date to which no reference has been made in the complaint or summons—Sarkar v. Haurah Municipality 22 Cr L J 559 (Cal)

247 If the summons has been issued on complaint, and upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, or any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned, the complainant does not appear, the Magistrate shall, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained acquit the accused, unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day

Provided that where the complainant is a public servant and his personal attendance is not required the Magistrate may dispense with his attendance and proceed with the case

795A Scope —This section does not apply to cases instituted under section 195 and the Magistrate cannot dismiss the complaint for default of the complainant to appear—Ratanlal 137 See prov 10

This section does not apply unless the case is instituted upon a complaint Under sec 47 of the U P Act II of 1916 it is the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence upon information received So the case is not one instituted on a complaint and sec 247 of this Code has no application In spite of non appearance of the complainant the proceedings must continue—Basanti v. Masud Ali A I R 1924 All 528 26 Cr L J 170

796 Does not appear —The appearance of the complainant s Vakil is not appearance of the complainant within the meaning of this section unless the Court has dispensed with his personal attendance and has specially allowed him to appear by a pleader—2 Weir 309

If the complainant does not appear the Court is not bound to wait for the complainant till the Court closes for the day—7 Mad 356 The Magistrate is empowered to dismiss the complaint if the complainant does not appear when the case is called on for hearing even though he appears soon after—7 Mad 213

Although a Magistrate has power to dismiss the complaint for default of the complainant s appearance he should exercise his power with a reasonable discretion He should not dismiss the complaint where the non appearance of the complainant was due to circumstances beyond his control e g a heavy flood which cut off all communications—24 W R 64 5 W R 51 or when the case was transferred from one Magistrate to other, and the complainant was present in the Court premises but not had notice of the transfer did not appear before the particular Magistrate who had charge of the case, but appeared in the previous Court—13 C L R 303, 47 Cal 147, 24 C L J 444, or where the complainant had been kept out of the way by the action of the accused in getting a constable to arrest him on a false charge—38 Mad 1028, or where the case was called on for hearing on a date not fixed for hearing and the complainant was necessarily absent—42 Cal 365, or where the complainant was dead and another person wished to be brought on the record—Madhu Chowdhury v Turab, 18 C W N 1211, 1 P L J 262, (contra—Purna Chandra v Dengar, 19 C W N 334) or where the complainant was in jail and could not therefore appear—Ratanlal 59

Non appearance on adjourned hearing —A Magistrate can dismiss a complaint and acquit the accused, not only where the complainant does not appear on the first day of hearing but also where he fails to appear on the date of adjourned hearing—2 Weir 308, 22 W R 40, Ramjiwan v Abilakh, 18 C W N 584 But this power to dismiss a complaint must be exercised with discretion Where the complainant has done all that is necessary for him to do to establish his case, a complaint ought not to be dismissed for his non appearance on an adjourned date, unless his attendance is in the opinion of the Magistrate specially required on that day—2 Weir 306, 46 Cal 867

Again, a Magistrate cannot dismiss a complaint for non appearance of the complainant on the adjourned date if the order of adjournment was not made in the presence and hearing of parties—8 M H C R App 5 or where the Magistrate did not specify the place where the case was to be taken up but ordered the parties to appear either at Aligarh or at Talibnagar—1882 A W N 229

Non appearance on date of judgment —This section applies to a case of absence of the complainant on the date fixed for his appearance or on the date of adjourned hearing, and does not apply to a case where the complainant is absent on the date fixed for delivery of the judgment. If on such a date the complainant is absent (and the attendance of the complainant on that date was not specially directed by the Magistrate) an order of acquittal of the accused on the ground of absence of the complainant is erroneous—46 Cal 867, Emp v Jangusinh, 19 N L R 49

797. Order of acquittal —In a summons case, if the complainant is absent on the day of hearing, the proper order to be passed by the Magistrate under sec 247 is one of acquittal and not one 'striking off' the complaint—10 Bom L R 628

The accused is entitled to acquittal if the complainant is absent, and unless the Court thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day In other words, the right to an order of acquittal accrues to the accused upon two conditions, and is dependant firstly on the absence of the complainant, and secondly on the Court not adjourning the case. But if on the date of hearing the case is not taken up at all, it cannot be said that the second condition is fulfilled, and the accused is not entitled to acquittal owing to the absence of the complainant on that date—Rash Behary v. Corporation of Calcutta, 26 Cr L J 1050 A I R 1926 Cal 102

Warrant case—If a warrant case is tried by the Magistrate as a summons case, the procedure is bad, and he cannot pass an order under this section dismissing the complaint for non appearance of the complainant—4 C W N 26

Where two charges, one on a summons case and another on a warrant case, are jointly tried in one trial and the complainant is absent on the adjourned hearing, the Magistrate ought to make an order of discharge under sec 259 and not one of acquittal under this section—41 Mad 727 11 Cal 91.

If a summons case is tried under the warrant case procedure, and eventually the Magistrate acquits the accused under sec 247 on account of the absence of the complainant on an adjourned date of hearing held that the acquittal is legal and proper. Section 247 lays down a general principle that a person charged with a summons case offence is entitled to an acquittal if the complainant is absent, and there is no reason why this right should be denied to him simply because the Magistrate has adopted a different procedure for the trial of the case—Venkatarama v Sundaram, 44 M L J 119

Further inquiry—Since an order under this section is one of acquittal and not one of discharge, no further inquiry can be directed under sec 436—Hindra v Bhagwanra, 25 Cr L J 359 (Oudh)

Absence of accused—This section has nothing to do with the presence or absence of the accused. If the complainant is absent, the case must be dismissed and the accused acquitted, whether the latter is present or absent—17 C W N clix. If the complainant is absent, the accused must be acquitted and it is immaterial that the summons to the accused had not been served and that the accused was not present when he was summoned—Kiran Sarkar v Emp, 5 P L T 15 24 Cr L J 815 (Calcutta 2111 307). If there are several accused and one is present and the others absent, the order acquitting the accused who is present will put an end to the case also against the other accused who are not before the Court—4 C. W. N. 346

Appeal to District Magistrate—If an order of dismissal is passed under this section, the District Magistrate has no power to set aside the order of acquittal on appeal, because under sec. 417 an appeal against an

of acquittal shall be directed by the Government and presented to the High Court—7 Mad 213 38 C L J 196

798 Revival of complaint—retrial —The Code contains no provision empowering a Magistrate to revive a case after an order of dismissal—4 C W N 26 The dismissal of a complaint under this section amounts to an acquittal and bars a subsequent trial on the same facts (section 403) even if good cause is shown for non appearance of the complainant—45 All 58 26 M L J 160 In re Guggilappu 34 Mad 253 12 Cr L J 41 9 M L T 93 4 C W N 346 1885 A W N 43 Ram Mahala v Emp 2 P L T 170 Airan Sarkar v Emp 5 P L T 15 38 C L J 196 Even the District Magistrate has no power to order the entertainment of a complaint which was dismissed for default of appearance—2 Weir 308 He cannot order the entertainment of a fresh complaint for a different offence on the same facts—Fasar v K E 37 C L J 253 25 Cr L J 149 But the proceedings are so irregular as not to amount to a trial the dismissal will not amount to an acquittal and the complaint may be revived—2 Weir 307 Ratanlal 59 In 2 P L T 170 it has been held that even if the order of acquittal is passed under a misapprehension still the Magistrate cannot take cognizance of a fresh complaint if the order is wrong, the complainant can take proper steps by way of revision but he cannot file a fresh complaint

In a Madras case it has been pointed out that the accused who is acquitted under this section owing to the absence of the complainant on the date fixed for hearing is acquitted without trial on the merits he cannot be said to have been tried within the meaning of sec 403 and therefore an acquittal under this section is not a bar to a second complaint of the offence on the same facts—40 Mad 977 (Note) dissenting from 34 Mad 253 But the other High Courts are of opinion that an acquittal under section 247 acts as a bar to further proceedings in the same way as an acquittal after trial on the merits—See 45 All 58 4 C W N 346 In re Guggilappu Paddy 34 Mad 253 and the cases cited above

Fresh process for other offences including the previous one —Where a Magistrate issued process against and summoned the accused persons for one of several offences alleged against them and acquitted them under this section for default of complainant's appearance no fresh process could in view of sec 403 (1) be issued against them in respect of all the offences alleged against them on the previous occasion including the one in respect of which they were summoned and acquitted—2 C L J 622

799 Order of adjournment —On default of the complainant's appearance the Magistrate has a discretion either to dismiss the complaint and acquit the accused or to adjourn the hearing or he can even proceed to examine the witnesses in the absence of the complainant Such a procedure is not illegal if the accused is not prejudiced—Sa afdi v A. L 24 C W N 199

The Magistrate cannot adjourn the hearing unless there are sufficient and proper grounds for doing so. The fact that the accused has been guilty of contempt of the processes of the Court is no good reason for proceeding with the case—17 C W N clxx. But a Magistrate can adjourn the hearing for the purpose of allowing the accused time to secure the attendance of his witnesses—16 W R 21

800 Death of complainant.—It is open to doubt whether this section applies where the non appearance of the complainant is due to his death. But if on the day fixed for hearing the son of the deceased complainant appears and asks the Magistrate to proceed with the case the Magistrate ought to proceed and should not acquit the accused under this section—1 P L J 262 18 C W N 1211. But see 19 C W N 334

801 Revision.—The High Court does not ordinarily interfere in revision against an order of acquittal since the Local Government can appeal but this rule does not apply to an acquittal under sec 247 especially where the acquittal is the result of an improper clutching at jurisdiction—Ram Nidh v Ram Saran 26 O C 283

Where an order is passed by the Magistrate acquitting an accused under sec 247 the order can only be set aside by the High Court. The Magistrate or his successor has no power to revive the proceedings by setting aside the order—Nityananda v Rakhahari 38 C L J 196

248 If a complainant, at any time before a final order is passed in any case under this Chapter, satisfies the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw his complaint, the Magistrate may permit him to withdraw the same, and shall thereupon acquit the accused

802 Scope of Section.—This section applies only to summons cases. A withdrawal of complaint is permissible only in summons cases—21 Cal 103 5 Mad 378 Ratanlal 461. If the offence charged is a warrant case the Magistrate must proceed with the inquiry or trial in spite of the withdrawal of the complaint if he finds the elements of the offence set forth in the complaint—13 Bom 600 37 Bom 369 3 C W N 548 6 Mad 316

Again this section is limited in its operation to cases instituted upon complaints in the strict sense. If A gave information to the Police and the Magistrate took cognizance of the case upon the Police report there was no complaint within the meaning of sec 4 (1) and A could not be permitted to withdraw—23 Mad 626

This section contemplates a withdrawal of the complaint as a whole. Where a complaint against several accused persons is withdrawn as against one of them, this amounts to a withdrawal of the whole complaint in respect of all the accused—Shyam Behari v Sagar Singh, 1 P L T. 32. The withdrawal of the case absolves not only the accused present but also all the accused—2 P L T 584. Contra—Rohit Singh v Makdum, 9 O L J 54. 23 Cr L J 271 and Anantia v Crown, 5 Lah 239 (per Le Rossignol J) where it is held that the withdrawal against some does not amount to a withdrawal against all. It should be noted that this latter view is in consonance with the provisions of sec 345 (as now amended) under which the composition of an offence with one of the accused does not amount to a composition with all the accused.

803 Withdrawal of complaint — Withdrawal and Compromise.—There is a well marked distinction between a withdrawal of a case under this section and a compromise under sec 345. Compromise contemplates an arrangement between two parties, withdrawal has no such meaning. A case is said to be compromised if it is withdrawn with the consent of the accused, whereas a case is withdrawn under this section without the consent of the accused. Therefore when a petition is filed by the complainant praying for striking off the case, the Magistrate should satisfy himself under what section the petition is made. If the case is not being compromised but is being withdrawn without the consent of the accused, the petition is not a petition under sec 345 but under this section, and the Magistrate may in spite of the petition, proceed with the trial and convict the accused—Bayan Ali v K E, 20 C W N 1209. See also notes under sec 345.

Who can withdraw —Only the complainant can withdraw the case. In cases of contempt of the lawful authority of a public servant, the complainant is the public servant whose authority has been resisted, and not the person injured by such resistance and the former alone can withdraw—2 Bom 653. Where a Municipal Secretary instituted a complaint, the Municipal Council was not competent to withdraw—27 M L J 617.

When to withdraw —The complainant can withdraw at any time 'before a final order is passed'. But these words do not refer to a time so early as when no process has been issued to the accused. An order of acquittal passed on an application for withdrawal preferred before issue of process is unmeaning and of no avail—In re Muthusamoopan, 36 Mad 315. 14 Cr L J 55.

Magistrate alone can permit withdrawal —This section does not empower a Police officer to entertain an application for withdrawal of a complaint. The permission for withdrawal of a complaint is a judicial act, and the Magistrate alone can do it—Ratanlal 91.

May permit —It is discretionary with the Magistrate to permit the complainant to withdraw. The Magistrate can in spite of the application for withdrawal proceed with the trial and convict the accused—20 C W N 1209 (Pat)

Revival of withdrawn complaint —Where a Deputy Magistrate allowed a complaint to be withdrawn and discharged the accused the District Magistrate could not revive the case against the accused—25 W R 64

But where the complaint was withdrawn because there was no sanction (the case being one in which a sanction was necessary) and the accused was discharged the complainant was competent to lodge a fresh complaint after obtaining the necessary sanction—22 Bom 711

249 In any case instituted otherwise than upon complaint,

Power to stop pro-ceeding when no com-plaint a Presidency Magistrate, a Magistrate of the first class or with the previous sanction of the District Magistrate, any other Magistrate, may, for reasons to be recorded by him stop the proceedings at any stage without pronouncing any judgment either of acquittal or conviction and may thereupon release the accused

804 Where upon a report of the Police that one J had given false information to the Police against certain persons a Magistrate ordered the prosecution of J under sec 182 I P C but subsequently upon receipt of another report in another case that the information given by J was true he ordered the summons issued for the attendance of J to be cancelled it was held that the Magistrate had full power to cancel the summons under this section—Nathu v Erip 1 P L T 28

An order under this section neither amounts to an acquittal nor to a discharge. Since it does not amount to an acquittal (see Explanation to sec 403) it does not bar further proceedings in accordance with law—Achru v Crown 1913 P R 9. And since it does not amount to an order of dismissal of complaint no order can be passed under sec 437 (now 436) directing further inquiry—Ibid

Proviso to Accusations in Summons and Warrant Cases

250	(1) If, in any case	250	(1) If, in any case
Frivolous or vexatious accusations	instituted by complaint as defined in this Code, or upon information given	False, frivolous or vexatious accusations	instituted upon complaint * * * or information given to a to a police officer or to a Magistrate, a person is accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate, and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits the accused and is satisfied that the accusation against him was frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, by his order of discharge or acquittal, direct the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made to pay to the accused or each of the accused where there are more than one, such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees, as the Magistrate thinks fit.

Provided that before making any such direction the Magistrate shall—

- (a) record and consider any objection which the complainant or informant may urge against the making of the direction and
- (b) If the Magistrate directs any compensation to be paid, state in writing, in his order of discharge or acquitofficer or to a Magistrate, one or more persons is or are accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate, and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits all or any of the accused, and is of opinion that the accusation against them or any of them was false and either frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, by his order of discharge or acquittal, if the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made is present call upon him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to such accused or to each or any of such accused when there are more than one, or, if such person is not present, direct the issue of a summons to him to appear and show cause as aforesaid.

- (2) The Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant or informant may show and if he is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious may, for reasons to be recorded direct that compensation to such amount not exceeding one hundred rupees or, if the Magis-

tal his reasons for awarding the compensation

(2) Compensation of which a Magistrate has ordered payment under subsection (1) shall be recoverable as if it were a fine

Provided that, if it cannot be recovered the imprisonment to be awarded shall be simple, and for such term not exceeding thirty days, as the Magistrate directs

(2B) When any person is imprisoned under sub section (2A), the provisions of Sections 68 and 69 of the Indian Penal Code shall, so far as may be, apply

(2C) No person who has been directed to pay compensation under this section shall by reason of such order, be exempted from any civil or criminal liability in respect of the complaint made or information given by him

Provided that any amount paid to an accused person under this section shall be taken into account in awarding compensation to such person in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter

(3) A complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub section (2) by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty rupees may appeal from the order in so far as the order relates to the payment of the compensation, as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate

(4) Where an order for payment of compensation to an accused person is made in a case which is subject to appeal under sub section (3), the compensation shall be

him before the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal has elapsed, or, if an appeal is presented, before the appeal has been decided, and where such order is made in a case which is not so subject to appeal, the compensation shall not be paid before the expiration of one month from the date of the order.

(5) At the time of awarding compensation in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter, the Court shall take into account any compensation paid or recovered under this section

(5) (Omitted).

Change —The whole section has been redrafted by sec 69 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The principal changes introduced are the following —

(1) The words 'frivolous or vexatious' occurring in the old section have been substituted by the words "false and either frivolous or vexatious"

(2) Under the old law the complainant was forthwith ordered to pay the compensation under the present law the Magistrate will forthwith call upon him to show cause. "The procedure in awarding compensation has been more clearly laid down by directing that a Magistrate in his order of discharge or acquittal may call upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation, and that he shall then consider and record any cause shown and pass such orders as he sees fit * * * As the section is worded under the old law, the order to pay compensation is part of the order of discharge or acquittal, and the record and consideration of objections is to precede such order. The procedure now proposed is more logical"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). Moreover, the old law did not provide for the case where the complainant was absent at the time the judgment was delivered now, power has been given in such a case to summon him to appear and show cause—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

(3) The limit of compensation has been increased from Rs 50 to Rs 100, unless the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class. "We think that this increase is amply justified by the present day conditions. We do not think that this increase will, having regard to the provisions of section 404, make orders under section 250 appealable where they are not so at present"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

(4) Under the old law the Magistrate could order imprisonment only after failure to recover compensation but he could not award imprisonment in default in the very order directing compensation under the new sub-section (2A) the Magistrate has now been empowered to award such imprisonment in the order itself

(5) Subsection (2) of the old section which provided that compensation should be recoverable as if it were a fine has been omitted as it is provided for in sec 547 The proviso to sub section (2) of the old section has now been re enacted as sub section (2A) with some alterations Sub section (2B) is new

(6) Sub-section (2C) is new and the proviso to this sub section is the same as the old sub-section (5)

(7) An appeal shall now lie from the order of a first class Magistrate if he awards compensation exceeding fifty rupees See sub section (3), Under the old law no appeal lay from the order of a 1st class Magistrate

(8) Sub-section (4) has been amended to specify the time for payment of compensation where the original case is non appealable The amendment which we propose at the end of sub section (4) is to provide for cases in which though there cannot be an appeal the acquittal or discharge of the person to whom compensation has been awarded may be set aside in revision The period of one month which we have allowed should be ample to admit of an application being made to the superior Court —
Report of the Select Committee of 1916

805 Instituted upon complaint etc —The operation of this section is restricted to cases instituted by complaint as defined in the Code or upon information given to a Police Officer or to a Magistrate It is clear that it will not apply to a case instituted on a police report or on information given by a Police Officer—21 Cal 979 It is inapplicable to the case of a complaint lodged by a Police Officer as such—5 C W N 370 21 Cal 979 1879 P R 16 7 C W N 206 Q E v Sakar Jan 22 Bom 934

A case instituted by the Police on a complaint to them or upon evidence obtained in an inquiry conducted by them is not instituted upon complaint within the meaning of this section—6 All 96 Saryug v King Emp 1 P L J 106 But if the case is originally based on information given to a Police Officer this section applies although the case was ultimately instituted upon a Police report—14 C W N 326 See also Jairaj v Bans 23 A L J 1034 27 Cr L J 35 and the Magistrate can award compensation if the complaint is alleged—

See Note 16 under sect 254 (h)

Complaint under Cattle Trespass Act—This section applies to a case in which a false and frivolous complaint has been made under the Cattle Trespass Act. Under section 1 (9) of the 1898 Code, the word 'offence' includes an act in respect of which a complaint may be made under Sec 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act. If such complaint is false and frivolous or vexatious, compensation may be awarded—29 Mad 517. The rulings in 18 All 353, 13 Cal 304, 22 Cal 139, 23 Cal 248, 9 Mad 102, and 9 Mad 374 decided under the Code of 1882, are no longer good law.

Complaint to a Village Magistrate—A complaint of a non bailable offence to a village headman who is bound to report the substance of the information to the Police under sec 45 (c) is an 'information to a Police Officer' within the meaning of this section and if on such information the Police charges the accused and the Magistrate finds the charge to be false and vexatious he can order compensation under this section—Nachimuthu v Muthurami 39 Mad 1006, 27 M L J 37, 15 Cr L J 431, Kalyaperumal v Batagi 45 M L J 255, Thanskadarath v Amman 4 L W 73, 17 Cr L J 503, Nadiabba v Rajachetty, 32 M L J 78, 18 Cr L J 11 (Contra—In re Arulanandham, 22 M L J 138, 13 Cr L J 29). If however the information preferred to the village Magistrate is one which he is not bound to report to the Police, the preferring of such information does not amount to information to the Police within the meaning of this section and no compensation is awardable if the information proves to be false—A. E. v Thammana, 25 Mad 667.

Case instituted under sec 476—Where a case is instituted under sec 476 at the instance of a person it cannot be said to have been instituted either upon complaint of that person or upon information given to a Police Officer or to a Magistrate—14 Bom L R 1166.

Information given through another—Where a person gave information to another to the effect that a certain constable had committed extortion, intending that a complaint should be made on his behalf to a Magistrate, and the complaint was subsequently dismissed as frivolous, it was held that such person was liable to give compensation to the accused, and the fact that he utilised another in giving the information was immaterial—40 All 79. But in 12 S L R 76 it is held that this section does not warrant an order to pay compensation against a person who only instigates the giving of false information but who does not himself make the complaint or give the information to the Police.

806 'Accused of an offence'—An institution of proceedings under Chapter VIII is not an accusation of an offence, and this section does not apply if the accusation proves to be false—25 Bom 48, 15 All 365, Bindha chah v Lal Behari, 36 All 382, Ram Sukh v Mahadeo, 7 A L J 743, 1896 P R 4, 1902 P R 33, Mannu Khan v Chandhi, 20 A L J 624, 21 A L J 207, Ram Badan v Janhi, 45 All 363.

Similarly an application for maintenance under sec 488 is not a complaint of an offence (the refusal to maintain wife not being an offence) and no compensation can be awarded if the application proves to be false—6 M L T 261

The use of a house as a brothel is not an offence under sec 41 Bombay District Police Act and a complaint as to such use of a house is not a complaint of an offence. No compensation can therefore be awarded if the complaint is frivolous or vexatious—Imp v Hari 6 S I R 254 14 Cr L J 320

An order for compensation cannot be made in regard to a complaint under sec of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act (VIII of 1850) because neglect or refusal to perform work is not an offence—4 C W N 253 Ratanlal 17 4 Mad 234 See also 41 All 322

Section 3 of the Bombay Public Conveyance Act provides a summary remedy for the recovery of the legal fare of a public conveyance and a complaint under that section is not a complaint in respect of an offence within the meaning of this section. A Magistrate has therefore no power to make an order awarding compensation under this section in respect of such a complaint if it is false—44 Bom 463

807 Triable by a Magistrate.—This section applies only where the offence is triable by a Magistrate and not where the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session but is actually tried by a Magistrate—Weir 315 1902 P R 26 Emp v Chhaba 19 Bom L R 60 1 Bur L J 38 Sarupsonar v Ram Sundar 20 A L J 433 Even if the Magistrate tries an offence triable by the Court of Session by virtue of his powers specially conferred upon him under sec 30 and discharges the accused on account of the charge being vexatious he cannot award compensation to the accused—1902 P R 26 2 Weir 315 Ratanlal 1961 Crown v Hanir Chand 1902 P R 14 Het Ram v Ganga 16 A L J 486 40 All 615 Shankar v Crown 1919 P R 15 Ud Harat v Blola 1919 P R 1 But where the facts in a case showed that the offence was triable by a Court of Session only but the Magistrate regarding it as falling under a different head of offences triable by him tried the case and in dismissing the same awarded compensation to the accused held that the procedure was not illegal—45 Ma 29 Hemandas v Ahir 16 S L R 205 26 Cr L J 265 But when a complaint has been filed against an accused person for offences some of which are triable exclusively by the Magistrate and some by the Court of Session and the accused after trial is discharged in respect of all the offences an order for compensation against the complainant can not be passed—Harishar v Vaktand Ali 23 A L J 1056 48 All 166 27 Cr L J 6 A I R 1926 All 159 See also Het Ram v Ganga 40 All 615 where one offence was triable exclusively by the Sessions Court and two other offences by the Magistrate

Summary cases.—Compensation may be awarded even if the case is triable summarily—11 Mad 142

808 Who can award compensation.—An order of compensation can be made only by the Magistrate by whom the case is heard. Where part of the evidence was heard by one Magistrate and then the case was made over to another Magistrate under section 346, and the latter Magistrate heard the rest of the evidence and decided the case, held that the latter Magistrate was competent to order compensation—19 A L J 651. But a Magistrate who has heard nothing of the case except the complainant's plea against the order cannot make an order under this section—1892 A. W N 58

'The Magistrate by whom the case is heard' does not include an Appellate Court. Such a Court in setting aside a conviction cannot order the complainant to pay compensation—39 Cal 157 (overruling 14 C W N 212); 3 Bom L R 841, 7 Bom L R 998, Chedi v. Ram Lal, 21 A L J 834

809. "Discharges or acquits the accused":—The word 'heard' shows that the case must proceed as far as hearing. If a complaint is summarily dismissed under sec 203, without issue of process to the accused, such a dismissal is not an order of discharge or acquittal within the meaning of this section—29 All 137, 1897 P R 14, even though the accused was present at the enquiry under sec 202, without issue of process, compensation cannot be awarded where the case is dismissed under sec 203—Harphul v Manku, 1906 P R 3

An order for compensation may be passed where the accused is acquitted under sec 245—6 Cal 581, 5 Mad 381, 10 Bom 199; or under sec 247—1888 P. R 14, 1884 A W N 115; 1891 A W N, 120; or under sec 248—1883 P R 24. But compensation cannot be awarded when the case is compounded (sec 345) because there is neither a discharge nor an acquittal. Even though the accused is acquitted after composition such an acquittal is not one contemplated by this section—Ratanlal 957; 10 Bom L R 1056, Ratanlal 700, 7 C P L R 2; 1888 P. R 19; 1910 P. R. 30

In order that compensation may be granted, it is necessary that there must be a complete discharge or acquittal. If the accused is charged with more offences than one, he must be discharged or acquitted of all the offences, a discharge or acquittal in respect of one of the offences is a partial discharge and cannot entitle the accused to compensation—24 Cal 53; 40 All. 610; Emp v Nadar, 12 S L R 87. If there are several accused, and some only of them are acquitted or discharged, the complainant may be ordered to pay compensation only to those who have been discharged or acquitted, but not to the others—5 Mad 381, 1877 P. R. 15

Moreover, the provisions of this section as to compensation can only apply to cases where the order of discharge or acquittal is legal—Q E v Maung Tun 1 L B R 44

810 False and frivolous or vexatious—Under the old law if the charge was frivolous or vexatious this was sufficient to entitle the accused to compensation and if over and above the charge was false as well, the accused was equally entitled to the compensation—Densmadhab v Kumud 30 Cal 123 2 Weir 313 5 Bom L R 128 Adikhan v Alagan 21 Mad 237 26 All 512 In re Gopal 37 Bom 376 15 Bom L R 49 14 Cr L J 75 1903 P L R 156 1914 U B R 3rd Qr 31 Under the present law the charge must be false besides being frivolous or vexatious The rulings in Ram Singh v Mathura 34 All 354 and 4 Bom L R 645 (where it was held that this section did not apply if the charge was false) are now over ruled

In a Burma case it was erroneously held that it was sufficient to make the complainant liable to pay compensation if the charge was false even though it was neither frivolous nor vexatious—19 Cr L J 172 (Bur) This is incorrect We do not think that the procedure of sec 250 should be used in every false case unless the case is also either frivolous or vexatious In more serious cases it is desirable that the Magistrate should act under section 476 with a view to the institution of a prosecution —Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

The mere fact that a complaint is frivolous or vexatious does not necessarily mean that it must be false Compensation can be awarded only if the complaint is false and also frivolous or vexatious—Assanmal v Dilbar, 26 Cr L J 1295 (Sind) A I R 1926 Sind 19

The word vexatious indicates an accusation merely for the purpose of annoyance—30 Cal 123 6 C W N 799 An accusation cannot be said to be vexatious unless the main intention of the complainant be to cause annoyance to the person accused—11 S L R 55 The idea conveyed by the word vexatious is that the object of the person making the accusation should be primarily to harass the persons accused—Bahaji v Mukund Singh 21 Cr L J 226 (Nag) Bhan v Syed Chand 26 Cr L J 1033 (Nag) If a prosecution is found to be maliciously brought on account of enmity, it is necessarily a vexatious one—Kashi Prosad v Emp, 24 A L J 161 27 Cr L J 300, Sheikh Faiz v Crown, 14 S L R 168

The word frivolous means 'silly, or 'without due foundation'—21 Cr L J 41 (Nag) Whether the charge is frivolous or vexatious is a question of fact to be decided by the Magistrate investigating the complaint—2 Weir 319 But the knowledge and intention of the complainant must be looked into Compensation should not be granted to the accused where the complainant did not know that the complaint was false and if

is clear that the intention of the complainant was not to vex or harass the accused—Crown v Kourold 11 S I R 55

Where the complainant believed his case to be true at first but subsequently after enquiries found that his belief had been proved to be untrue it would be his duty frankly to tell the Court that he had made a mistake and if he omits to do so it would show unwarrantable malice on his part and he would be liable to pay compensation—Shah Daood v Md Ibrahim 11 Bur L T 201 19 Cr L J 172

811 By his order —The order calling upon the complainant to show cause must be made in the same order by which the Magistrate acquits or discharges the accused. Thus where the accused was discharged and in the order of discharge a conditional order for compensation was passed subject to the complainant showing cause and the order of compensation was made absolute on the very day or on a subsequent day to which the case was adjourned for the complainant to show cause it was held that both the orders were passed in one proceeding and were not illegal—36 Aⁿ 132 Jairaj v Bansil, 23 A L J 1054 27 Cr I J 35 Lalit Mohan v Kunja Behari 18 C W N 702 7 S L R 123 1905 A W N 214 (1916) 2 M W N 159 Emp v Sandagar 1917 P R 31 In re Nagindas 22 Bom L R 184 8 Bom L R 847 What is intended by the Legislature is that the order of discharge and the order directing compensation must be made in one continuous proceeding and not in two separate proceedings. Therefore where the Magistrate at the time of discharging the accused made no order as to compensation but on a subsequent day ordered that the complainant should pay compensation the order was illegal because it was not passed in the same proceeding in which the accused was discharged—In re Sadur Husain 25 All 315 Ram Singh v Mathura 34 All 354 1905 P R 57 38 Cal 302 Narheyial v Rambalu 10 B L R 8 Imamdin v Emp 1913 P L R 99

Where there were two accused and one of them was discharged and the case against the other was adjourned to a later date when he was acquitted and on the latter date the Magistrate required the complainant to show cause and then ordered him to pay compensation to each of the accused held that the procedure followed was illegal. When the order of discharge was made against the first accused the case against him was at an end and in so far as payment of compensation to him was concerned the order to show cause should have been made along with the order of discharge. The defect was not curable under sec 537—Suresh v Abdul Jabbar 29 C W N 127 26 Cr L J 449 But where several charges are brought against the same accused and he is at first discharged on one charge and is subsequently acquitted in respect of the other charges it is not illegal to pass an order of compensation at the time of the acquittal in respect of the latter charges. In fact in such a case it is better for the Magistrate to take action under sec 250 not at an intermediate stage of the trial but at the end—Raishankar v Sa anlal 28 Bom L R 89 27 Cr L J 448

Notice to show cause —Under the old law there was a difference of opinion as to whether the Magistrate should issue a formal notice to the complainant to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay compensation. In some cases it was held that since the proviso laid down that before making any direction for payment of compensation the Magistrate shall record and consider any objection which the complainant or informant may urge against the making of the direction it necessarily implied that the Magistrate should give the complainant an opportunity to show cause and raise any objection which he might urge—Q E v Manik Rataolal 725 In re Mahadev 24 Bom L R 805 3 Bom L R 777 1 P L T 558 44 Mad 51 18 C W N 70 9 A L J 170. But it was held in a recent Allahabad case that the proviso only related to objections voluntarily urged that this section was not intended to multiply the proceeding but to be applied in a summary manner and that in a small matter of the kind contemplated by this section it would be an unnecessary and burdensome procedure to issue a formal notice—Emp v Panckam 45 All 474. Under the present amendment the Magistrate must call upon the complainant to show cause if the complainant is present the Magistrate must call upon him directly if he is not present the Magistrate must direct the issue of a summons to show cause.

It is imperative on the Magistrate to give the complainant an opportunity to show cause and he cannot make the order absolute owing to the absence of the complainant—1891 A W N 63 Subans v Mahabir 18 C W N 1277 9 A L J 170. Under the present law if the complainant is absent summons to show cause must be issued to him. If this is not done the order of compensation must be set aside and the Magistrate should be directed to summon the complainant and give him an opportunity of showing cause before passing the order—Halka v Ranjit 24 A L J 170 27 Cr L J 128.

812 Who can be ordered to pay compensation —Public officers are not exempted from the liability to pay compensation for frivolous and vexatious complaints—2 Weir 317. Where a Municipal peon under sanction of the Municipality charged a certain person of an offence which was found to be false the order of the Magistrate directing the peon to pay compensation to the accused was held to be legal—Ratanlal 30.

Where certain persons gave information as witnesses of an offence to a constable and upon the constable's information to the Sub-Ins a case was instituted which was afterwards found to be false, held those persons could not be ordered to pay compensation because they were not the persons upon whose information the accusation was made within the meaning of this section—Wali Mahomed v Crown 13 S L R 166 21 Cr L J 49 This section is a penal one and should be construed strictly There is no authority for introducing into it words which would extend the liability to pay compensation to individuals other than the actual complainant or person who gives the information on which the case is instituted—Ibid This section does not warrant an order to pay compensation against a person who only instigates the giving of false information but who does not himself make the complaint or give the information to the Police Officer—Emp v Summar 12 S L R 76 But see 40 All 79 cited 12 Note 803 ante

Where a process-server of a Civil Court reported to the Court that he was obstructed by the accused in executing a writ of attachment and a report was thereupon made by the Court to a Magistrate and the Magistrate found the case to be false and directed the process-server to pay compensation to the accused it was held that the order of the Magistrate was wrong because the process peon was not a complainant within the meaning of this section It was the Civil Court which actually made the complaint—1 Bom 175 26 All 183 See also 14 Bom L R 1166

Where a written complaint prepared by the Police Officer was sent through a constable to the Magistrate the constable who was merely a bearer of the complaint and acting under the order of his superior officer could not be ordered to pay compensation—21 M L J 844

The word person includes also a juristic person according to sec 3 (59) of the General Clauses Act it includes any company or association or body of individuals whether incorporated or not Therefore a Municipal Committee can be ordered to pay compensation—Municipal Committee v Rattan Chand 24 Cr L J 463 (Lah)

813 To whom compensation can be awarded—Compensation is awardable only to the person who has suffered from the accusation and not to his relatives—1866 P R 89 1866 P R 97 1868 P R 24

The Magistrate is bound to consider the objections raised by the complainant and to record a judgment with reasons A mere statement that the cause shown is not reasonable is insufficient—3 P L T 203

Moreover a Magistrate should in his order awarding compensation state his reasons why he deems the complaint to be vexatious and should also state in his judgment the facts of the case with a criticism of the incidents involved in it—10 C W N 544 When the accused are discharged the recording of the reasons for ordering compensation to be paid is almost a condition precedent to the proper exercise of that power the recording of reasons is in addition to the finding by the Magistrate that the accusation was either frivolous or vexatious The policy of the Legislature in requiring that in such a case reasons should be recorded is obviously to afford an opportunity to an appellate or revising tribunal to consider the sufficiency of the reasons so recorded In the absence of such a recording of reasons there is no proper compliance with the provisions of this section and the order is wrong—Thadiappan v Veeraperumal 21 L W 646 26 Cr L J 1501

The complainant may show cause with reference to the evidence already recorded but he cannot adduce further evidence This section does not require that separate proceedings should be held and fresh evidence taken—1898 A W N 198 But where the Magistrate had discharged the accused in the main case after hearing only some of the witnesses produced by the complainant, the Magistrate before awarding compensation ought to hear the remaining witnesses of the complainant—44 Mad 51, Sya Kyaw v K E 3 Bur L J 26 25 Cr L J 1280 Though compensation can be awarded in exceptional cases before all the evidence for the complainant has been recorded still if there are witnesses present whom the complainant wishes to produce, the Magistrate should examine them before passing his order awarding compensation—Dena Singh v Emp 24 Cr L J 251 (Lah)

815 Amount and nature of compensation —The loss sustained the inconvenience undergone by the accused ought to serve as a guide to the Magistrate in awarding compensation—1881 A W N 167 cannot impose more than Rs 50 (now Rs 100)—1919 P R 15

cannot impose it as a fine otherwise than by way of compensation—2 W P H C R 430

The award of compensation is only by way of amends to the accused and is not a thing which can be credited to Government—1866 P R 102 1869 P R 1 It is not a fine but it is in the nature of damages for malicious prosecution (and cannot be credited to Government) though it is recoverable in a summary way as if it were a fine—26 Mad 127

816 Subsection (2A)—Imprisonment in default of compensation — If the compensation be not paid the Magistrate may send the complainant to jail but before the complainant is thrown into prison the Magistrate is bound to issue a warrant for the levy of the compensation by distress and sale of the moveables of the complainant—3 L B R 32 26 Mad 127 Even if the person pleads that he has no moveables a warrant should still be issued—26 Mad 127

The Magistrate has no power to order that the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of compensation shall take effect after a term of detention in the Civil jail which had been ordered by a Civil Court under the C P Code in another case—Ibid

Under the old law an order for imprisonment could be made only on failure to recover the compensation Such an order could not be made alternatively in the order for payment of compensation—2 Weir 320 Ra tanlal 611 1903 P R 18 18 All 96 19 All 73 21 Cal 979 1896 P R 13 (1916) 2 M W N 159 21 Cr L J 226 (Kag) 18 Cr L J 1014 (Cal) the order for imprisonment could not be made until some attempt was made to recover the amount in the manner provided for recovery of fine—21 Cal 979 22 Cal 586 28 Cal 251 5 C W N 213 18 All 96 19 All 73 18 C W N 702 1 P L T 558 18 Cr L J 1014 (Cal) Under the new subsection (2A) the order for imprisonment in the alternative can now be made in the order awarding compensation

817 Sub section (2c) —This section does not bar civil or criminal proceedings The object of this section is not to punish the complainant but to award by a summary order some compensation to the person against whom a frivolous or vexatious complaint is brought leaving it to him to obtain further redress against the complainant by a regular civil suit or criminal prosecution—30 Cal 123

Proceeding under section 476 —The Joint Committee (1922) observe In more serious cases it is desirable that the Magistrate should proceed under section 476 with a view to the institution of a prosecution

A Magistrate who passes an order of compensation under this section can subsequently make a complaint (under sec 476) to prosecute the complainant for preferring a false charge under sec 211 I P C—21 Mad 237 2 Weir 311 37 Bom 376 15 Bom L R 49 Allabux v Crown 10 S L R 166 Hafiz Khan v Emp 26 Cr L J 527 (Oudh) 15 W R 9 Similarly where the Magistrate makes a complaint for the prosecution of a complainant under sec 211 I P C for bringing a false charge he is not precluded from passing an order under this section directing the complainant to pay compensation to the accused—1907 P W R 30 1901 P R 18 Achar v Pirushah 7 S L R 10 Contra—26 Cal 181 22 Cal 586 But of course it is discretionary with the Magistrate to make a complaint under sec 476 for prosecution of the complainant as well as to proceed under this section and the question whether the discretion has been rightly exercised by the Magistrate depends upon the facts of the particular case If the false charge is of such a nature that a prosecution is necessary on the ground of public policy the Magistrate would exercise his discretion wrongly in awarding compensation instead of making a complaint under section 476 But if the charge is such that no prosecution is necessary then the exercise of his discretion in awarding compensation is proper—27 Mad 59 See also 20 Cr L J 226 (Patna) It should be noted that all these cases are cases relating to sanctioning prosecution (now abolished) under sec 195 but the principle of these cases applies also to the preferring of complaints under sec 476

818 Subsection (3)—Appeal—Under the old law no appeal could lie against an order of compensation passed by a 1st class Magistrate—1 Bom L R 350 7 Bom L R 998 under the present law an appeal is allowed from an order of such Magistrate if the compensation awarded exceeds rupees fifty

Whenever a complainant has been ordered to pay compensation exceeding rupees fifty he has a right of appeal whether the amount is awarded to one accused or is ordered to be distributed among a number of accused persons in sums not exceeding fifty rupees—Augustin v Dunning Demello 49 Bom 440 26 Cr L J 480 26 Bom L R 1243 This clause does not limit the right of appeal to cases where the compensation awarded to each accused exceeds rupees fifty Where the total amount directed to be paid to several accused persons exceeds Rs 50, a right of appeal exists—Assanmal v Dilbar 26 Cr L J 1295 (Sind) A I R 1926 Sind 19 Sumaria v Emp 24 A L J 167 27 Cr L J 146 There is nothing in this section to show that an appeal will lie only where the compensation directed to be paid to each individual accused is more than Rs 50 A complainant who has been ordered to pay compensation exceeding Rs 50 has the right of appeal It is the total amount of compensation directed to be paid by the complainant which must form the basis of the

Notice to accused —Though there is no express provision that notice should go to the accused still it is desirable that the accused should have notice of the appeal in order that he may have an opportunity of supporting the order passed in his favour—29 Mad 187 38 Mad 1091 Ram Chand v Jesa Ram 25 Cr L J 209 (Lah) But absence of notice to the accused will not vitiate the appellate proceedings and will not make the appellate order liable to be set aside—33 Mad 89 41 M L J 172

CHAPTER XXI

OF THE TRIAL OF WARRANT-CASES BY MAGISTRATES

820 Change of procedure —If a warrant case is tried as a summons case the procedure is illegal and the conviction is liable to be set aside—29 Mad 372 If in such trial the accused is acquitted under sec 245 the order of acquittal will at best operate as an order of discharge under sec 53—1886 A W N 260 1888 A W N 96

The fact that a summons instead of a warrant has been issued in a warrant case does not justify the procedure to be as in a summons case—10 W R 31

If a trial is commenced as a warrant case it must be ended as a warrant case and not as a summons case a sudden change of procedure in the midst of a trial is illegal. Therefore where a complaint alleged the commission of certain offences which were triable as warrant cases, and the processes issued to the accused as well as the commencement of the proceeding showed that the accused were being tried for those offences but the Magistrate after taking the evidence of some of the witnesses for the complainant recorded an order that the offences as disclosed were triable as summons cases, and then he proceeded with the trial as in a summons case, without framing a charge, held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was highly illegal and the trial should be set aside—Ganga Saran v. Emp., 19 A L J 6

The question whether a case is triable as a summons case or as a warrant case is to be decided by reference to the complaint and the notices issued to the accused and also to the commencement of the case under certain sections of the Penal Code, and not by reference to the particular sections under which the conviction takes place—19 A L J 6

If two charges arising out of the same facts under the same circumstances are framed, one of a summons case and another of a warrant case, the procedure should be as laid down for a warrant case—11 Cal. 91, 39 Mad 503, 41 Mad 727, 1915 M W N 546

251. The following procedure shall Procedure in warrant- be observed by Magistrates in the trial of cases warrant cases

821. In trying warrant cases, the procedure of this chapter must be strictly followed. The Magistrate cannot follow a procedure which had grown up by usage in the course of years, and which materially differs from that laid down in this chapter, such a procedure is more than an irregularity and is not curable by sec 537—17 Bom L R 490. The Magistrate cannot follow an arbitrary procedure of his own. See 1883 P R 29. A Presidency Magistrate must follow the procedure laid down in this chapter, subject to the special provisions of sec 362 as to the mode of taking down the evidence—Ratanlal 539

252. (1) When the accused appears or is brought before a Magistrate, such Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution:

Provided that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court.

(2) The Magistrate shall ascertain, from the complainant or otherwise, the names of any persons likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution, and shall summon to give evidence before him self such of them as he thinks necessary

Change —The proviso has been newly added by sec 70 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. A similar change has been made in section 244 q v. This amendment follows clause (aa) of section 200.

822 Is brought before the Court —It is immaterial if the accused is brought before the Court by illegal arrest. Where a subject of a Native State committing an offence in British territory fled to his own country and the British Police without the intervention of the State authorities pursued him and arrested him in that State it was held that his illegal arrest would not vitiate his subsequent trial and conviction in British India—1899 P R 6 7 Bur L R 66

Hear the complainant —Hearing a complainant withing the meaning of this section does not involve his examination on oath and a trial of a warrant case is not vitiated merely because it did not begin with an examination of the complainant by the Court—42 M L J 108

823 Taking evidence for the prosecution —As soon as the accused is brought before the Magistrate he has a right to have the evidence against him recorded at as early a period as possible and the fact that there is or may be a great body of evidence forthcoming against him is not a good ground for his detention for an inordinate period—6 Mad 63

It is the duty of the prosecution to bring before the Court all the persons who are alleged or are known to have knowledge of the facts or are likely to give important information—10 Cal 1070 8 Cal 121 14 All 521 15 All 6 14 Cal 245. If such witnesses are not called without sufficient cause being shown the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution—8 Cal 121

The Magistrate is bound to examine every one of the witnesses called by the complainant—4 Mad 329 1908 P W R 3. He cannot say before hand whether the evidence of a certain witness will be material or not—Ratanlal 21. He cannot refuse to examine any witnesses simply because their evidence will be a mere repetition of what has been already given by the other witnesses—3 Cal 389 2 All 447. But if the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless he can discharge the accused without examining all the witnesses (sec 253)—(1911) 1 M W N 149 Ratanlal 201

The witnesses must be examined orally. Where the witnesses common to three cases were first examined in-chief in only one case and their deposition was recorded by a typewriter in triplicate one copy being made part of the record in each case held that the procedure in the other two cases was illegal—Ma. kar Ah v. Emp. 50 Cal 223 (1916)

An accused should be given if he so desires an opportunity to cross examine the prosecution witnesses even though a charge is not framed—8 C W N 838 But the prosecution is not bound to tender the witness for cross-examination the prosecution is not bound to do anything more than make a witness appear in Court so that the accused may call him or not as he likes—14 Cal 245 Moreover the prosecution is not bound to put such of those as he does not examine into the witness box to be cross-examined But he should not refuse to put into the box for cross-examination a truthful witness merely because his evidence may be favourable to the defence—16 All 84

824 Summoning witnesses —The Magistrate has a discretion in summoning witnesses and he is not bound to summon every person named as a witness for the complainant—23 W R 9 The Magistrate can use his discretion in selecting out of the list of witnesses those who seem to be necessary and those who seem to be unnecessary But the power is to be exercised with caution and the Magistrate must see that there be no miscarriage of justice by excluding an important witness—Sitab Singh v. Dalganjan 12 A L J 15 14 Cr L J 682 The duty of seeing that all evidence essential to the prosecution case is before the Court is thrown upon the Magistrate himself See Sub sec (2) So it is not open to a Magistrate to acquit on the ground that the prosecution has failed to produce a necessary witness—Emp v. Maiku Lal 12 O L J 632 2 O W N 584 26 Cr L J 1266

After the witnesses in support of the prosecution are heard it is the duty of the Magistrate to see that the prosecutor is not allowed to set the Court on to a roving inquiry summoning persons in the hope that something might be elicited which may help his case The prosecutor must come with his case fully prepared and there is no section in the Code which authorises him to file a fresh list of prosecution witnesses—12 A L J 15

Where witnesses do not obey the summons the prosecution has a right to call upon the Court to compel their attendance—6 C W N 548

It is not proper for the Magistrate to issue a warrant in the first instance it is only when the summons is disobeyed that serious measures may be taken—1907 P W R 22

Process fee —There is nothing in this Code which enables a Magistrate to demand from even the complainant the expenses to be incurred by his witnesses though such a power is conferred by sec 244 (3) in a case—8 N L R 65 The dismissal of a complaint in a warrant case for non payment of process fee is illegal—2 Weir 323

Inspection of documents —The accused is entitled to inspect all the documents produced by the complainant as evidence against the accused and filed as exhibits, and not merely to get certified copies thereof—1 Bom L R 433 But so long as the documents are not filed but merely in the possession of the prosecution the accused has no right to call for their production or to inspect the same, until after a charge has been framed—8 S L R 267 (cited under sec 257)

253 (1) If upon taking all the evidence referred to in Section 252, and making such examination (if any) Discharge of accused of the accused as the Magistrate thinks necessary, he finds that no case against the accused has been made out which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction, the Magistrate shall discharge him

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prevent a Magistrate from discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case, if for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless

825 Procedure —The procedure prescribed by these sections should be strictly followed The Magistrate should first take the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses (sec 252) and if necessary examine the accused (sec 253) and then apply the law to the criminal acts to find whether there is prima facie evidence then frame charges (sec 254) and call upon the accused to plead thereto (sec 255) and enter upon his defence (sec 256)—9 W R 15 If the Magistrate after examining the prosecution witnesses (sec 252) examined the accused and the witnesses for the defence (sec 256) without having drawn up a charge and then discharged the accused under sec 253 the procedure was contrary to law and the accused should be treated as acquitted under sec 258—1883 P R 29 In Orilal v Kalu 18 Cr L J 1006 (Burma) however where the Magistrate followed the same procedure as in the Punjab case it was held that although the procedure adopted was highly irregular and unwarranted still as the procedure was in substance that laid down in this chapter the omission to frame a charge and record a plea would not invalidate the order of discharge and that sec 535 (1) would cure the irregularity

Taking all the evidence etc —A Magistrate is not competent to discharge an accused person until the evidence of all the witnesses named for the prosecution has been taken—4 Mad 329, 2 C L R 389 22 W R 25, 20 W R 67 Ratanlal 21, 1908 P W R 3 Although he has a discretion to summon or not every person named as a witness by the complainant—23 W R 9 still he is not justified in discharging an accused person without examining all the witnesses who are present in Court—11 C W N 199. If, however, upon examination of some of the witnesses the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless, he can discharge the accused under subsection (2) without examining the other witnesses—La anna Chinna v Suresetti, 9 M L T 302

Where a case was transferred from a Bench of Magistrates, who had already recorded some evidence, to a Deputy Magistrate the latter is bound to examine the evidence already recorded and cannot discharge the accused without considering the evidence—38 Cal 828

826 Discharge—An order of discharge under this section does not amount to an acquittal and the Sessions Judge can under section 437 (now 436) have the accused put upon his trial in spite of the discharge—5 W R 58 4 N W P H C R 23 See sec 436

Orders which amount to discharge—Where a warrant case which can not be compounded, is compounded and the case dismissed such dismissal amounts only to a discharge—1 Bom 64 Ratanlal 391 When after the issue of process the Magistrate does not think it proper to proceed any further, the termination of the proceedings amounts to an order of discharge—4 C W N 24. Where no charge was drawn up and the accused was not called upon to plead or enter on his defence the release of the accused did not amount to an acquittal but to a discharge under this section—4 B L R App 1

Order of discharge when improper—A Magistrate ought not to discharge the accused merely because he was illegally arrested e g where the Police arrested him without warrant in a non cognizable case—Ratanlal 73 So also, a Magistrate ought not to discharge a person merely because he has no jurisdiction to try the case in such a case he ought to proceed under section 346—2 Weir 323

Before the amendment of 1923 a Magistrate could not discharge or acquit the accused upon withdrawal of complaint in a noncompoundable case Such a procedure was allowed in summons cases and not in warrant cases The Magistrate had to proceed with the inquiry in spite of the withdrawal of complaint—13 Bom 600 37 Bom 369 Similarly, a Magistrate could not dismiss the complaint under this section if the complainant was absent and the offence was a non compoundable one Such a dismissal amounted to an application to a warrant case of the procedure of a summons case—10 Cal 67, 4 C W N 26 Alexander v Connors, 20 C W N 698, Ratanlal 524 1 C W N 57 But now see sec 259 under heading "Scope of Section"

An order of discharge can be made when, according to the words

this section no case has been made out which if un rebutted would warrant the conviction of the accused but when there is a body of evidence which if believed would justify a conviction it is better to draw up a charge and dispose of the case finally than to discharge the accused—1909 P W R 18

An order of discharge cannot be made after a charge has been framed such an order is erroneous and would amount to an acquittal under section 258—1903 P R 14

827 Fresh proceedings —The dismissal of a complaint or the discharge of an accused person does not bar a fresh complaint being entertained or a fresh inquiry held into the case against the accused (and it is not necessary that the previous order of discharge must be set aside before fresh proceedings can be taken)—Ratanlal 350 28 Cal 211 31 Mad 543 15 Cal 608 (F B)

This power of revival of proceedings is vested in all Magistrates including the Magistrate who discharged the accused But Magistrates are bound to exercise due discretion to take that discharge into account and to avoid any such oppressive proceedings as may either expose them to punishment under section 219 or 220 I P C or to a civil action on the part of the accused—Ratanlal 350 No rehearing should be made of a case which has been disposed of by an order of discharge by a Magistrate of co ordinate jurisdiction except where there has been a manifest error or miscarriage of justice—29 Mad 126 An order of discharge passed under this section cannot be set aside and prosecution started afresh unless there are new materials before the Magistrate which were not before him formerly and unless upon those materials there is a probability of the conviction of the accused persons—23 Cr L J 236 (Pat)

If an order of discharge is passed by a Presidency Magistrate the High Court can interfere under sec 439 of this Code (and not merely under sec 15 of the Charter Act) and direct a further inquiry—Malik Protap v Khan Mahomed 36 Cal 994 See this case and other cases cited in Note 682 under sec 203

Power of District Magistrate —Where an accused person has been discharged under this section the District Magistrate can himself hold a further inquiry or can direct such inquiry to be held by a Subordinate Magistrate (sec 436)—18 Cr L J 706 (All) 9 All 52 14 Mad 334 32 Mad 220 20 W R 46 20 W R 47

828 Sub section (2) —When a Magistrate is reasonably convinced on what has been already deposed that a criminal charge cannot be sustained he is relieved from the necessity of going on with the trial and can discharge the accused—Ratanlal 201 9 M L T 302 The Magistrate can discharge the accused even before the date fixed for hearing if upon the materials then before him he is satisfied that the offence could not have been committed—Hatton v Metcalfe 25 Cr L J 696 (Pat) The Magistrate can discharge but not acquit the accused—6 W R 13

If the evidence recorded does not raise any presumption that the accused has committed any offence but merely leads to a doubt the proper course would be to discharge the accused and not to proceed to frame a charge—1906 P R ~

Recording reasons —The Legislature does not render the writing of reasons necessary when the Magistrate discharges the accused person after he has heard all the evidence for the prosecution It is only when he discharges under sub-section (2) without hearing all the evidence that he is bound to record reasons But even in the former case the Magistrate should record his reasons having regard to the fact that the order is not final—9 Bom L R 250

254 If when such evidence and examination have been taken and made or at any previous stage of the case the Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under this Chapter which such Magistrate is competent to try and which in his opinion could be adequately punished by him he shall frame in writing a charge against the accused

Charge to be framed when offence appears proved

Evidence and examination —It is not necessary for a Magistrate to examine more witnesses than are sufficient to convince him of the truth of the charge and with that view he can put questions to the accused The answers given to such questions will have a great effect upon the question as to the witnesses to be examined for the prosecution And if on questions put to the accused answers which leave no doubt as to the commission of the offence are elicited the Magistrate may frame a charge and call upon the accused to plead—3 M H C R App 2

829 Charge when to be framed —It is not necessary that the Magistrate should wait till the whole of the evidence for the prosecution has been taken Cf the words or at any previous stage the moment the stage is reached when there is ground for presuming that the accused person has committed an offence the examination of the accused should be taken up and the charge sheet drawn up and the remaining witnesses for the prosecution should be examined—8 A L J 707 Under the Code of 1882 the Magistrate could not frame a charge till the evidence for the prosecution was completed The words or at any previous stage of the case did not exist in that Code

Charge to be framed when offence appears proved —It is only when the prosecution has proved all the facts necessary to constitute the offence charged against the accused that a charge should be framed. If the evidence recorded does not lead to any presumption that the accused has committed any offence but merely raises a doubt the Magistrate should give the accused the benefit of the doubt and discharge him under sec 53 and should not proceed to frame a charge—1906 P R 2

If other offence is proved —If on the evidence a Magistrate finds that an offence different from the one expressly charged against the accused has been committed he has power to frame a charge with regard to the other offence—5 B H C R 100 and need not dismiss the complaint with leave to the prosecution to institute a fresh and more comprehensive complaint—8 W R 82 Thus where a charge of defamation had been framed against the accused and the complainant in her deposition further charged him with using criminal force and thereupon the Magistrate tried him for both the offences acquitted him of the former offence and convicted him of using criminal force it was held that the procedure was legal—3 Bom L R 675 If when a case is being tried as a warrant case and a charge is drawn up thereof it is intended to proceed against the accused for an offence triable only as a summons case that offence should form part of the charge—29 Cal 481

Which such Magistrate is competent to try and adequately punish —Sec 254 is very restrictive for it provides that the Magistrate shall try an accused person only for an offence which in his opinion can be adequately punished by him. A Magistrate has to exercise his discretion in the matter of every complaint that is brought before him—16 Bom 580 A Magistrate ought not to frame a charge under this section if he is of opinion that he cannot adequately punish the offence—Ratanlal 499 1905 U B R 33 If the Magistrate is of opinion that he cannot adequately punish the accused he can commit the case to the Sessions although the case may be exclusively triable by a Magistrate—Q E v Kayemulla 24 Cal 429 A commitment is bad in law unless the Magistrate is of opinion that the sentence which he can impose will not be adequate to meet the ends of justice—K E v Jagmohan 6 A L J 989 Q E v Keyamulla 24 Cal 429 Emp v Bindeshri 41 All 454 See note 695 under sec 207

Where it was within the competence of the Magistrate to pass an adequate sentence in the case but the Magistrate committed the case to the sessions on the ground that as he was a witness in the identification proceedings in the case he was disqualified from trying it (sec 556) held that the course adopted by the Magistrate was improper he should have moved the District Magistrate to transfer the case to some other Magistrate—Emp v Ram Jatan 21 A L J 420 25 Cr L J 665 A I R 1924 All 185

830 Charge —Contents —A charge under this section should allege all that is necessary to constitute the offence charged and all that is requisite in order that the accused may have notice of the matter with which he is to be charged. It should not allege positively anything of which the allegation in a positive form is not justified by the materials before the Court—1889 P R 26

Effect of framing charge —Proceedings before a Magistrate in a warrant case under this chapter are only an inquiry until a charge is framed and on a charge being framed become a trial—38 Mad 585

When a Magistrate frames a charge under this section he indicates thereby that a prima facie case exists against the accused and he cannot acquit the accused or dismiss the case without hearing the prosecution and the defence evidence. He is bound to proceed with the case—7 C W N 521

But the mere fact that a charge has been framed against the accused does not justify the view that the Magistrate is bound to convict the accused. If after carefully considering all the evidence adduced in the case he comes to the conclusion that the guilt of the accused has not been satisfactorily established he is bound to acquit him under sec. 258 although he may have framed a charge against him in the first instance—Danodhar v. Jujharsingh 26 Cr L J 1348 (Ag)

Omission to frame charge —It is imperative on the Magistrate to frame a charge and an omission to do so vitiates the trial—Id. Rafique v. A. E. 43 C L J 100. The Allahabad High Court holds that an omission to frame a charge according to this section would not invalidate an order of acquittal nor would render the acquittal equivalent to a discharge—3 All 129

255 (1) The charge shall then be read and explained to the accused, and he shall be asked whether he is guilty or has any defence to make

(2) If the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate shall record the plea, and may in his discretion convict him thereon

831 Explained —The charge must be read out and explained to the accused and the record must show that the Magistrate has done so. Where all that is found on the record is only a narrative by the Judge of what occurred and of the statements made by the prisoner it cannot be inferred from the record that the charge has been explained to the accused as required by this section—7 Cal 96. The charge should be so explained to the accused that the Magistrate is sure that the accused has understood the nature of it thoroughly and it is then that his plea should be received—5 Cal 826. If there are any aggravating circumstances of the offence, those circumstances should be set forth in the charge so that the accused person may know what it is to which he pleads guilty and the full effect of such plea, or in case he pleads not guilty, he may know what material facts he is called upon to rebut—Ratanlal 55

Where the charge was not explained to the accused, the High Court set aside the conviction and ordered a new trial—9 Mad 61

832 Plea —An admission which does not admit all the elements of a charge is not a plea of guilty to a charge. Therefore, where, on a charge of murder, the prisoner pleaded that he struck his wife with a dao but he did not intend to kill her it was held that the acknowledgment could not be treated as a plea of guilty, since the intention to murder was denied—25 W R 23

When an accused person does not formally plead guilty, the fact that he throws himself at the mercy of the Court should not prejudice him—12 C W N 140
